The Treatment Is to Accomplish What Science Has Been Struggling to Attain for Centuries.

The intense interest that has been manifested throughout the country by the wonderful cures that are being accomplished daily by epilepticide still continues. It is really surprising the vast number of people who have already been cured of fits and nervousness. In order that everybody may have a chance to test the medicine, large trial bottles, valuable literature, History of Epilepsy and testimonials, will be sent by mail absolutely free to all who write to the Dr. May Laboratory, 548 Pearl Street, New York City.

NAVY'S WIRELESS SCHOOL

GOVERNMENT TO MAKE MOST EXTENSIVE USE OF WIRELESS OF ALL NATIONS

BOYS TRANSMITTING MESSAGES

GETTING THE "CQD" DANGER SIGNAL

What was considered the dream of a visionary inventor a few years ago—wireless telegraphy—is now an accepted fact, and the most skeptical admit its practical use when the war and navy departments assign officers to develop the new invention and begin to drill recruits as operators, says Lillian E. Zeh, in an article in The Christian Herald.

Our government has decided to make the most extensive use of wireless of all the nations of the world, and the navy department has just asked bids for the erection of a high-powered station in Washington. This will keep the navy officers in touch with ships 3,000 miles out at sea, both night and day. The recent triumph of wireless in summoning quick aid to the Republic, thus saving thousands of lives, has forcibly demonstrated the great value of this method of communication. The practical training of young sailor electricians for this new and important branch of the service has been progressing rapidly since the day Marconi startled the world by sending his message across both sea and land without the aid of pole and wire.

The wireless school is quartered in the second story of the Bureau of Equipment building in the Brooklyn navy yard, and the students live on board the receiving ship Hancock. Lieutenant Commander Williams, U. S. N., is executive officer of the electrical and wireless school, and Chief Electrician Rice is the principal instructor. The class now being drilled in this new branch of naval work have come up from the electrical class located below, where for three months they have been put through a course of study on electricity in general. The general course is especially applicable to ship and station requirements, where they are destined to be sent for future duty. Actual work is given in the handling of electrical machinery, dynamos, and the manipulating of the electrical switchboard, which regulates the interior communication of a modern battleship. After 12 weeks of preliminary work in the lower school, they receive their final training by going through a month's practical instruction in the wireless class. After completing four months of thorough and systematic instruction, having obtained in this interval a fair knowledge of adjusting and manipulating the apparatus, they are prepared to graduate. An interesting and picturesque sight is afforded by a peep into this novel wireless schoolroom. Passing down the long corridor of the equipment building, and entering the spacious classroom, the visitor is plunged into a veritable beehive; all is bustle and sound. Seated around long tables are some one hundred bright-appearing young sailors, each deeply absorbed in mastering the wireless apparatus. For a limited time, a squad is drilled daily at the sending key; the remainder, at tables with pen and paper, are engaged in receiving and translating the sound messages sent from the transmitting room. The wireless navy code alphabet is made up of a series of dots and dashes of relative length. These are indicated by buzzes received in the ear 'phone, which must be accurately learned by the beginner. They are also printed by the automatic Morse recorder on a tape line. Receiving by ear is, however, the most speedy, and the method generally employed in active service by operators in ships and shore stations. On weekly examination days, the instructor tests the ability of each individual of the class Ten to 12 words per minute is the average sending capacity. Experienced operators, under favorable circumstances, send from 12 to 15 words, and receive as many as 30.

Chief Electrician Rico imparts the benefit of his expert experience in the taking apart and putting together of all the main electrical instruments. This is the most vital part of the training of wireless operators. Most of them are destined to be sent to remote localities, where they must depend entirely upon their own technical skill to repair any break in their apparatus. A novel sight is a section of the class, high aloft on one of the fighting masts of one of the battleships now at the navy yard, examining the method of arranging the aerial wires.

During the 30-day term, with daily practice of six hours and thorough scientific and systematic drilling, the wireless aspirants have been so perfected in the art that they are competent to enter any ship or shore station of the navy. They are able to flash a message from 100 to 1,000 miles' distance, and to receive and translate the most complicated communication.

In order to get a fine body of operators, the government offers liberal pay inducements, including rations, far in excess of the remuneration given to ordinary seamen. The latter receive only $20 per month; while the young man who enlists and passes the preliminary examination in electricity, is rated as third-class electrician, at $30 per month. Advancement is certain, if accompanied by conscientious and ambitious labor, up to second-class, bringing $40, and thence to first-class, at $50 per month. The highest rating of chief electrician amounts to $75. The efficiency of the government wireless telegraph is strikingly illustrated by the fact that a message was received recently at the Point Loma station, in California, from the flagship Connecticut, 2,900 miles away, en route to New Zealand.

Point of Law.

In a small southern town two roustabouts got into an argument about the ownership of an opossum. During the disturbance Sam assaulted Remus with a paving stone and in due time was brought before the bar of justice. Sam, in the meantime, had engaged the services of a rising young lawyer.

"We have heard the evidence," said the young attorney at the trial, "and I think, according to Blackstone, my client is innocent."

It was then that Remus arose and rubbed his bandaged head dolefully.

"He may be innocent, sah, accordin' to Blackstone," he said, seriously, "but according to dat cobblestone he am guilty."

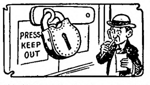
And the judge thought the same and Sam was convicted.

Lucky Coins.

Recently there was sold by auction in London the great collection of Greek coins made by Mr. F. S. Benson of Brooklyn, during the past 15 years. Some of the coins sold for marvelous prices. The record price of £640 was paid for a tetrarachma of Katana, which had been purchased by Mr. Benson in 1903 for £130. A tetradrachma of Amphipolis, which realized £339, had cost its late owner £115, and at the Bunbury sale it was sold for only £55. A Terina stater, which had been purchased for £40 at the Evans sale, realized £280.

NEWS FROM the CAPITAL

No Press Agent Now at the White House



WASHINGTON.—In the giving out of the news at the White House perhaps the most striking departure from the Roosevelt methods has been shown since March 4.

The day of the "fair-haired boy," as the Roosevelt newspaper favorites were locally (and perhaps enviously) known, has passed. There are no press agents of the administration, or if there are they do not appear as such at the White House.

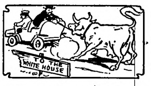
Mr. Taft had not been president very long before he announced that he would cease seeing newspaper representatives with the same freedom they had been accustomed to at the White House. The first version of this was that when he had anything to communicate to the newspapers he would send for representatives and talk to them, but that at other times he did not care to see them.

Either this was not his position or he soon modified it. Now the practice is to see newspaper representatives by appointment, and when the interview is sought the president requires that the subject of it shall be stated. This gives him an opportunity to decline to take up subjects he is not ready or willing to discuss. In application, however, there is a good deal of latitude. After the subject mentioned is disposed of the president talks about various matters brought up by himself or his visitor.

President Taft has an intimate personal acquaintance with nearly all the newspaper correspondents in Washington. He calls them by their first names and by nicknames. He knows their families and friends. With those in whose discretion he has confidence he chats in the same jolly, frank way as of old—with this difference: the visitor is made to feel that he must not take professional liberties. Mr. Taft does not want himself or the White House written up as a show. On account of his personal intimacy with the newspaper men he did not adhere to his original plan of confining them to very formal interviews, but this concession does not mean "making copy" out of casual conversation.

There is no more running to him to verify reports, to learn who is to be appointed to office, to get stories about senators, to get advance statements prior to official action.

Gen. Corbin Buys Cow for Mrs. Taft



SINCE Mrs. Taft became the owner of a Jersey cow she has been re receiving hundreds of letters. Meanwhile "Bossy" is giving a generous quantity of rich milk, wholly unconscious of what a stir she has created.

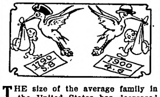
Many of Mrs. Taft's correspondents are housewives who offer her various suggestions as to butter-making, how to produce the most palatable cottage cheese, etc.

The story of the purchase and delivery of Mrs. Taft's cow never has been told correctly. Maj. Gen. Henry C. Corbin, who was a farmer in his younger days, was commissioned to get a cow. He made a selection and early one morning he and Mrs. Corbin, who are among the elite of Chevy Chase, Washington's fashionable suburb, embarked in an automobile and led "Bossy" into the city and up to the back fence of the White House. There they sent in a policeman for President and Mrs. Taft, who came out and opened the gate in regular country fashion.

Then arose a problem as to what to do with the cow. When the quartet arrived at the White House stable with the cow they found it crowded so full of automobiles that no place was left for "Bossy." Finally, by shifting around, stable room was found.

"Bossy's" surroundings were a little strange to her at first, but she has become used to the policeman and automobiles and is giving first-rate satisfaction.

Size of Families Is on the Decrease



THE size of the average family in the United States has decreased from 5.8 persons in 1790, the date of the first census, to 4.6 in the same area in 1900, according to a volume being prepared by the census bureau at Washington.

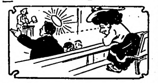
Of especial interest from a sociological point are statistics of family life. In 1790 families composed of no more than three persons represented only one-fourth of the entire number of families, while in 1900 families of similar size made up nearly 40 per cent. of all families. Families composed of six or more persons represented in 1790 more than one-half, but in 1900 scarcely more than one-fourth of the families enumerated.

The number of children under 16 years of age to each white family was 2.8 in 1790, as compared with 1.5 in 1900. The ratio in 1790, of two children under 16 years of age to each white female 16 years of age and over, declined to one in 1900.

Of 3,171,000 white persons enumerated in 1790, approximately 2,000,000 survived 30 years later, 11,500 in 1880, while in 1900 there were 23 persons who reported their ages as 110 years and over, so that at the census of 1900 it is possible that there were still living persons enumerated in the first census, taken 110 years before.

In 1790 the Smiths led all the rest, there being 33,345 of that family. Other families followed in the sequence given: Brown, Davis, Jones, Johnson, Clark, Williams, Miller and Wilson. These nine names represented about four per cent. of the total white population of 1790.

Mrs. Champ Clark Aid to Her Husband



ONE of the most frequent visitors to the members' gallery of the house of representatives in Washington since the convening of the extraordinary session of congress is Mrs. Champ Clark, wife of the minority leader, on whom the eyes of the country are turned during this his first experience as chief of his party in the house.

It is true the leadership was turned over by John Sharp Williams during the second half of the last session, but the former leader kept a close surveillance over his successor. Now Mr. Clark is responsible for himself and his management of Democratic affairs on the floor of the house is a matter of deep concern to his wife, who, like most congressmen's wives, takes the greatest interest in the work of her husband.

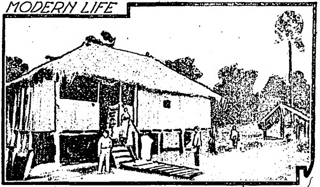
Mrs. Clark, before her marriage, was Miss Genevieve Bennett. She is essentially domestic in her tastes and is decidedly intellectual. She is conversant with the great questions of the day, and has devoted herself to the seconding of her husband's public career, and to her children, of whom she has two living, Bennett and Genevieve.

It has been said of John Sharp Williams, former leader of the minority, that he had attended more colleges than any other man in congress, but people who know of Mr. Clark's career from boyhood say that he holds the real record.

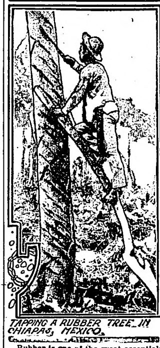
Mrs. Clark is one of the charter members of the Congressional club and is prominently identified with the management of the organization. She is a delightful hostess and is affectionately regarded by the new arrivals in congressional circles, who look to her for guidance in "official social" matters.

The ORIGIN of RUBBER

ONE OF THE GREAT ESSENTIALS OF MODERN LIFE



RUBBER GATHERER'S HOME ON THE UPPER AMAZON RIVER



TAPPING A RUBBER TREE IN CHIAPAS, MEXICO.

Rubber is one of the great essentials of modern industrial life. With iron or steel, with copper, and with glass it may be compared in the diversity of its use; it has the advantage over these, and may be compared in this latter respect to corn, wheat, and the necessary foods, in that it is capable of eternal reproduction if mankind will but apply to its cultivation his experience and scientific knowledge.

There is scarcely a device of daily commerce into which rubber does not enter as a necessity, and yet in the annual statistical publication of the department of commerce and labor—Commerce and Navigation of the United States—the student will look in vain for the word "rubber," and not until he examines the word or the phrase "Indiarubber," "India rubber," or "India-rubber" will he be able to see how vast and important is the subject before him. This conservatism—if the term may be here applied—is traceable throughout all the literature of all the libraries of the English-speaking world. The aboriginal native word describing the substance first discovered by the early Europeans was cahuchu, probably pronounced but surely corrupted into caoutchouc. This latter word has spread into the languages of Europe. In French it is the same word; in German the only modification is to substitute a k for the c, and in Russian nearly the same change takes place. To be sure the Spanish uses frequently the word goma, equivalent to our gum, and this is made more specific by adding the adjective elastica, and the Portuguese has the word borracha, but caucho is commercially well understood, as might be supposed from the first association with the source of supply. Rubber, or india rubber, however, is undoubtedly the term which will continue to be employed in English to distinguish this indispensable product of the tropics.

Caoutchouc directly explains the descent of the gum and its adoption into arts, but india rubber embraces not only this history but conceals one of the romances of the industries. Travelers—and it is said Columbus himself was one of them—noticed that the Indian inhabitants of America, thought then to be an unkonwn portion of the Indies, played ball with a curious substance grown in the primitive forests and prepared according to native ways. This substance was also made into shoes; it formed a protective coating for garments, and from it were made bottles which could be squeezed together so as to eject the liquid contents. This substance was called caucho in some parts of America, and the gatherers were caucheros; in other parts the gatherers were called because of the shape of the bottles and the uses to which the Portuguese saw them put, seringaixas, syringe-men. From this origin the india prefix of the word is derived. At first the gum, goma elastica, according to the Spanish, was merely a curiosity; it was imported into Europe and studied chemically with great interest; it was made into tubes and put to practical use in the laboratory. But in 1770 the English chemist Priestley recommended the use of the gum for effacing the marks of the lead pencil. It rubbed out these marks and was, therefore, a rubber. It became more widely known as experiment showed its value, and in 1823 Macintosh discovered the method of waterproofing garments, and added another word to the vocabulary. From this date india rubber was more and more an article of commerce; it served many purposes, but it also balked the inventors in many directions in which they had hoped it might be applied. Experiments were constantly being made; even the incorporation of sulphur had been tried, but it was not until 1839 that Nelson Goodyear, in the United States, hit upon a practical method of combining rubber with sulphur so as to retain all its good, unique properties, while losing those that had made it hitherto unsuitable. This process was called vulcanization.

Rubber—india rubber—is a definite chemical combination of carbon and hydrogen, expressed by the (proportionate) formula C_5H_8, or $C_{10}H_{16}$. It is a whitish solid, opaque, scarcely reacted upon by the ordinary solvents but forming fluid or gelatinous masses with the ethers and the coal-tar oils. All this refers, of course, to the chemically pure rubber. It will also melt and burn. Physically, rubber will stretch, and when tension is released its mass returns to the original position and form. Unfortunately, however, rubber in the pure state has three awkward qualities: It loses this distensibility at certain degrees of heat and cold, it softens under heat, and has a great tendency to stick to itself or to other masses of rubber with which it is brought in contact. Now, these three qualities of rubber as refined after entering the market from the tropical forests are overcome when it is mixed with sulphur—that is, vulcanized. It can then be molded into various shapes and still remain distensible. The degrees of temperature between which it retains these good qualities are very much wider apart, so that climatic changes are less felt by the manufactured product, and consequently rubber articles of an infinitely more varied type can be turned out from the factories. Vulcanized rubber is therefore the substance really implied ordinarily by the word alone.

Plants Grow in Darkness.

While many plants close their petals or fold their leaves as darkness approaches, the testimony of most scientists is to the effect that none cease to grow. A series of experiments was recently made in the east with quick-growing plants, such as asparagus, lettuce, radishes and the like, with a view of ascertaining whether the growth continues at night with as great rapidity as during the day. The result determined that, while the growth is continual with most plants, it is by no means so rapid during the dark hours as during the light. There are, however, many exceptions to this, not a few plants being nocturnal and growing more and faster during the night than in the daytime. These, however, are usually tropical, and their habitat is commonly in dense forests, where even during the daytime no great amount of light is able to penetrate.

Wants Large Sum for Navy.

Alfred Picard, named French minister of marine, in succession to M. Thomson, last year, for the purpose of reorganizing and carrying out reforms in the French navy, has presented to the cabinet an extensive plan of development which, not counting new ships, involves an expenditure of $45,000,000.

Citizen and Christian.

A professing Christian and a good citizen live side by side in a certain suburb and are good friends, says the Home Herald. The one has been praying for the conversion of the other for years and grieving greatly that the Lord should see fit to deny his request. And the good citizen has traveled on, unconcerned by the efforts which are being put forth in his behalf, but his front walk is shoveled in winter, while the other man's is not. It is just a bit of carelessness on the part of the church member, but, if he only knew it, his carelessness puts a barrier up before the answer to his prayers. His religion would make a stronger appeal to the unchurched man if his back yard testified to it as loudly as his Sunday coat. He might very well talk a little less about his faith himself and see to it that the stones of his sidewalk should rise in their cleanness and proclaim it to the passers-by. If Palestine had been a country of snows and ice, the Bible would have had something to say about the carelessness which allows a brother to slip, as well as the negligence that permits him to stumble.

The Servian people should either exert some free choice in the selection of a dynasty, or else have a ruling family chosen for them. Nothing can be expected in the way of a prince fit to rule from either of the rival houses of Karageorgevitch and Obrenovitch. The present heir to the throne, Prince George, would seem to be little better than a maniac of caprice and self will, with tendencies running to violence and homicide—a fit plant from that hothouse of revolutionary intrigue and murderous plot, the royal palace at Belgrade. The Servians have shown some restiveness under the prospect of being ruled by this madcap, who is reported to have surrendered his rights to the throne when charged with the brutal murder of one of his house servants. Whether the surrender will amount to anything remains to be seen; but the peace of southeastern Europe is so largely bound up with the quality of Servia's rulership that another palace revolution resulting in a sane dynasty without the taint of murder in its blood might inaugurate a better era for this striving little nation of two and a half millions.

There is a report that the American woman is going to take up the new tariff, as its effect on furs, feathers and furbelows has suddenly taken it out of the grade of abstract subjects and put it in the class of an intimate subject demanding personal attention. And the "shopping women" are factors to be reckoned with, even if they know little of politics and care less. They know when something interferes with the elasticity of their pin money, and their feminine instinct does the rest. So there is evidently trouble brewing for the tariff legislators, for as trouble makers women have been a success from the start.

An applicant for naturalization papers in a Brooklyn court was questioned by the judge with a view to ascertaining his knowledge of American institutions. The court did not go very far. The last inquiry was as to whether the applicant understood the trolley car transfer system in the borough, and upon an affirmative answer being given the judge said: "I guess you will do for a citizen." But how about a great many citizens, native and naturalized, who do not comprehend this and other complicated and mystifying arrangements? Is such failure to be regarded as cause for disfranchisement?

Score another triumph for wireless telegraphy. Rear Admiral Seaton Schroeder, commander of the Atlantic fleet of our navy, has just been informed by wireless message from Newport, the home of his daughter, wife of Surgeon Johnson at the naval training station, that he is grandfather of a fine little girl. More and more is wireless proving itself adaptable to all requirements, public and domestic.

A Denver man has invented a phonographic safe lock that must be talked open. The word which locks the safe is recorded, and the one who uttered it must repeat the performance or the mechanism will not budge. This lock might be too secure; for in the event of accident to the voice for which the safe lock will move there would be costly work for the locksmith.

Pony meat as a supply for polar exploration has the advantage of going there on the hoof, earning its board by hauling while there and then coming pack as the digested product. Which seems rather ungrateful to the faithful equine; but perhaps that quality does not flourish with the thermometer at 72 minus.

Gewgaws are not to be worn on men's clothings this year, says a fashion note. The men will have to do without sausage curls, too.

MURDER ARMENIANS

SLAYING OF TWO MOSLEMS AVENGED BY 6,000 ENRAGED TURKS.

AMERICANS ARE IN DANGER

Massacre Occurs at Mersina Where the Christians Have Missions—Mutinous Marines Lynch Vice-Admiral in Constantinople.

Constantinople.—Reports from Mersina, a seaport of Asia Minor on the Mediterranean, Thursday, told of a massacre of Armenians by Turks, in which it is feared many were killed.

Enraged at the murder of two Moslems by an Armenian and the fact that the assassin was not apprehended, the Mohammedan population of Mersina, which counts a total of 10,000 inhabitants, took the law into its own hands and attacked the Armenian quarters.

The Christian communities of Mersina are appealing to the consuls here for help.

Two American missions are represented at Mersina.

The trouble at Mersina is in no way connected with the political upheaval at Constantinople of the last two days. It involves a recrudescence of the Armenian question, which is religious and racial, and has nothing to do with the internal policies of Turkey.

Mersina is 36 miles by rail southeast of the city of Adana. It counts 6,000 Mohammedans and some 3,500 Christians. It has a station of the synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church in North America and an outstation of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. The record of 1907 shows that Rev. C. A. Dodds, Rev. R. J. Dodds and Miss Evadna M. Sterrett were stationed at Mersina.

The third day of the revolutionary movement in this city was marked by some disorders, the most serious of which was a demonstration by marines, who objected to the new minister of marine, Vice-Admiral Adjlemin Pasha. The marines gathered in force Thursday and seized and conveyed to the palace Arif Bey, commander of the battleship Assar-i-Tewfik, a member of the Committee on Union and Progress, who ordered the guns of his ship trained on the Yildiz Kiosk when the rising was at its height, with the intention of supporting the committee.

Arrived at the Yildiz Kiosk the men lynched Arif Bey, notwithstanding the efforts of the palace guard to save him. Although public confidence is by no means restored by the formation of the new cabinet, an excellent impression has been produced by the appointment of Nazim Pasha as commander of the First Army corps, and this has been strengthened by the nomination of Memduh Pasha, another able Adrianople officer, to command the First division at Constantinople. Edhem Pasha, the new minister of war, and Nazim Pasha made the round of the barracks in the city and exhorted the soldiers to obey their officers. They were well received and cheered.

Constantinople. — Information received here Friday from Adana, in Asiatic Turkey, declares that two American missionaries have been killed in the anti-Armenian outbreak at that place.

Ambassador Leishman instructed the American vice-consul at Mersina, John Debbas, to proceed immediately for Adana and report on the situation.

TWO BLOWN TO ATOMS.

Explosion of a Nitroglycerin Factory at Gordon, Ill., Is Felt Twenty-Five Miles Away.

Sullivan, Ind.—With a detonation which was heard for 25 miles, the shock of which was felt in an area of 50 miles, the nitroglycerin factory at Gordon, Ill., across the Wabash river from this place, was destroyed by a terrific explosion late Thursday afternoon.

Charles Dewels and Moses Lantz were blown to atoms. Owing to the fact that Gordon has no long distance telephone communication and that its connection with the farm lines was destroyed by the explosion, the first rumors of the loss of life were exaggerated, one report putting the number of killed at 30. The fact, however, is that only two men were allowed to work in the factory at one time.

Old Battleship Made Over.

New York. — After being out of commission for more than two years, the old battleship Massachusetts sailed out of the Brooklyn navy yard Thursday with a full complement of officers and men. The vessel was built by the Cramps in 1893 and has been largely made over so that she is almost as good as the battleships of much later types.

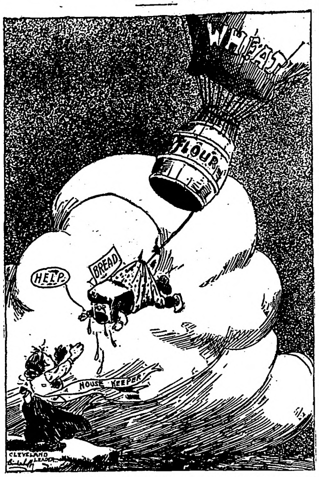
Church War Reaches Court.

Nashville, Tenn.—The federal courts have again been called upon to say who is entitled to possession, the use and the enjoyment of property claimed respectively by Cumberland Presbyterians and Presbyterians of the U. S. A., who went into the latter church from the Cumberland.

Milling Company Bankrupt.

Chillicothe, O.—An involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed by the Marfield Milling Company of this city Friday.

GOING UP.



15 DIE IN A HOTEL FIRE

FRISCO HOSTELRY ABLAZE AS PATRONS SLEEP.

Nearly 200 in Bed When Flames Start—Bodies Taken from Ruins.

San Francisco.—Six bodies recovered and eight or ten others buried in the ruins; six injured, one fatally, and property loss of $125,000, are the results of a fire Friday that destroyed the St. George hotel, a lodging house for laborers at Howard and Eighth streets, and eight other small buildings. The bodies taken to the morgue were so charred that identification was impossible.

The hotel was a three-story frame building and burned so rapidly that none of the 180 guests had time to dress, and many escaped by jumping to the roof of an adjoining workshop. Scores clambered down the ladders of the firemen and the fire escapes, and at least four jumped to safety into the net held by the fire fighters.

When the fire was discovered shortly after three o'clock, Night Clerk Arthur Gronhk, three or four other employes, and Policeman W. F. Kruger ran through the house arousing the sleeping tenants.

In the smoke-filled halls they directed the half-crazed men to the exits. Great confusion and panic prevailed, so that it was with great difficulty that men were able to find their way through the labyrinth of halls which threaded the 400 small rooms.

Firemen and police worked heroically, and but for their efforts the loss of life would have been much greater.

Two hundred people were in the hotel when the fire broke out. One hundred and thirty of these were regular boarders, and the rest transients. Of the regular boarders 30 were unaccounted for, but many of them escaped in the confusion, and neglected to report their safety.

Rochester, N. Y.—The act of a fire bug which Tuesday rendered 1,000 persons homeless, when flames swept the city, has caused terror here. The militia is parading the streets guarding the few articles of furniture saved by the victims.

Swept along in the face of a 25-mile gale, the fire destroyed several sections of the city and did damage estimated at $1,000,000. It is believed the fire is of incendiary origin and the police are investigating.

Prison for Soul Mater.

Chicago.—Marion Grey of the Searchlight club of Elgin, Ill., must serve one year in a prison cell for her work in mating souls of rich but lonesome men and handsome but lovesick widows.

Judge Landis' sentence in the case was Tuesday affirmed by the United States circuit court of appeals. No error was found in the records and the attorney for the girl matrimonial agent, Elijah N. Zoline, who took her case after a reported squabble between Miss Grey and her trial counsel, was informed in the decision that "if any error was committed it was invited error."

Egg Prohibition Preacher.

Chillicothe, O.—Rev. C. W. Eldredge of Cincinnati, while delivering a speech in favor of "drys" at Adolphi, a small town near here, was given a shower of rotten eggs by a crowd of "wet" bystanders.

Mistaken for Burglar; Killed.

Emporia, Kan.—Griffith Hughes, aged 18 years, died Friday as the result of having been shot by his younger brother, Owen, who mistook him for a burglar and fired upon him in the dark.

SOUNDS ROOSEVELT PRAISE.

Senator Cummins Places Ex-President Ahead of Washington and Lauds Aldrich and Cannon.

Washington.—Senator Albert B. Cummins, the strenuous former governor of Iowa, who succeeded Senator Allison in the upper house of congress, jarred the Men's club of Mount Pleasant Congregational church with the statement that Roosevelt was greater than Washington.

While his hearers were trying to adjust themselves to that point of view, Senator Cummins ran in the statement that Daniel Webster was a dub compared with Senator Aldrich, and that Henry Clay was not in Speaker Cannon's class.

"Theodore Roosevelt," said the senator in his talk to the church club, "I consider a stronger man than George Washington, the 'Father of His Country.' Perhaps this sounds like treason, but it is not meant for that. Theodore Roosevelt, it is well known, faced problems day after day which Gen. Washington could never have met with success, but from which he would have had to recoil helpless.

GOTCH AN EASY WINNER.

World's Wrestling Champion Defeats Turk in Two Straight Falls Without Trouble.

Chicago. — Frank Gotch of Iowa, the world's heavyweight wrestling champion, Wednesday night in Dexter Park pavilion easily defeated Yusiff Mahmout, the latest importation of "terrible Turks." Gotch won the match in straight falls.

It took the champion only eight minutes to pin the shoulders of Mahmout to the mat in the first fall. The Turk stayed one minute longer when they faced each other the next time and went down after nine minutes of struggling. Gotch showed his superiority at every angle of the game and the great crowd was surprised as well as disappointed at the poor showing of Yussif.

Gotch won both falls with a crotch and half nelson and made no effort to get his famous toe hold on the Turk.

Celebrated Defaulter Free.

Ossining, N. Y. — A celebrated defalcation case was recalled by the release from Sing Sing prison of Cornelius J. Alvord, formerly note teller of the First National bank of New York city. Alvord was sentenced to a total of 13 years' imprisonment on January 16, 1901, for making false entries in the books of the first National bank to cover up defalcations said to have aggregated $620,000, extending over a period of several years.

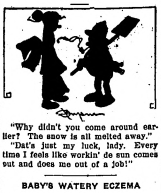
Nelson to Fight McFarland.

Chicago. — Battling Nelson and Packey McFarland Friday signed an agreement to fight for the lightweight championship of the world before James Coffroth's club at Colma, Cal., July 5. The winner gets 75 and the loser 25 per cent. of the receipts. They are to weigh 133 pounds at eight o'clock in the morning and the battle is to take place at 2:30 in the afternoon.

Women Clean Capital Streets.

Washington.—Carrying out their pledge for a cleaner Washington, "white wings" in the persons of society matrons and others were out in full force bright and early Thursday supervising the clearing the streets of the city of all floating paper and debris not gathered up by the rubbish carts. The scheme which was inaugurated by the women of the Twentieth Century club, was that the city should be free of all floating debris. The appearance of the streets Friday indicates the movement was a success.

HIS LUCK.



"Why didn't you come around earlier? The snow is all melted away."

"Dat's just my luck, lady. Every time I feels like workin' de sun comes out and does me out of a job!"

BABY'S WATERY ECZEMA

Itched and Scratched Until Blood Ran—$50 Spent on Useless Treatments—Disease Seemed Incurable.

Cured by Cuticura for $1.50.

"When my little boy was two and a half months old he broke out on both cheeks with eczema. It was the itchy, watery kind and we had to keep his little hands wrapped up all the time, and if he would happen to get them uncovered he would claw his face till the blood streamed down on his clothing. We called in a physician at once, but he gave an ointment which was so severe that my babe would scream when it was put on. We changed doctors and medicine until we had spent fifty dollars or more and baby was getting worse. I was so worn out watching and caring for him night and day that I almost felt sure the disease was incurable. But finally reading of the good results of the Cuticura Remedies, I determined to try them. I can truthfully say I was more than surprised, for I bought only a dollar and a half's worth of the Cuticura Remedies (Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills), and they did more good than all my doctors' medicines I had tried, and in fact entirely cured him. His face is perfectly clear of the least spot or scar of anything. Mrs. W. M. spot or scar. Mrs. W. M. Comerer, Burnt Cabins, Pa., Sept. 15, 1908."

One Thing She Was Sure Of.

Grace—Really, mother, you seem cross this morning.

Mother (sternly)—How often have I told you not to let that young man kiss you?

Grace—I don't know, mother, but certainly not as often as he has kissed me.

POTATO MAKES PROUD BOAST.

Humble Vegetable Used for Many Other Purposes Than Recognized Dinner Essential.

Whenever you lick a postage stamp you partake of me, since all lickable gums are made from dextrine, one of my products.

Your neck caresses me all day—for the starch that stiffens your collar is made from the potato.

The bone buttons on your underwear are probably "vegetable ivory"—compressed potato pulp.

My leaves, dried, make a good smoke. You have often smoked them "unbeknownst," mixed with your favorite brand.

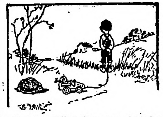
Potato spirit is a very pure alcohol. It is used to fortify white wines. Many a headache is not so much due to the grape as the potato.

I yield a sweet syrup. In this form I am often present in cheap cocoa, honey, butter and lard.

Let the corpulent try as they will, they cannot escape yours truly,

THE POTATO.

GOING THE PACE.



Tortoise—What, have you started a motor car?

Snail—Yes, one must move with the times, you know.

Offensive Advice.

"Madam," said the medical man, gravely, "you must practice filling your lungs with deep breaths of pure air."

"An' bust the smithereens out of my new direct'ry gown," sniffed the lady. "I think I see myself."

And turning on her high heels she haughtily left the apartment.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Foolish Question.

A New York chap wants to be told why theater tickets in that city do not indicate the hour of the beginning of the performance. Should think he would know. The hour is not mentioned because nobody is ever on time at the beginning of the performance. What would be the good of wasting printer's ink?

Let Me Tell You Something

A woman who is sick and suffering, and won't at least try a medicine which has the record of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, is to blame for her own wretched condition.

There are literally hundreds of thousands of women in the United States who have been benefited by this famous old remedy, which was produced from roots and herbs over thirty years ago by a woman to relieve woman's suffering.

Read what these women say:

Camden, N. J.—"It is with pleasure that I send my testimonial for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, hoping it may induce other suffering women to avail themselves of the benefit of this valuable remedy.

"I suffered from pains in my back and side, sick headaches, no appetite, was tired and nervous all the time, and so weak I could hardly stand. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman—and this valuable medicine shall always have my praise."—Mrs. W. P. Valentine, 902 Lincoln Ave., Camden, N. J.

Erie, Pa.—"I suffered for five years from female troubles, and at last was almost helpless. I tried three doctors but they did me no good. My sister advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has made me well and strong. I hope all suffering women will just give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial, for it is worth its weight in gold."—Mrs. J. P. Endlich, R. F. D. 7, Erie, Pa.

Since we guarantee that all testimonials which we publish are genuine, is it not fair to suppose that if Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had the virtue to help these women it will help any other woman who is suffering from the same trouble.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

If the slightest trouble appears which you do not understand, write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for her advice—it is free and always helpful.

GAME and FISH RESOURCES of the NORTHWEST

BY HON. CARLOS AVERY
EXECUTIVE AGENT MINNESOTA GAME AND FISH COMMISSION.

DOE AND FAWNS NEAR TAMARAC, MINN.

IT is one of the highest duties of the state to safeguard the people's heritage of those bounties of nature so munificently bestowed, whether they be in the forests, mines, lands, or in the wild life of the wood, field and stream, by erecting, if need be, legal barriers, to restrain those who would wantonly and recklessly waste and destroy those resources, intended not only for our use and enjoyment, but for all future generations, and also by providing rational methods of replacing that which we use, so as to transmit unimpaired these blessings to our descendents. Our responsibility is therefore great, and the citizen who does not realize this, and who is not inspired by due regard for the best interests of the state, should be the rare exception.

Heretofore, the subject of game and fish protection and preservation has been confused more or less by inherited prejudice and ignorance of its importance. But the extermination of certain valuable species, and the impending obliteration of others, due to reckless, unrestrained slaughter, and neglect of any methods of propagation, have brought us to a realization of the necessity for some larger plans whereby we may check the decrease and realize a sure and gradual increase in game and fish.

The first impulse, when it is found that game and fish are decreasing at an alarming rate, is to impose further restrictions, but we have found while certain restrictions are necessary, that restrictive measures alone will not permanently save the game. We have learned that artificial aid and encouragement to natural propagation and breeding is a practical success in maintaining the supply of fish, and are just beginning to find out that the same principle must be applied, so far as possible, to game birds and animals, encouraging their propagation and increase by providing suitable food, and protected breeding grounds, and destroying, so far as possible, their natural enemies.

Minnesota has been, is now, and should be for all time, one of the greatest game, fish and fur producing states of the Union. One-fifteenth of its entire area is water surface, made up of thousands of lakes of varying size and depth, inhabited by millions of fish, the home of thousands of fur-bearing animals, and the nesting and feeding grounds of myriads of wild water fowl. Had this water surface been equally distributed over the state, there is sufficient in the aggregate for a lake of 1,600 acres in extent in every township—ample for supplying all the fish required for a hundred times our present population. The present methods and facilities for artificial propagation and distribution of fish, should, and will be improved and amplified to meet all future demands. No further restrictions on the taking or sale of fish should be necessary, and there ought to be no reason why, with proper development of fish culture, many of the present restrictions may not from time to time be removed.

No data is available as to the quantity of fish annually taken from our inland waters, but from interstate and international boundary waters, including the Mississippi river and Lake St. Croix, between Minnesota and Wisconsin, that part of Lake Superior known as the North Shore, Rainy Lake and Lake of the Woods, the value of the total catch of commercial fishermen approximates a million dollars every year, nearly all shipped to outside markets, and over half of which, in quantity and value, made up of the humble and despised German carp, caught from the prolific waters of the Mississippi river. This river is marvelously productive of fish of the so-called rough varieties, which seem to be increasing, notwithstanding the heavy drain upon them. The Minnesota river, and some interior lakes are also filled with carp, and some legal method should be provided whereby they may be taken and made use of commercially, their presence being, on account of increasing numbers, a menace to the better varieties of game fish.

WOODCOCK, RUFFED GROUSE AND SNIPE BAGGED NEAR JORDAN, MINN.

Lake trout and herring constitute the bulk of the North Shore catch. Whitefish once formed an important item, but they are gone, due to destructive methods and over fishing. Lake trout will go the way the whitefish went unless the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries may succeed in propagating this fish in quantity to maintain the supply. From the Lake of the Woods come a half million pounds of yellow pike annually, as well as half as much each of whitefish and pickerel. Fifteen years ago this one lake produced an annual catch of a million and a half pounds of sturgeon and great quantities of caviar, but in the year last past the sturgeon catch had dropped to 87,000 pounds, so that a close season for five years by international agreement is now proposed.

The law does not permit the export of fish from the inland waters of the state, hence we have no inland commercial fisheries, except so far as the local markets are supplied with pike, pickerel, crappies and sunfish, caught in a small way with hook and line in inland lakes. This sort of fishing has been carried even to the point of extermination in some lakes, which has given rise to a movement looking to the prohibition of the sale of pike, which would deprive thousands of the privilege of an occasional taste of this, the choicest of our food fishes, as well as curtailing the available food supply of the people, except for those who are fortunate enough to be able to go forth with hook and line and experience the joy of taking them for themselves. Would it not be wiser, better, and a more far-seeing policy to provide for the immediate extension and enlargement of the facilities of the state for the artificial propagation of these fish? This is reasonably well understood, and is carried on with marked success in the state. There is no field of productive effort that pays so well in actual profit, in proportion to the cost, as the artificial propagation of fishes.

Along the eastern border of the state, from Winona to Grand Marais, brook trout are common, and bass are everywhere. Tourists come to seek these bronze or speckled beauties and urban residents eagerly look forward to the dates when they are permitted by law to go forth with rod and fly. Trout fishing is becoming better and more widely extended from year to year, wholly due to artificial propagation and planting, without which we would have no brook trout at all.

As the summer home and nesting ground for water fowl, Minnesota leads every state. Thousands of lakes, sloughs and marshes produce annually innumerable teal, mallards and wood duck. Since spring shooting has been stopped, the local crop of ducks has materially increased, and Minnesota marshes attract sportsmen from all parts of the country. Drainage and increased population will inevitably encroach more and more upon the breeding places of water fowl, but never in this state to the extent of extermination, provided that all other states will follow the excellent example set by our own, and stop the shooting of these birds in the mating season, and control the business of the destructive market gunner. Federal regulation of the season for shooting migratory waterfowl, owing to tardy recognition by a number of states of this essential precaution, may be the ultimate solution. This one all important precaution neglected, and some of us will surely live to see that sad day when wild ducks will have disappeared from the whole of North America.

Before the advent of civilization, and the transformation of our grassy prairies into fields of grain, this state offered ideal conditions for that finest of all game birds, the prairie grouse, but those conditions are gone, never to return. Some of our children may never hear the booming of the prairie chickens in courting season and it may be only a pleasant recollection for many of us. The prairie chicken still affords some excellent shooting in certain restricted sections, and may be retained for many years to come in limited numbers, but it can never be restored to the thickly populated and highly cultivated portion of the state. Its place, however, may, in a measure, be taken by the cheery little Bob White, if the farmers, whose best friend he is, come to realize his value to them as an aid to crop production, and furnish the little food and shelter required to carry him through the winter months.

The ruffed grouse will always be more or less plentiful under favorable climatic conditions in the wilder wooded portions of the state, and we yet have considerable numbers of the sharp tailed grouse and the spruce hen.

While originally the habitat of the red deer included all the wooded area of the state, at the present time it is, roughly speaking, defined by that portion clothed with coniferous forests. This includes an equilateral triangular area, the vertices of the three angles being at or near Stillwater, St. Vincent and Grand Portage at the eastern extremity of Cook county. This is a vast area, including nearly a thousand townships, almost half the surface of the state, a great portion of which will, for many years, and some of it for all time, remain a suitable home for these timid creatures. Though extremely shy in its nature, the red deer responds more readily than any other of our game animals, to protective measures, thrives in the midst of sparse settlements, and is easily domesticated. It is very prolific, and even in the face of an annual slaughter of at least five thousand animals by hunters in open season, great destruction in certain quarters by wolves, loss from starvation due to heavy snows, and more or less illegal killing by settlers and poachers, seems to have been increasing in numbers in recent years. To say that 30,000 deer are today roaming our northern forests may seem a rash exaggeration, but careful examination of certain widely separated typical localities leads to the conclusion that it is safely within the limit of conservative probability. What are 30,000 deer worth to the state of Minnesota? On the lowest sordid basis of food value, their worth exceeds half a million dollars, not to speak of their far greater value as game, the legitimate pursuit of which, by hunters, is one of the most invigorating and health-giving of recreative sports.

THE AUTHOR.

The largest game animal, surviving on the American continent, is the moose. Owing to the magnificent growth of antlers supported by the male, which are eagerly sought by hunters as trophies, as well as to its great size and peculiar characteristics, it is a most interesting and important species. Only three states of the Union, Washington, Minnesota and Maine, now have moose in sufficient numbers to safely permit the killing of them. Washington has comparatively few—Maine has many, but they are most numerous in Minnesota of any state. Their range extends along the Canadian border from the eastern extremity of Cook county to the Red River valley, over a territory 300 miles long and varying in width. It is only in the wildest, roughest and most inaccessible and uninhabited regions that the moose is now found in any considerable numbers, such as Cook, northern Lake and St. Louis counties, and in the dense impenetrable swamps of northern Beltrami county. Here the moose may be said to be making his last stand. Elsewhere the moose occurs, but in no considerable numbers, as he shuns the settlements and all signs and sounds of civilization.

Fortunately for the future of the moose of this state, there is a considerable portion of the extreme northern part of three of the counties named which is of such a rough, rocky and forbidding character that it is now unsettled, and much of it likely to remain unoccupied, being wholly unsuited to agriculture. The number of hunters will naturally increase annually, as the population increases, and while the moose seems not to be materially decreasing under present restrictions, yet its ultimate extermination is inevitable, unless some different plan of protection is adopted. It is believed that the solution of this problem in the case of moose lies in the establishment of protected areas, as permanent breeding grounds, large enough to harbor a considerable number of the animals undisturbed, and from which the overflow may spread to surrounding territory and furnish the supply for hunters, just as the Yellowstone National Park, the breeding and summer feeding ground of 25,000 elk, stocks the open hunting grounds of the adjoining states of Montana, Idaho and Wyoming. Our law at present provides that no wild animals or birds shall be killed on state parks or forest preserves. Extend this protection to areas corresponding with the boundaries of national forests at present existing, or to be established, and the question of the preservation of moose will be in a fair way to be solved, as government lands already withdrawn from entry, ultimately to be proclaimed national forests, include those areas best suited in every way for that purpose.

It is said that the best big game hunting country in America today is that portion of western Ontario adjoining northern Minnesota. There moose and caribou abound in countless numbers. These animals recognize no government and no flag and they know no imaginary boundary lines. Their protection and preservation in these areas is therefore an international problem; and in recognition of this, and realizing that the preservation of this game in any considerable numbers depends upon the adoption of some plan of permanent protection, our Ontario neighbors have come forward with a proposition to join with Minnesota in the setting aside of an area consisting of certain contiguous territory of the province of Ontario and the state of Minnesota as an international game refuge and breeding ground. This proposition has already met with the cordial editorial approval of some of the most influential newspapers of this state and Ontario, as well as the endorsement of commercial bodies and game protective organizations, and it is earnestly hoped that an awakened favorable public sentiment among the people may find expression

In the great movement now under way, and which nothing now can check, looking to the conservation of our natural resources, the protection and preservation for the people of generations yet unborn, of the gifts of nature so bountifully bestowed for our pleasure and enjoyment, must play an important part.

Recreation, relaxation, the joys and pleasures of the great outdoors are now eagerly sought, and will continue to be more and more as the people return to a saner mode of life. Fresh pure air, the invigorating winds, beautiful blue skies, the warm caressing sun invite us to the fields and woods where singing birds, whistling quail, the chattering squirrel and the shy red deer should be our friends and companions, and provide the relief we need from the sordid pursuits of the daily business grind. We deplore the enervating effect of the pursuit of comfort and luxury, and the high pressure mode of life incident to modern society, and fear we are to become a race of physical degenerates. The remedy is at hand and the way plain. It is said, and we should ever bear in mind, that the taking of fish from the waters for food is not all of fishing. The capturing of game for its flesh is not all of hunting. These invigorating pursuits, if permitted to be indulged in by our children, and those of future generations, will produce and preserve a more sturdy race of men and women, broad shouldered, deep chested, red-veined, sound of mind and body, worthy citizens of this great commonwealth of Minnesota.

Seeing the Soul.

As for seeing the soul—that is a common human experience. Lovers have only to look in each other's eyes, they think, to behold the other's soul. The eye is very much more than the iris and the retina and the rest of the optical apparatus. The eye reserves always a guest chamber for the presence of the soul, and when the soul is there it is easy enough to recognize the fact of its occupancy.

A Black Eye for Home.

It is a coming fashion to hire a hall to entertain your friends, to give dinner parties in a hotel, to be married in a church, to be taken to a hospital when you are sick and to an undertaker's as soon as you die, and left there until the funeral. The tendency is to conduct all public occasions away from home. The home is getting a black eye.—Atchison (Kan.) Globe.

CRIMINAL IN CHILD NATURE.

Writer in New Orleans Picayune Asserts We Are All Born with Tenderness Toward the Bad.

"All children," said a psychologist, "are born criminals. Instinctively they lie, steal, slander, torture—I don't know what. The saintliest man, a very Dr. Parkhurst of a man, were he to grow up as he began, would have a long career of bank robberies, assaults, debauches and murders, and he would die on the gallows.

"A child, as soon as it begins to toddle and lisp, steals. Till you have trained a child to know that thefts are followed by spankings, would you dare to leave it alone in a candy shop?

"It also lies. After a raid on the jam or cake, does a child admit its guilt? Of course not. It lies earnestly, doggedly.

"A child slanders and libels. Did you ever hear a beautiful, lisping child speak in praise of its playmate? No. On the contrary, it accuses the playmate continually of horrible crimes.

"A child will get drunk if you give it the opportunity. Lack of opportunity is all that prevents children from becoming confirmed inebriates.

"It is needless to go on. Look back on your childhood. Study your evil little child heart. You'll wonder then that no curio collector cherishes a piece of your rope."—New Orleans Picayune.

AILING WOMEN.

Keep the Kidneys Well and the Kidneys Will Keep You Well.

Sick, suffering, languid women are learning the true cause of bad backs and how to cure them. Mrs. W. G. Davis, of Groesbeck, Texas, says: "Backaches hurt me so I could hardly stand. Spells of dizziness and sick headaches were frequent and the action of the kidneys was irregular. Soon after I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills I passed several gravel stones. I got well and the trouble has not returned. My back is good and strong, and my general health is better."

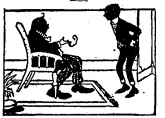
THE WRETCHES.



Uncle—How is it, young man, that you failed again in your examination?

Nephew—Why, the wretches asked me the very same question I could not answer last year!

Not Our Discovery.

The Greek, Eratosthenes, 250 B. C., taught the doctrine of the rotundity of the earth, and the ideas of the sphere, its poles, axis, the equator, arctic and antarctic circles, equinoctial points and the solstices were quite generally entertained by the wise men of that time. There were plenty of men in Rome, therefore, who were prepared to talk about the earth as a sphere and to make globes illustrating their ideas.

Natural Solicitude.

Invalid Husband—Did the doctor say I was to take all that medicine?

Wife—Yes, dear.

Invalid Husband—Why, there's enough there to kill a donkey.

Wife (anxiously)—Then you'd better not take all of it, John!—Tit Bits.

"COFFEE DOESN'T HURT ME"

Tales That Are Told.

"I was one of the kind who wouldn't believe that coffee was hurting me," says a N. Y. woman. "You just couldn't convince me its use was connected with the heart and stomach trouble I suffered from most of the time.

"My trouble finally got so bad I had to live on milk and toast almost entirely for three or four years. Still I loved the coffee and wouldn't believe it could do such damage.

"What I needed was to quit coffee and take nourishment in such form as my stomach could digest.

"I had read much about Postum, but never thought it would fit my case until one day I decided to quit coffee and give it a trial and make sure about it. So I got a package and carefully followed the directions.

"Soon I began to get better and was able to eat carefully selected foods without the aid of pepsin or other digestants and it was not long before I was really a new woman physically.

"Now I am healthy and sound, can eat anything and everything that comes along and I know this wonderful change is all due to my having quit coffee and got the nourishment I needed through this delicious Postum.

"My wonder is why everyone don't give up the old coffee and the troubles that go with it and build themselves up as I have done, with Postum."

Easy to prove by 10 days' trial of Postum in place of coffee. The reward is big.

"There's a Reason."

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. C. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam' Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

The legislature passed some kind of a state reapportionment bill last week, which will give the northern part of the state a little more representation, but does not cut out any of the south part of the states overproduction of representation.

The movement from the cities to the farm will soon set in, for it will be a case of help to raise wheat, or starve. Any legislature or congressman that would raise his voice to try to depress the price of farm produce, had ought to be promptly retired to a farm.

The bill provideing for the redistricting of commissioner districts, passed the legislature last week, but Red Lake Falls got it amended so as to not take affect until December 10th, 1910. Surley we poor eleven towner's got into a red hot county seat fight when we got into this county.

Spectator: "We have not enough farmers and the products of the farm are to high," is the wail that goes up from the cities Not in a generation have the prodncts of the farm commanded the price that they do today, and prospects for continued high prices are favorable.

Representative John Holton, of Fertile, Polk county had $1-500 given from the state road and bridge fund to aid in building a road north from Gully, and $500, for a road south from Erskine The farmers of eastern Polk gave Mr. Holton their loyal support last fall, and he did not forget them, when the state pie was cut.

Now come the cities. With a kick on the raise of bread. Long may James A. Patten live to give the man you have been calling an "Old moss back" a turn at the bat. If them people in the cities don't like to pay the high prices for flour, let them come to northern Minnesota and help us raise wheat.

We wish to call the attention of those that have watched the bridge location fight, to one fact, and that is, if it had been Vrolson, Lattimore, and Swenson to put up the cash to pay the sxpenses of getting this bridge location, there would have been no bridge, location fight, for there would have been no bridge location.

The bill for a special appropriation to build a bridge across Red Lake River, in the town of Highlanding died in the Committee of Towns and Counties yesterday. May its ashes rest in peace. It might have been got out of the Committee and passed, had there been anyone there to looked after it, but we were in the same position as the 3rd, Minnesota regiment, in the war of the Rebellion; when the nation wanted them down south to help fight the rebes, the state had to keep them at home to fight the Indians. So if we did not get the bridge bill passed we cleaned out the Indians, that followed their usal tactics of trying to massacre the whites, while their attention was attracted in an other direction.

Swanson The Dodger.

Swanson again comes out in an other dodgeing article in that leven towns about representing the people and the best bridge location, but when it comes to any mention of the name of any of the people, or the condition of the road south from Highlanding, there is a SILANCE, that can be FELT. Why? Because he and his north side of the river backers know that they are not certifying to a man in Washington that don't know anything about it, but are talking to people liveing here that know all about it Now we want to ask Mr. Swanson a few more questions. Is it not a fact, that if there was a bridge across the river at Highlanding, and a man should cross it from the north side with a steam threshing rig, that he could not move it 80 rood in any direction, away from the river bank? Is it not a fact that there is no grain raised on the south side of the river, in the town of Highlanding, east of section 80? Either answer my questions, or we will pay no more attention to you, or your leven towns, as we have never considered you. or the fellow that gets out the thing much more worthy of notice than a southern general would a nigger, and prehaps you two fellows feel as proud of it as the nigger did when he said." I met the general down the road and he spoke to me." What did he say?, asked a by stander. "He said get out of the road, you black pup.

A Very Restful Rest.

Adolf Menzel, the German artist, was at one time engaged on a mural decoration. He had rigged up a scaffolding in his studio, on which his model was requested to stand. For two long hours the poor poseur stood up aloft in a most fatiguing posture. Menzel in the meantime worked at his sketch, heedless of the fact that his model was growing tired.

At length the model found it necessary to speak. "Herr professor," said he, "how about a recess?"

Menzel apologized profusely for his forgetfulness. "Certainly, certainly, my dear sir," said he. "Come down and rest yourself a bit."

The model had clambered from the scaffolding to the ladder, which led down from it to the studio floor.

"Stop!" cried the artist suddenly. "That pose is fine! Don't move a muscle!"

And once more the model was forced into strained rigidity, while the enthusiastic draftsman set about sketching him.

At the end of half an hour Menzel looked up from his work. "There," said he; "that will do nicely! Get back on the scaffold. We have had our rest. Let us get back to work again."

What the model said is left to the reader's imagination.

Scotland and Horse Racing

Scotland has been famous for its horses from the most ancient days. When Agricola defeated the Caledonians at the battle of the Grampians, A. D. 84, the Celtic enemy, as Tacitus relates, were exceptionally strong in cavalry and charioteers. Successive kings of Scotland did much to improve its native breed of horses, and in this connection it is not to be forgotten that the first Scottish king of England, James I., did more to improve the race horses in our island than was ever done before him or has ever been done by any individual since. James I. was the real author of horse racing as it has since been known in England. He it was who first established regular courses, and during his reign there came into being the code of regulations that led up to the modern laws of the turf. Nobody denies that horse racing has done much for the breed of British horses It was a gift from Scotland.—London Answers.

Sizing Up Bernard Shaw.

Bernard Shaw is thus immortalized by Charles Hawtrey, the well known English comedian: "Once on a time I had a mad desire to produce Shaw's play of 'You Never Can Tell.' I wrote to Shaw and asked his permission. He answered that he would come and read it to me. He did and began by saying that sometimes he thought it was the best play that ever was written and at others he considered it the greatest trash. Anyhow, he was of opinion that it was a pretty poor play and that if I produced it—well, I must take the consequences. Some time afterward I asked Shaw if I could compress the last act. He declined to allow one line to be altered or cut but, in view of certain contingencies I had at last to tell him that I couldn't produce the play. His answer was: 'Thank you so much! You have taken a great load off my mind.' Now, what are you to do with a man like that?"—Minneapolis Journal.

Domestic Bliss.

They had been trotting in double harness for seven long, weary months, and the honeymoon had bumped the bumps for fair.

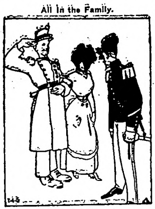
"John," she said, as she dished out the breakfast food, "I need a little pin money this morning."

"What did you do with the $5 I gave you last week?" asked the man who had promised to love, honor and pay the freight.

"Oh, I don't remember," she replied. "It's so easy to spend $5 and have nothing to show for it."

"Right you are," sighed John. "That was the amount I paid the minister for marrying us."—Chicago News.

All in the Family.



"Sergeant, my sister."

"Really! She was mine last week."

Mutual Surprise.

They stood beneath the mistletoe.

She was justly resentful of what he had done.

"How dare you kiss me?" she exclaimed, "I never was so surprised in all my life!"

"Neither was I," he replied contritely. "I thought it was your younger sister."—Chicago Post.

Forbidden Fruit.

"Your luncheons are always so successful, Mrs. Penrhyn-Paget. Do tell me how you select your menus."

"Oh, you see, the doctor has given me a printed list of things I mustn't eat, and I choose the dishes from that."—Woman's Home Companion.

How Ledgers Got Their Name.

On the authority of the best lexicographers "ledger" is an adaptation of a once common word, "ligger," signifying any large book suited better for lying on a desk than for carrying about. Sometimes this was applied to a large account book, cartulary, or the like, frequently a great breviary, for use in church, as distinct from a "portas," or small one, carried by a "book bosom priest." "Coucher" is another old synonym for "ligger," the foregoer of the now general "ledger."

A Dangerous Subject.

Professor Henry Drummond when a boy discovered that he could hypnotize people. At a birthday party a little girl declined to play the piano. Drummond happened to catch her eye and said, "Play." To his surprise she rose at once, went to the piano and played. At another time he hypnotized a boy and gave him a poker for a gun. "Now," said Drummond, "I'm a pheasant. Shoot me." The boy did so, and Drummond fell to keep up the illusion, whereupon the boy, seeing the "bird" move, was about to hit it over the head with the poker. The hypnotizer had just time to stop the magnetized sportsman.—Pearson's Weekly.

The ice moved out of the Red Lake River yesterday, after a three weeks siege of breaking up.

Roy Livingston went down to Kratka Tuesday, to assist Steph Singer to invoic the Kratk store stock.

We have a good work horse that we would sell at a reasonable price, as we can not get time to use him.

The weather continues to be very cold for this time of the year, with such frosty nights that no spring work can be done.

Our readers may expect one more article from town clerk Ed. Singer next week, to expose the double dealing of Swanson, in the bridge matter.

Walt McAndress bought a fine six year old mare of John Quirk last week, which mates up well with his other two, making him a fine three horse team.

The spring crop of fishermen has began to arrive at the mouth of Sunbeam creek, but the fish seem to be smart enough to keep out in the river, where the water is good and deep.

Oscar Lillo, of Deer Park was trying to deliver a yoke of oxen to Mr. Quist, of Kratka, on Tuesday, but the town was so big that they could not find each other, so he had to take the oxen back home.

If you get hungry going down to Thief River Falls, stop at The Soo Cafe, near the Soo depot, and get a lurch, or a square meal at a reasonable price.

James O'Brien and Joe O'Toole drove down to Deer Park yesterday, where Mr. O'Toole went to adjust the power of a gasoline engin, to make it run a cream seperator for George Singer, the Rhoda dairyman.

Joe DuChamp has the farmers steam boat fitted up in first class condition, and informs us that he will run the boat on schedule time, which will be pubished, so as to let the people know at what time the boat may be expected to arrive, at the different landings, going up and down the river.

The steam boat DuCamp, pased by here this morning on its first trip down the river, this spring The boat is owned by the Red Lake River Transportation Co., and is in charge of Mr. DuChamp presidsnt of the company, who will endevor to make it fulfill the purpose for which it was built, to take passengers and freight up and down the river.

Frank Lundeen has commenced the erection of his new farm residence in the northern part of Deer Park township, which will be one of the largest and most up to date farm residances in eastern Red Lake county. Mr. Lundeen was one of the first settlers in this part of the eleven towns, and has prospered to the extent of being able to build this fine home.

We want to say to the people of easter Red Lake county, that we are willing to go way back and sit down, and let others do the hustling to try to build up and improve the country, get boats, roads, school houses and bridges. We will just take a seat and sit down and wait until Swanson, Lattimre and Vrolson make a move to try to do anything, but they never will, unless a road grader agent came along, when they might jump in to bond the town, but they are not town clerks any more, so they could not even do that.

Killed In The Senate.

The state senate, on Tuesday killed the house reapportionment bill to to add ffteen members and one senator to the present membership. What Was the Matter.

E. A. Sothern once told a dilemma he got into:

"I was acting in a comedy when I had to speak the words, 'What's the matter?' Well, one night I was rather slow about taking my cue and was prompted. I forgot myself for the moment, and when the words came, 'What's the matter?' I thought something or other had occurred out of the common. I paused and looked round. Everything seemed normal, and the stage waited. Then came another 'What's the matter?' from the O. P. side. They were all getting anxious behind the scenes, and so was I, for that matter. I looked myself up and down and then scanned my fellow actor, but for the life of me couldn't see anything wrong. At last an audible whisper came: 'Go on with your lines, you idiot! What's the matter with you?' Then it suddenly dawned on me where I was, but the house had tumbled to the situation and came down in convulsions."—Minneapolis Journal.

OCEAN TRAVEL.

Luxury That Greets the Passengers on an Atlantic Liner.

The luxury of ocean travel has reached such a state of perfection that land bred and timid passengers may almost delude themselves into thinking that they are still on shore when they are in the middle of the ocean.

When the luncheon bugle sounds you go in to tidy your hair. The sun is shining in through your window or at least one of the windows, for there are two in your drawing room, one in the bathroom and one in the bedroom beyond. Your drawing room—which might be in the Winter palace, Nice, for all the resemblance it bears to a ship's cabin—is furnished in old gold and white. A soft carpet of old gold, a sofa piled luxuriantly with cushions, several chairs, a table, a wonderfully equipped desk, on which rests a drop light, are at your disposal. You stop a moment to admire the panels and etchings and the hangings, which are embroidered with drooping wistaria in faint green. An electric grate fire, with a genuine mantel, lends an air of spaciousness to the room. You notice that your gowns have been hung in one closet and your blouses in another and that shoes, slippers, umbrella, etc., have been carefully stowed away in places provided for them.

The third day out, if the weather is fine, is the social height of the trip The ship's types are by this time all fully developed. The bridge fiends have become known to each other, and they never leave their game except for meals. There is the usual contingent that each morning comes around to tell you how early they were on deck You have stood at the prow and watched the schools of dolphins jumping straight for the ship, you have rushed excitedly to the rail to watch a passing steamer with which your vessel exchanges salutes by running up innumerable little flags, and you have marveled at the land birds that always follow the ship across, and perhaps you ask the steward to set out some fresh water and a plate of crumbs for them.

If you enjoy spontaneous vaudeville the hour in the ship's gymnasium will be your regular rendezvous every morning, and aside from the fun which you will have in watching the others perform unaccustomed stunts on the frisky camel, the spirited horse or with the vibrators you will receive direct benefit from the exercises, which are the best thing to be recommended for the maintenance of sea legs.—Harriet Quimby in Leslie's Weekly.

ALDEN'S NAPLES STORY.

A Glass of Capri Wine and a Statue That Nodded.

The late W. L. Alden, the humorist, was one of the most abstemious of men—in fact, he was pretty near being a teetotaler. I don't know that I ever saw him take wine or spirits in all the years I knew him except a glass of claret at the midday and evening meals during his last illness.

During the later years of his life he spent the winter abroad, sometimes in Genoa, sometimes in Naples and once, I think, in Cairo, and usually his four or five months' residence on the shores of the Mediterranean would not cost him more than £50.

Once on his return from Naples I remember his telling me this story:

"L., a brother novelist, was in Naples also and asked me one night to dine with him at one of the big hotels on the water front just outside Naples—one of those hotels along that massive stone embankment against which the waves of the sea often break in showers of spray thirty or forty feet high.

"After dinner we went for a walk along the embankment, and we got pretty well drenched with the spray. Soon we reached a statue, and, lo, it nodded gravely toward us!

"'Did you see that statue nod?' said L. to me.

"'I certainly did,' said I.

"'Well,' said he, 'I'm going back to the hotel and to bed before I get run in. It's that confounded Capri wine.'

"So, ashamed of ourselves, back we went and sneaked up to bed. But at breakfast table next morning both of us seemed to be amazingly fresh considering our dissipation of the night before, and we could not understand why we had such good appetites until the waiter said:

"'Did the gentlemen feel last night's slight earthquake?'"—Pearson's Weekly.

A Medal of Blood.

Garibaldi was once presented with a medal made of his own blood. The giver was Dr. Manini of Naples, who was well known as a petrifier and preserver of the human body. Dr. Manini in offering his gift to Garibaldi said that whenever the general looked at it it would brace him up for the last fight, and across the medal were engraved the words, "The Blood of Garibaldi Is Forever Red." The strange medal is preserved by the general's descendants.

An Eye to Business.

"Bigsbee is a terribly melodramatic fellow, isn't he? He said he'd drain his heart's blood for the woman he loved. Do you think he meant it?"

"Why, I guess so. Bigsbee is agent for a drain and sewer pipe concern."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

All He Knew.

Officer (to recruit who has missed every shot)—Good heavens, man, where are your shots going? Recruit (tearfully)—I don't know, sir; they left here all right!—London Punch.

Habit is the deepest law of human nature.—Carlyle.

The Substitution.

It is a well known fact that both Sir Arthur Sullivan and Sir W. S. Gilbert had a horror of the titles of their operas becoming known until the very night of their performance. This fear that they might be forestalled created considerable confusion at the initial production of "Iolanthe; or The Peer and the Peri." The opera was rehearsed for weeks under the title of "Perola." It was only at the dress rehearsal that the company was instructed to substitute the name "Iolanthe" for that of "Perola" wherever it occurred in the text or lyrics. It was no easy task to replace vocally and in the dialogue a name of three syllables for one of four. Sullivan, however, said (maybe aside) to one or two of the actors who were nervous: "Go ahead and sing the music. Gilbert won't be in front" (Gilbert never attended the first night), "so use any name that you think of first if you are rattled. No one in the audience will be any wiser."—Boston Post.

Young's Impromptu.

To most persons Edward Young is the author of "Night Thoughts" and nothing more, but he was also a man of the world and a shrewd and caustic wit as well as the rector of St. Mary's church at Welwyn.

It was there in the garden of the rectory that he composed some of the best impromptu verses known. He was walking with two ladies when some one summoned him to the house. His companions were agreeable, and he was in no haste to leave them. Turning as he reached the gate, he said:

Thus Adam looked when from the garden driven
And thus disputed orders sent from heaven.
Like him, I go and yet to go am loath;
Like him, I go, for angels drove us both.
Hard was his fate, but mine still more unkind;
His Eve went with him, but mine stays behind.

The Alternative.

"If the window had been eight feet from the ground," pouted the young wife, "instead of eight stories, I'd have thrown myself out when you quarreled with me. Then you'd have had to be sweet to me when you picked me up. A lot of wives attempt suicide, they say, just to be petted when they come to."

"Yes," said he, "but sometimes they don't come to, remember."—New York Press.

One For Every Day.

"I've been reading about one of them rich men wot's got er suit of clothes for every day in the week," said one tramp to another.

"That's nothin'. So 'ave I. This is it I've got on now!"—London Globe.

Marlin

THE Marlin Model 1894 is a medium light weight repeating rifle, a well proportioned, finely balanced gun with all the advantages and comforts of the Marlin solid-top, side-ejecting construction. It is quick and easy of operation, accurate up to 300 yards and a very pleasant gun to carry and to shoot.

For settled districts and farming country where the shooting at woodchucks, badgers, foxes, 'coons, hawks, etc., is at ranges from 100 to 200 yards, the .25-20 and .32-20 rifles with the black and low-pressure smokeless loads cannot be equalled for accuracy and safety. The factory ammunition for the Model '94 rifles is cheap, and can be reloaded at very small cost.

The up-to-date sportsman needs the "Marlin Book" every day in the year. It contains 136 pages of live stuff for the man who loves a good gun, and wants to know everything about it. FREE for 3 stamps postage.

Josephine's Many Names.

Josephine, empress of the French was Yeyette to her intimate friends. Her name in reality was Marie Josephe Rose. Napoleon after the marriage exacted that she should be known as Josephine. He had a mania for rebaptizing the women of his entourage. He made his sister Marianne an Elise, of Annonciade a Caroline, of Paulette a Pauline.

Among her numerous friends Josephine remained Yeyette. Barras never called her otherwise.

The pope was so unfamiliar with her name that when he sent his benediction the letter borne by his legate was addressed to "Our Sister In Jesus Christ, Victoria Bonaparte."

In 1814, on the departure for Elba, the Debats designated Josephine under the paraphrase "the mother of Prince Eugene."

At Rueil her tomb bears this simple inscription, "A Josephine; Eugene et Hortense, 1825." The restoration did not permit her recognition as empress—Cri de Paris.

UNCLE SAM'S CONSULS

BY EDWARD B. CLARK

DRAWINGS BY DEARBORN MELVILL

COPYRIGHT 1909 BY W. A. PATTERSON.

WASHINGTON.—It is the desire of Secretary of State Knox as it was that of Secretary Root, to put the consular service of the United States as nearly as it is possible so to do, upon the plane of the civil service. All consular appointments to-day are made largely upon the recommendation of senators and representatives and other men of political influence, but the appointees are given places of the lowest rank in the service and must depend upon the excellence of their work to secure promotion. Moreover they must pass a satisfactory examination before the department will assign them to posts of duty.

The administration, it is known, would be glad if it were possible to apply civil service rules to these appointments of ministers and ambassadors, but as the holders of these high diplomatic offices are forced to great expense of living, and their salaries are comparatively small, no man can become a first place representative of his country abroad unless he belongs to the class of the millionaires. The result of this is that in many cases money rather than ability fixes the appointments of some of our ministers and ambassadors.

In the past there were many literary men of standing but whose books did not bring them in a large revenue, who sought places in the consular service in order that they might have a regular income, comparatively little office work, and an opportunity also to get the atmosphere of Europe or Asia or of some other continent to give life and color to the books which they intended to write. The literary man to-day has to stand on the same level in seeking an appointment as a consul as that occupied by the lawyer or the merchant. There are not as many writers of books and essays in the service to-day as there were in the past, and in one way the United States government is the loser thereby.

If some one would go far back through the files of the state department and read the consular reports contained therein, he doubtless would run across some clever bits of writing put on paper by men who knew the art and who gave interest and color and life to some seemingly dry as dust trade subject. It is very likely that the reports that Francis Bret Harte wrote when he was consul at Glasgow, Scotland, would make delightful reading even though they treated on the subject of wool or, it may be, of Scotch whisky or Scotch cattle. There have been other literary men in the service, some of them better known than Bret Harte. It is only necessary to give the names of Washington Irving and Nathaniel Hawthorne to prove the point. Not long ago in the service abroad the government had Albion W. Tourgee, Arthur Sherburne Hardy, James Jeffrey Roach, and George Horton. Two of these men died comparatively recently, but they lived long enough to see some of their writings appear in print as public documents and to know that the manner in which they treated their subjects was appreciated by thousands of their American countrymen.

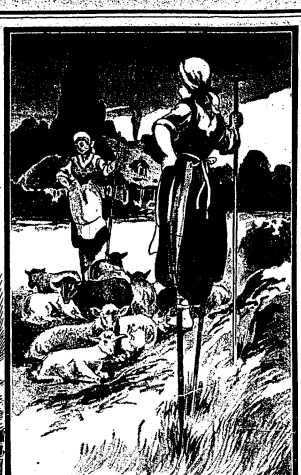
Some of the other consuls abroad, men who made no pretense to literary ability, have turned in from time to time trade reports that were picturesque in their nature and written with extreme cleverness. Not long ago the government decided to issue in a form between a pamphlet and a magazine the Daily Consular Reports. As the editor of the publication a veteran newspaper man, Maj. John M. Carson, was appointed. With his training he saw to it that the best of the material received from the consuls was given a place of prominence, and he succeeded in making of the consular reports a publication of real interest.

In the records of the department there is one report which from the first paragraph holds the close attention of the reader. It was read the other day by one who did not know until the last line was reached whose hand had been at work in its writing. The thought was, here is something worth while.

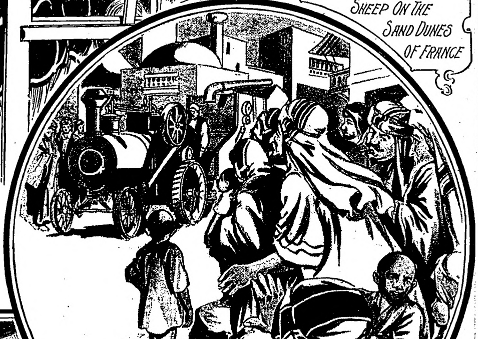
The title of the article was simply "Reforestation in France," and the first few lines showed little of interest. Then the eye reached this: "One after another great waves of sand, moved by the restless winds that swept across the Atlantic, continued their unceasing march across the fair plains of southern France, burying all before them—fields, meadows, vineyards, houses, churches, even villages—leaving behind them only gray billows, to which clung bunches of bracken, a few starved bushes of scrub oak, and thickets of white and purple gorse, fighting stubbornly for a hold upon the shifting sands, with here and there some straggling groups of pine, the protesting remains of a great forest which wind and sand, and fire, and water had spared."

This was a description of the irresistible march of the gray sand dunes from the shore of the Bay of Biscay toward the heart of the most productive land in Europe. The description was embodied in a consul's report, and it was so utterly different from the descriptions written by most consuls, or by their clerks, as is more often the case, that the reader's eye and mind went on wondering, with curiosity held in check until the signature should come at the very end. The thought was that here was a consul or a clerk who should be writing books instead of commercial pamphlets intended for the eye of the few. The story—this official communication is a story and nothing else—leads to the final planting of the pines under the direction of Napoleon—pines which saved the fields of France.

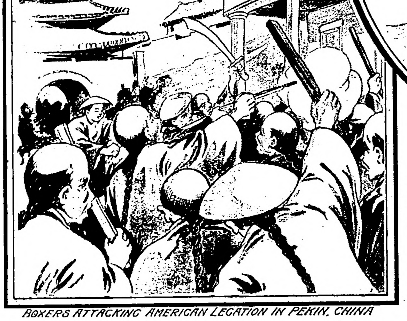
"Wherever the foot of the sand dune rested, there was hopeless blight. A little wiry grass grew in the shadow of the heather and gorse, on which the sheep browsed under the eyes of solemn-faced shepherds perched on stilts and knitting as they watched. On and on crept the phalanx of the terrible dunes, slowly but surely blighting all in their path, not only creating a desert but destroying hope. As long as the winds blew from the west the dunes marched to the east; the desert fires ravaged the intervening spaces; flocks grew fewer, the desolation more extreme. In the heart of sunny France a desert was established, ever increasing in extent and threatening to stretch across its fairest fields the aridness of the Sahara."



SHEPHERDS WATCHING THEIR SHEEP ON THE SAND DUNES OF FRANCE



"ITS TRIUMPHAL MARCH THROUGH DAMASCUS STIRRED THE WHITE CITY OF THE EAST FROM CENTER TO CIRCUMFERENCE."



BOXERS ATTACKING AMERICAN LEGATION IN PEKIN, CHINA

The official document then tells us in the words of its contributor how France was saved by the adoption of the idea of Bremontier, one of the sons of the seemingly doomed region. The seeds of the pine, the "pin maritime" of the French, were gathered and sprouted carefully and the young trees were planted in places "where the moving sands did not overwhelm them until their tough roots had taken a firm hold, their wiry leaves, which loved the briny spume, would offer no resistance to the wind, and, falling about their roots, would give shelter and nutriment until a forest grew which would hold the sands in check and save the threatened interior from desolation."

It was Napoleon who seized upon the idea of Bremontier. "His vision penetrated the centuries and he saw the march of the deadly dunes arrested and the desert they had created made to blossom like the rose."

The consul tells us that after a century has passed the statue of Bremontier looks down one of the great furrows which lie between the dunes he showed how to conquer. To-day, as we are told, "the dark squadrons of the pin maritime are posted on thousands of sandy slopes, faithful guardians in the shelter of which the vineyards and wheat fields rest secure. The gray dunes which were sweeping over the land have become serried fortresses which shelter civilization and prosperity."

At least one real live item was contributed not long ago by G. Bie Ravndal, United States consul at Beirut, Syria, to the pages of the consular reports. When this was put into the publication it is probable that the editor-in-chief was on a vacation. Otherwise the Beirut consul's tale would have been put on the first page instead of being sandwiched in between "Rubber Cultivation" and "Commercial Failure in Germany."

According to the consular report Pasha Abdul Rahman at one time imported into Damascus a hoosier steam threshing machine through the agency of a gentleman named Michel Effendi Nasser of Beirut. It is the belief of Consul Ravndal that the Indiana thresher will rout the Bedouins of the desert, and he leads up to this climax with a picturesque recital of the facts attending the arrival of the machine and its subsequent career. His tale of the thresher follows:

"Its triumphal march through Damascus stirred the White City of the East from center to circumference. On its way into the country it broke down bridges innumerable, but pulled itself out of the creek beds beautifully, and it had the honor of being started on its pioneer career in the presence of the governor-general of the province, the field marshal in command of the Fifth army corps and many other gentlemen of high station in Ottoman civil and military life. With its self-feeder, automatic bagger, straw bruiser, etc., it is a marvel of ingenuity, and its service to this country in blazing the way for labor-saving machinery, with its accompanying amelioration of industrial and social conditions in a region east of Mount Hermon, where people live and work as did their forefathers when Abraham crossed their pastures with his Chaldean flocks, is beyond estimation. In the Hauran to-day thousands of acres are lying idle; they are likely now to be reclaimed, and the predatory Bedouin tribes who infest the country will have to retire before the new order of things."

Consular positions do not pay large sums of money, but the life is in many respects an attractive one and there are always many applicants for any vacancies which may exist. It is virtually a necessity that the person who desires a place in the consular service shall be able to speak at least two modern languages; that is, one in addition to English. While the examinations are not supposed to be hard some men who have been through college with credit in their studies have failed to answer properly enough of the questions put to them to give them a hold on the service.

At times the United States consuls have dangers to encounter. It was exceedingly unpleasant in Spain for some of Uncle Sam's representatives during the months just prior to the beginning of actual hostilities at Manila bay. In Chili and in Turkey within a comparatively short time the consuls have had occasion to put up a brave front against the populace and to show the stuff that they were made of. Fresh in the memory of everybody is the awful time which the beleaguered legations had within the walls of "the forbidden city" in China.

As further inducement to settlement of the wheat-raising lands of Western Canada, the Canadian Government has increased the area that may be taken by a homesteader to 320 acres—160 free and 160 to be purchased at $3.00 per acre. These lands are in the grain-raising area, where mixed farming is also carried on with unqualified success. A railway will shortly be built to Hudson Bay, bringing the world's markets a thousand miles nearer these wheat-fields, where schools and churches are convenient, climate excellent, railways close to all settlements, and local markets good.

SENATE PASSES HOUSE INVESTIGATING COMM.TTEE BILL.

House Passes the "Pork Barrel" Bill, Giving $300,000 to Counties for Roads and Bridges.

St. Paul, Minn., April 12.—The Bjorge house bill for a tonnage tax on iron was reported in to the senate today and was then re-committed to the tax committee for the scheduled hearing on the measure Tuesday evening.

The bill legalizing Sunday baseball, in which Representatives Gartside, Grant and Wolhuter join as sponsors, was recommended for passage on motion of George H. French of Winona.

F. H. Peterson of Moorhead, introduced a new phase of the packing house plant fight in the senate today, by a resolution calling upon the attorney-general to investigate as to whether the packing plant proposed for the midway district will be a menace to the state university; and if he finds it is, to bring injunction proceedings to prevent its culmination or continuance. The resolution received notice of debate by A. L. Hanson, and hence went over for the day.

Ole Sageng of Otter Tail made an endeavor to resuscitate his bill to give local option to towns of the fourth class throughout the state. He reminded the senate that the bill has been sleeping for nearly three months in the hands of the senate committee on temperance; and it was time the measure awoke. W. W. Dunn of St. Paul, told the senate that this same bill (the Ware measure) was a few days ago killed in the house, and that it would be but a waste of time for the senate to consider it. He also called attention to the fact that the chairman of the temperance committee was absent and suggested the matter therefore be laid over. The suggestion was accordingly adopted out of what is left of the proverbial "senatorial courtesy."

The A. K. Ware bill to prohibit brewing companies from owning retail saloons or controlling them, was killed in the house today on report of the judiciary committee which held the measure to be unconstitutional.

Two bills were recalled from the governor for amendment. One is the firemen's pension bill, applying to all cities outside of the first class, which have fire departments. The governor stated he would veto the bill in its present form making a special pension tax mandatory; but will sign the bill if it is amended to make the tax optional with each town. The recall is for the purpose of making this change.

On motion of F. B. Wright, the house recalled from the governor the bill to legalize sale of coal by a Litchfield school director to the local schools. The bill was too general in its terms to suit the governor, and is to be amended (if possible) so that it will apply only to the Litchfield case.

The Carlson bill for the regulation of the sale of mining stocks was killed in the house today.

The house passed the public health committee bill, giving the state board of health the power to establish rules and regulations for the proper sanitation and safety of hotels and lodging houses—a bill which takes the place of the L. H. Johnson measure which met death some time ago because of its drastic provisions.

Senator W. A. Hinton of Martin county also introduced a bill with request of the Governor to permit the state board of health to establish rules for sanitation and public safety in hotels and lodging houses. The bill was referred to the committee on public health.

The House this afternoon indefinitely postponed a fun-maker, in the shape of the bill prohibiting "any female person to wear red, white and blue tights, or other unseemly apparel displaying the national colors at any public performance." There was no ado over the measure's demise.

St. Paul, April 13.—The house today re-passed the anti-cigarette bill which the senate passed several days ago. The bill had been amended by the senate so as to take effect Aug. 1 instead of on enactment.

The house suspended its rules and passed the bill to permit of a special election at Stillwater for election of a new mayor, to succeed J. G. Armson, who resigns to become a member of the state tax commission. This same bill has already passed the senate.

Burdette Thayer of Spring Valley succeeded in getting his anti-discrimination bill passed by the house, 62 ayes, 44 nays. This is the bill which the house a while ago killed, then reconsidered.

The house adopted the recommendation of its judiciary committee recommending for passage the Sullivan senate bill permitting an increase from five to eight in the justices of the state supreme court; also the bill requiring a state license for real estate dealers and brokers.

The packing plant resolution of F. H. Peterson of Moorhead was indefinitely postponed by the senate today.

On motion of John Moonan of Waseca the senate passed a joint memorial resolution, reciting that, whereas, Mrs. E. A. Everett of Minnesota and a number of other American citizens were killed March 19 last in a railroad collision in Mexico, that the United States authorities at Washington be requested to make a thorough investigation of the charges that the wreck was due to intoxication and carelessness of Mexican officials, and see that the guilty be properly punished.

J. T. Elwell of Minneapolis introduced a joint resolution instructing the state tax commission to see that property is assessed the coming two years on the same basis as during the past two years. The resolution has especially in view establishing a basis for the half mill special tax for university support, that the legislature may know what this special levy will raise, having a basis of assessed valuation to figure on. On suggestion of F. E. Putnam of Blue Earth, the resolution was given a place on general orders alongside the university levy bill.

The senate passed the A. D. Stephens bill appropriating $12,500 to pay the state attorneys up to date in the pending state rate cases against the railroads.

The senate this afternoon passed the W. E. Hinton bill to compel passenger elevators to be equipped with a device that shall hold the car at each floor while the landing door is open; and at almost the same hour the house passed the F. E. Nimocks bill, which is practically identical with the Hinton senate bill.

The bill for a legislative reference department, for which Messrs. Washburn, Mattson and Burnquist stood sponsors, was indefinitely postponed by a vote of 39 to 28. The Rosenwald bill for reorganization of the State Agricultural society also went by the indefinite postponement route to the tune of 52 to 50.

Bills passed the house included the measure to pension citizen soldiers of the Indian massacres in Minnesota during 1862, and the Clague senate bill for a constitutional amendment to permit the state to extend road and bridge aid to a maximum of one-half, instead of but one-third, at the expense of the improvement proposed by the county.

St. Paul, Minn., April 14.—The Bjorge tonnage tax house bill was today made a special order by the senate for consideration next Friday at 3 p. m.

The senate considered the Campbell house bill for a liability investigating commission of three, to be appointed by the governor, and passed it, 52 to 0, with a slight amendment. The amendment provides that the commission shall report to the next legislature instead of to the governor. The amendment was offered by J. F. Calhound of Minneapolis.

The so-called "pork-barrel" bill passed the house today without any opposition. This is the measure which appropriated $300,000 for general distribution among the counties for state aid for road and bridge improvements.

The reapportionment bill of Lawrence H. Johnson of Minneapolis was recommended for passage, rather to the surprise of all, by the house committee of the whole late today after lengthy consideration of the measure and material amendment. As amended, it provides for an increased membership for the house, from 119 to 134. The senate is little changed, being increased from 63 to 64. The house left the senate to take care of its own changes. By congressional districts, the increase in the number of representatives compared with the present apportionment is as follows: One in the Second district; one in the Fourth; one in the Fifth; one in the Sixth; three in the Seventh; five in the Eighth; and three in the Ninth—a total increase of 15 members.

In the Eighth district, St. Louis county gets an increase of two, while Carlton, Aitkin, and Cass are each allowed one representative, and Koochiching and Itasca one together.

C. A. Congdon of Duluth succeeded in getting through an amendment which gave one more representative for his, the 51st, district. R. R. Grant of Duluth made a strong plea for more northern Minnesota representatives, reminding the house that taxation without representation is nothing short of tyranny.

The senate spent this afternoon in consideration of the calendar, the special contest being on the James Johnston bill to require railroads to ship cream only in refrigerator cars. Mr. Johnston told the senate that the farmers pasteurize milk for their calves, and that the state should insist that milk be also pasteurized for city babies, or else preserved by shipment in refrigerator cars. The bill carried, 41 ayes, 12 nays. The senate killed the Cooke bill, aimed at prohibiting the hobbling of horses at races.

Disadvantage of Beauty.

"One disadvantage of being good looking," said the woman who admits that she knows she is handsome, "is that I never get a chance to beat my way on the street cars. Just because I am good looking the conductor spots me when I enter the car and he hustles right up to ask for my fare."

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Mankato to Try "Plan."

Mankato.—Mankato will take the first steps to organize the commission plan of government under the enabling act introduced by Senator Works and originally formulated by Senator E. E. Smith of Hennepin.

Mankato will have the distinction of being the first city to try the new plan of government in Minnesota. Duluth is expected to follow.

A subcommittee has formulated a new charter and will submit it to the charter committee. It provides for the election of a mayor and of commissioners along the lines of the system known as the Des Moines plan. It includes the provision of the "recall" for unsatisfactory officials and also provides for the initiative and referendum.

Finds Absent Wife in Morgue.

Minneapolis.—After Peter Johnson, 820 Third avenue south, had waited in vain for his wife all night, he called up police headquarters early in the morning to be told that her body was then at the morgue. The stricken husband hurried to the house of death, where an affecting scene took place when he identified the dead body on the marble slab as that of his wife.

Mrs. Johnson fell dead after finishing her Easter shopping in Powers' store as she was mounting the staircase from the basement to the first floor. The coroner expressed the opinion that death was due to apoplexy and decided that an autopsy would be unnecessary.

Counting on 10,000 Guests.

Sleepy Eye.—Sleepy Eye citizens are making preparations for the entertainment of the Modern Woodmen on June 2 and 3, when the Southern Minnesota Woodmen's Picnic association will hold its annual meeting. It is estimated that over 2,000 delegates from all parts of southern Minnesota will be present. Many of the camps from nearby towns will be here in a body. Cash prizes are to be offered for drills by visiting teams. Head Consul Talbot of Lincoln, Neb., is expected to be present. The city is arranging to entertain at least 10,000 strangers.

Thieves Reign in Town.

Little Falls.—A number of petty robberies have been pulled off in this city during the past week. Tuttle & Jarboe's confectionery store was entered the first of the week and $42 in cash taken. A few nights later the Roble store, across the street, was entered and some tobacco and cigars were taken. Later three box cars in the local yards were opened and some shoes and groceries taken. Some of the stolen goods were afterwards found in the yard with a note from a self-styled yeggman saying that he didn't like the quality of the stolen goods.

Wells.—G. B. Bates died here after a second stroke of paralysis. He was an early settler in this county, and first lived in Seeley township. In the first years of his residence he lived in a frame shack which was destroyed by fire in a terrible blizzard, and while he went for help to a neighbor's his wife took the children to a straw barn for shelter. Mrs. Bates was frozen to death, as were several of the children, but two who were lying close to the cattle were saved.

Young Woman Drinks Acid.

St. Paul.—Miss Minnie Neuenfeldt, 20 years of age, drank two ounces of carbolic acid in her room. She was found in great agony by Mrs. F. B Mellon, with whom the young woman had been boarding for some time.

Alfred E. Merrill Dead.

Minneapolis.—Alderman Alfred E. Merrill of Minneapolis was stricken with apoplexy while walking on Central avenue, St. Paul, and died shortly afterwards.

NEWS NOTES.

Minneapolis.—The attraction at the Bijou Opera House, for the week of April 18th will be Grace Merritt in "When Knighthood was in Flower," the play constructed from Charles Major's widely read book. The time of the piece dates back to the romantic days of King Henry the Eighth, and the action takes place in and about Windsor Castle, the famed home of English sovereigns for many centuries.

Brainerd.—The committee of the Minnesota legislature which visited the fish hatcheries and the proposed sites of hatcheries was at Detroit and visited the site offered for a bass and pike hatchery there. In the afternoon the committee visited the site of the Deerwood hatchery and examined the work done. Two concrete dams have been built and the ground partially cleared and an icehouse built and filled. The members of the committee expressed themselves well pleased with the location.

Minneapolis.—William J. Carroll, the postoffice clerk who was found guilty of stealing letters containing money from the United States mail, was taken to the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kan., to serve two years at hard labor, by a deputy United States marshal.

Hastings.—C. E Reed of Hastings and Miss Wilhelmina Drews of Seaforth, Minn., were quietly married here by Rev. R. L. Lewis. The couple were unattended. They left upon a wedding trip west and will be at home in Hastings after May 1.

SAVING PAINT MONEY

It Cannot Be Done by Using Cheap Material and Cheap Painters.

In arranging for painting, a good many property-owners try to save money by employing the painter who offers to do the job cheapest—or try to save money by insisting on a low-priced paint. But no property-owner would run such risks if he realized what must be taken into consideration in order to get a job that will wear and give thorough satisfaction.

No houseowner will go wrong on the painting question if he writes National Lead Company, 1902 Trinity Building, New York, for their Houseowner's Painting Outfit No. 49, which is sent free. It is a complete guide to painting. It includes a book of color schemes for either exterior or interior painting, a book of specifications, and an instrument for detecting adulteration in paint materials.

Nearly every dealer has National Lead Company's pure white lead. (Dutch Boy Painter trademark.) If yours has not notify National Lead Co., and arrangements will be made for you to get it.

What Charlie Had.

Several of the scholars had returned to Sunday school after being absent some weeks on account of illness. "I had the measles," said one little girl. "I had the mumps," said another. "So did I," said a third. The superintendent heard them, and, addressing a curly-headed boy said: "Well, Charlie, you were absent, too. What did you have?"

Charlie's face flushed. He thought a moment and then sang out in high treble: "I had a little brudder!"—Delineator.

WHAT JOY THEY BRING TO EVERY HOME

as with joyous hearts and smiling faces they romp and play—when in health—and how conducive to health the games in which they indulge, the outdoor life they enjoy, the cleanly, regular habits they should be taught to form and the wholesome diet of which they should partake. How tenderly their health should be preserved, not by constant medication, but by careful avoidance of every medicine of an injurious or objectionable nature, and if at any time a remedial agent is required, to assist nature, only those of known excellence should be used; remedies which are pure and wholesome and truly beneficial in effect, like the pleasant laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna has come into general favor in many millions of well informed families, whose estimate of its quality and excellence is based upon personal knowledge and use.

Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna has also met with the approval of physicians generally, because they know it is wholesome, simple and gentle in its action. We inform all reputable physicians as to the medicinal principles of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, obtained by an original method, from certain plants known to them to act most beneficially, and presented in an agreeable syrup in which the wholesome Californian blue figs are used to promote the pleasant taste; therefore it is not a secret remedy, and hence we are free to refer to all well informed physicians, who do not approve of patent medicines and never favor indiscriminate self-medication.

Please to remember and teach your children also that the genuine Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna always has the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package and that it is for sale in bottles of one size only. If any dealer offers any other than the regular Fifty cent size, or having printed thereon the name of any other company, do not accept it. If you fail to get the genuine you will not get its beneficial effects. Every family should always have a bottle on hand, as it is equally beneficial for the parents and the children, whenever a laxative remedy is required.

WITH THE DERELICT DESTROYERS

BY WALDON FAWCETT

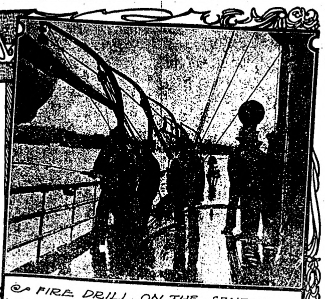
LAUNCHING A LIFE BOAT

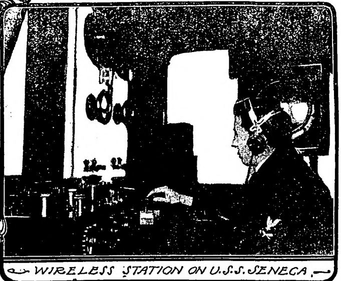


FIRE DRILL ON THE SENECA

THE ocean disaster which resulted in the loss of the steamship Republic, and the prominent part played in the rescue work by the United States steamship Seneca has served to focus public attention for the first time upon a magnificent new government vessel—perhaps the most novel and interesting craft flying the stars and stripes. This newcomer, the Seneca by name, is officially designated a "derelict destroyer" and not only is she a novelty among American ocean-going craft, but is unique in the world, being the first and only vessel of the kind ever designed or constructed. The primary function of the Seneca is, of course, indicated by her title, "derelict destroyer," but the usefulness of the powerful vessel is by no means confined to the removal of derelicts, wrecks or other menaces to navigation, as was eloquently proven by the part she played in the relief of Republic.

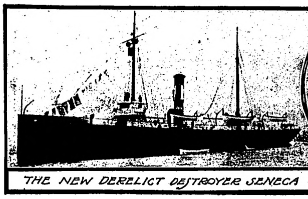
Indeed her role is to be that of a missionary of relief at sea—affording succor not only to imperiled navigators but also to vessels in distress from one cause or another. The need of such a vessel as the Seneca has been keenly felt for years, the more so because with the increase in the commerce of the world there has been a proportionate increase in the number of derelicts sighted each year—those nearly submerged hulks that float hither and thither on the high seas and constitute perhaps the most serious menace to modern navigation and one of the most difficult to avoid.

ON A MISSION OF MERCY

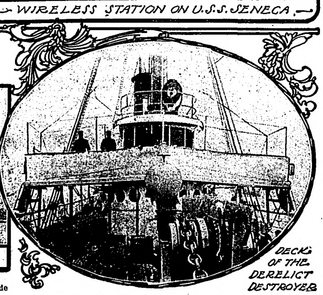


WIRELESS STATION ON U.S.S. SENECA

The agitation of shipping interests etc., for some definite plan of campaign against the deadly derelicts began many years ago and as long as eight years ago a crusade had taken definite form to the extent of almost unanimous advocacy of a derelict destroyer, such as is the cruiser which has recently gone into commission. However, like many another innovation, the project took form slowly and it was not until the Fifty-ninth congress that the national legislature made an appropriation of $250,000 for the construction of the "gun cotton cruiser" which was recently completed at the great ship yard at Newport News, Va. It was eminently appropriate that this good angel of the high seas should be placed under the jurisdiction of the United States revenue cutter service for this branch of the treasury department has, during recent years, devoted an increasing amount of attention to the destruction of derelicts and relief work of all kinds at sea. Indeed, during the winter season, the various revenue cutters that can be assigned to the work form a regular cruising fleet, the ships of which continually traverse the highways of oceanic commerce, prepared to offer aid as needed to vessels in distress. The regular revenue cutters have, on occasion, performed creditable work in the destruction of derelicts but they are none of them so well equipped, of course, for this unusual occupation as is the Seneca, and furthermore, the new "battleship of peace" has exceptional steaming radius—a most important consideration in derelict hunting—and will at all times carry sufficient coal, fresh water and other supplies to enable her to steam across the ocean if necessary.



THE NEW DERELICT DESTROYER SENECA



DECK OF THE DERELICT DESTROYER

The Seneca which has lately undertaken her ingenious patrol of the Atlantic ocean is a spar-deck vessel, 204 feet in length over all, and 34 feet beam, schooner rigged with two pole masts without gaffs. It is of course very important that this ever-ready relief ship shall be readily recognized at great distances by imperiled mariners or other interested persons, and to that end effort has been made to render the ship thoroughly distinctive in appearance. The hull has been painted a dark green, with upper and lower shear moldings light in color from stem to stern; the upper works and boats are white; and the spars and smokestack yellow, the latter having a black band at the top and red, white and blue vertical stripes to the lower guy band. As if this unusual color were not sufficient to arrest attention, the foremast carries a signal yard, from each arm of which is displayed a black spherical shape about three feet in diameter.

At night the Seneca displays a distinguishing signal in the form of two occulting truck lights, red on the foremast and white on the mainmast, with simultaneous 15-second flashes and 15-second intervals. Finally, a powerful wireless telegraph outfit enables communication at all times with other ships and with shore stations.

As tools of her trade the Seneca carries an equipment the like of which was never heretofore to be found on any one vessel. Foremost among these aids are a varied assortment of explosives in various forms, for use in blowing up derelicts. The capacious magazine in the hold of the Seneca can accommodate sufficient dynamite and gun cotton to blow up a whole fleet of ships, but it is intended, of course, to use this destructive energy only in the interest of humanity. For most of her derelict destroying operations the Seneca will make use of the standard United States navy mine and the appliances provided include all the necessary electric cables, etc., for exploding these mines.

Complete as are the facilities of the Seneca for visiting destruction upon menaces to navigation they are more than paralleled by her means of affording succor to disabled ship or sailor. There is a machine shop, manned by men experienced in quick repair work, and a hospital, thoroughly modern in equipment and in charge of a skilled surgeon. A powerful derrick and other similar appliances make the Seneca the equal of any wrecking tug now afloat. Diving apparatus renders possible under-water repairs to damaged vessels and as an alternative in case a damaged craft can not be put into shape to limp into port under her own steam the Seneca has a full complement of steel and manila hawsers and towing machines

Finally, to turn to yet another phase of the Seneca's versatility, it may be mentioned that this interesting new good Samaritan of the high seas is, in effect, a floating life-saving station. She has line-carrying guns, breeches buoys, life and surf boats and, in short, all the utensils of a modern life-saving corps, and her boat crews are trained to handle heavy-sea working boats under all conditions likely to be encountered in rescuing imperiled persons from stranded or foundering ships. Moreover, the Seneca will, at all times, carry an extra supply of provisions for suffering mariners and has surplus quarters where rescued persons may be accommodated until they can be landed at some convenient port.

The Seneca is as powerful as she is staunch. This is essential, for the ship has been designed to be capable of steaming 5,000 miles without once stopping to replenish fuel or other supplies. Obviously she will find her greatest need for activity in stormy weather and she has been designed accordingly. Mention has already been made of the fact that her 1,800 horse power, triple expansion engines may, at any time, be called upon to put forth the extra force necessary to drag a ship as large or larger than the Seneca through long leagues of unruly seas, and energy must also be furnished to operate extra powerful wrecking and fire pumps. Incidentally, it may be noted that the crew of the Seneca is as thoroughly drilled in fire fighting as in life saving and a ship afire at sea will be robbed of much of its menace, once the rescuer Seneca has steamed alongside in response to an alarm sounded by wireless telegraph. This new friend in need to the world's shipping carries eight officers and a crew of 65 men. She is in command of Capt. William E. Reynolds, a veteran of the revenue cutter service and unquestionably one of the ablest and most conscientious officers who has ever worn Uncle Sam's uniform in any service. The Seneca has her permanent station at Tompkinsville, N. Y., and her cruising district will comprise all that portion of the North Atlantic ocean between Portland, Me., on the north and Charleston, S. C., on the south. Of course the vessel will go beyond these limits of occasion demands, but the Gulf stream carries practically all derelicts within this radius.

Comforts of a Snow House

The experience of those who tent in the arctic during the colder winter months is to be summarized about as follows:

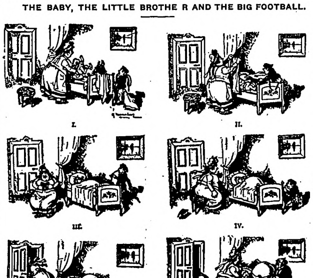
When the tent has been pitched the temperature within it is some 15 or 20 degrees higher than outside, or 30 degrees below if it is 50 below in the open; one is damp and warm from the strenuous exercise of the day, but soon becomes cold, and shivers; one crawls into his sleeping bag and makes entries in the diary clumsily with one's mittens on; the heat from one's body forms hoar frost on everything in the tent, and congeals in the sleeping bag, so that it becomes stiff and heavy with ice during the day's travel, when it freezes, and soaking wet when one gets into it at night and thaws it out; this in turn wets one's clothing, and the trousers and coat freeze stiff as sole leather when one breaks camp in the morning; the 24 hours are a round of wretchedness, and the ice-crusted tent and icy sleeping bags become a heavy load for the sled.

When one follows Eskimo methods the conditions are markedly different. On any treeless open (unless it be perhaps during the first month of winter) an area of compactly drifted snow is easily found; the snow knives of bone and iron, according to circumstances, are brought out and the surface of the drift is divided into blocks of domino shape, say 14 by 30 inches and 4 inches thick; these are then placed on edge and end to end in a circle the size of the desired ground area of the dome-shaped hut; then, on the principles of architecture that apply to domes, whether made of store or snow, the bee-hive house is completed. Two men can in an hour build a house large enough for eight to sleep in. When the house is completed a doorway is cut in its side near the ground, skins are spread over the floor, one brushes himself as clear of snow as possible and crawls inside. The oil lamps are then lit, and the house is soon brought to a temperature considerably above the freezing point; for snow is one of the best-known nonconductors of heat, and the intense cold of the outside penetrates the walls only to a very slight degree. But when the house gets warm the inner side of the snow dome begins to thaw, and the water formed is sucked into the snow, blotter fashion; when this water penetrates far enough into the snow to meet the cold from the outside it freezes, and your snow house is turned into an ice dome so strong that a polar bear can crawl over it without danger of breaking through.

When once inside the house the Eskimos strip naked to the waist and hang their clothes to dry on pegs in the wall. On some journeys we had sheet-iron stoves (procured from whalers in former years), which we installed in the snow houses, and in which we built roaring fires.

One is well placed to take comfort in the ingenuity of man overcoming a harsh environment when, sitting snug, warm and lightly clad, one listens to an arctic blizzard whining helplessly over the ice vault that two hours before was an oval snow bank. I longed for a dressing gown and slippers, but one cannot burden his sled with such luxuries. There was no cold to make the hands numb in writing the diary, no frost to congeal on the bedclothing and make them wet, none of the night's discomforts and the morrow's forebodings that have been the stock in trade of the makers of arctic books. And when we broke camp in the morning we did not burden the sled with an ice-stiffened 100-pound tent, but stuck in our belt the ten-ounce snow knife, our potential roof for the coming night.—Harper's Magazine.

THE BABY, THE LITTLE BROTHE R AND THE BIG FOOTBALL.



Young Hunters Lose Sleep

Now that the hunters are returning from the mountains many are the tales told of pranks played.

One old hunter was telling his friends the other day of a prank he played on a young and energetic hunter from New York, a man who believed he knew all there was to be known of wild animals of the woods.

Every day this ambitious young hunter would go on the hunt for deer alone and return with tales of the hoofprints and other signs he had seen of deer within a short distance of the camp. Every depression among the leaves on the ground, every leaf turned over and every twig snapped was a sure sign, to his mind, that deer had been on the ground, perhaps a whole herd of them.

Early, very early, one morning the old hunter arose quietly and took with him the hoof of a deer that he carried with him for luck—a big buck's hoof—and crept to the tent of the young hunter, where he made imprints on the soft ground all around it. Many times around it went the hoofprints, and then off into the woods.

When the young hunter arose in the morning and saw the prints, clear and distinct, he said nothing, but decided that he would sit up that night and shoot the big buck and so get ahead of his companions; especially the old hunter, who thought he knew so much.

He sat up that night and many other nights in the bitter cold while his companions slept peacefully and comfortably under good warm blankets. The old hunter, after six nights, was merciful and told the young man that it was all a joke.

Sending a young hunter on a cold, windy night to a tree on the edge of a pond a mile or so off and telling him to sit there during the night, as on such a night the deer, and perhaps moose, were sure to appear is another favorite scheme. Of course he is told that the rest of his companions are to be in other trees a few rods distant, but he is to be sure not to call, and if he did they would refuse to answer him. Then his companions go back to camp and sleep well and long while he sits all night in a tree.

First Use of War Balloon.

At the battle of Fleuris, June 26, 1794, in the French revolutionary period, the balloon was for the first time used in the service of the army. The Austrians, stupefied, saw the captive airship Entreprenant above their heads at a height of 300 meters. This apparition greatly angered the Austrian, Gen. Cobourg, who cried out: "Is there anything these scoundrels will not invent?"

"If you only knew what to expect," sighed the hostess; "but you don't and can't. Last month I went out and bought flowers for my party. Then my friends all sent me flowers—roses, carnations, some orchids. This month I didn't buy myself flowers, expecting the same, and, my goodness! There wasn't a single blooming flower in the flat. Not a one of them sent even a bud."

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Enraged Lover Kills Woman, Baby, Self.

Red Wing.—One of the most terrible crimes in the history of Goodhue county was committed when Freda Langen, age 28, and her 2-year-old baby were murdered by Ole O. Odden, Jr., of Minneota who closed the tragedy by sending a bullet crashing through his own brain, dying several hours later. Odden was enraged because the girl to whom he was engaged was about to leave the village and go to Minneapolis, where she was to be employed as a domestic, and where her sister, Mrs. Hanna Langden, 3330 Holmes avenue, resided.

City Not Liable in Damage Cases.

Mankato.—District Judge A. R. Pfau has filed two decisions of much importance to the city of Mankato. He has sustained the demurrer to the complaints in two $5,000 damage suits brought against the city by widows whose husbands died as victims of the typhoid-fever epidemic last year. The city was sued on the ground that it owned and operated the water works system, and that, through incompetent management, the water became polluted and caused an outbreak of typhoid.

Takes Poison and Dies.

Mankato.—Oscar Gilman, who lived near Lake Crystal, was found dying beside a straw stack on Herman Shipman's farm, near Minneopa. He had taken rough on rats, but did not die until some hours later. He refused medical assistance, saying he wanted to die as no one loved him. He had been simple-minded for years, since sustaining a sunstroke. He was single and about 40 years old.

Boy Thieves Go to Reformatory.

Faribault.—Judge Thomas S. Buckham sentenced William Lang, aged 15 years, and Irving Gallagher, aged 14 years, to the reformatory for breaking into the grocery store of Joseph I. Rell last Sunday night and taking what money was left in the cash register, besides some tobacco and other goods. Both pleaded guilty.

Battles with Insane Man.

Waseca.—Sheriff M. McDonough of this county had a strenuous encounter with an insane man here in the county jail. He was closing the door of the maniac's cell when the insane man suddenly attacked him. The scuffling attracted the attention of the other officials in the jail and the maniac was overpowered.

Nominated Seventh Time.

Red Wing.—At the Republican city convention A. P. Pierce, for the seventh time, was nominated to succeed himself as mayor of Red Wing. The other nominations were:

Morse Will Sustained.

Austin.—The will of the late O. B. Morse of Grand Meadow has been under contest in probate court. Morse was an old bachelor who was reared at Wallingford, Conn. He came to Racine, in this county, in 1856, and settled on a farm. There he lived for over fifty years except for a few winters spent in Grand Meadow village. He made a will just before he died giving the bulk of his property, amounting to nearly $100,000, mostly in bank stock, to a few favored relatives, and the contest was made by other relatives of equal nearness. After hearing both sides, the court ordered the will sustained. The principal bequests are to Mrs. W. P. Hoppin of Northfield, a niece, $32,000; Mrs. C. W. Martin of Grand Meadow, a niece, $20,000; C. W. Martin, her husband, $16,000; Isaac L. Belden of Bridgeport, Conn., a nephew, $11,000; Mary Belden of Bridgeport, Conn., a niece, $5,000. The rest is divided in small bequests.

Plotted Murder and Abduction.

Spring Valley.—Six men are prisoners in the county jail accused of complicity in a remarkable kidnaping and murder conspiracy, and other arrests are expected soon.

Emil Dreckman, who lives on a farm about 14 miles south of Spring Valley, was the intended victim of the conspiracy. He received a letter demanding $6,000 and threatening to kill him and abduct his son if he failed to pay the money.

NEWS NOTES.

Marshall.—A. D. Smith, county superintendent of schools of Murray county, has resigned to accept a position in the office of State Treasurer C. C. Dinehart. The county commissioners at a special session appointed Miss Florence Turner of Fulda to fill the unexpired term.

Olson and Victims Live.

Kiester.—The victims of Kiester's triple tragedy are still living, and one of them, Vida Pence, will survive the wound inflicted by her stepfather, K. C. Olson. Her condition is regarded as very favorable. Olson, who shot himself after wounding his wife and the girl, is at the point of death, apparently. His wound is of such a nature that he cannot speak, although he frequently attempts to do so. His wife was shot in the breast and is believed to be mortally hurt. After shooting the woman and the girl, Olson went to an outbuilding and, reloading the gun, turned it upon himself, the charge entering his head near the temple. It was a glancing shot or otherwise he would have died instantly.

Joy Unlimited Over Veto.

Brainerd.—The vetoing of the tonnage tax bill caused much satisfaction in Brainerd. At Deerwood, in the center of the Cuyuna range, all went wild when the news was received. The entire available stock of fireworks was purchased by the enthusiastic miners and iron men, and the town was made almost a pandemonium for several hours by the salute of firearms, cannon crackers and the like. Deerwood is feeling the first pulses of the coming development of the Cuyuna range and every one in the village had been very despondent since the passage of the Bjorge bill, as it was feared that it would retard the development of the properties of the range. With the news of the veto all became wild with joy.

NEWS NOTES.

Tyler.—After discussing anatomy with a friend and speculating on the surest means of inflicting death, Henry Nelson, nineteen years old, of this place, committed suicide by shooting.

Preston.—A. W. Thompson, former deputy state auditor, was elected mayor of Preston without opposition. License was not voted upon and the town will be wet during the coming year.

New Ulm.—Habeas corpus proceedings were instituted last week for the release of Mrs. Josephine Ray, alias Carmody, the fortune teller, who is in jail here awaiting trial on a charge of grand larceny. The hearing was held at Sleepy Eye and Judge Olson of the district court denied the motion.

Rochester.—The trustees of the Presbyterian church of this city have received a letter from Andrew Carnegie, in which he offers to give the local church the sum of $600 for the purchase of a pipe organ, providing the organ costs not less than $1,200. The church has accepted the offer.

Austin.—James A. Boland, 21 years old, is in the Mower county jail in Austin awaiting the action of the grand jury at the June term of court on the charge of grand larceny. The alleged crime for which he is being held was committed in the village of LeRoy on December 19. He informed friends that he had a sum of money coming from his parents in New York and on this pretense issued various checks in exchange for goods.

Rochester.—After a separation of 18 years, two brothers recently met in this city for the first time. Sam Birkeland, of Presho, S. D., came to Rochester on a business trip a few days ago and as time wore heavily on his hands he strolled around the city taking in the sights. On two or three occasions he noticed a stranger watching him and eyeing him very closely and decided to force a meeting with the man. Upon doing so the stranger proved to be his brother, Olax Birkeland, of this city. The meeting was a happy occasion for both, and Sam Birkeland has decided to continue his visit indefinitely in the city.

Thief River Falls.—A singular and most distressing accident befell a farmer of Mahnomen county, whereby he met his death on the right of way of the Soo road. When the daily passenger train reached Thief River Falls it was discovered that portions of a man's body were attached to the cow catcher and on the front of the engine. It was evident that the train had struck some person and had torn the body to shreds. Inquiry was made at all the stations down the line as far as Detroit and in a short time it was learned that portions of a man's body were found along the track near Calloway. Later, upon inquiry, the coroner discovered that the remains were those of Knut Tazson, a well-to-do farmer residing near the town where the accident occurred.

MINNESOTA SOLONS

THIRTY-SIXTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY CLOSES IN HARMONY.

Attempt to Revive Tonnage Tax Question Staved Off By Opponents of the Measure.

St. Paul, April 21.—The legislative session of 1909 drew to a close early this morning, the house adjourning to avoid a vote on the bill to have the state fair annually examined by the public examiner, the senate expending its final energy on a hot fight over the so-called club hall, a house measure to permit private social clubs to dispense liquors without a license.

J. M. Hackney, of Hamline (a republican senator from a largely prohibition district), led the fight against the bill, making a stirring speech in which he declared the bill as opposed to a square deal, one that would stir the country against the legislature, and a measure that would permit of blind-pigging and evasion of the liquor laws in all towns where the mayors stood for a wide-open policy. J. F. Calhoun defended the measure. Hackney offered several amendments, as did Elwell and Peterson. But they were all voted down. Then Ole Sageng, of Otter Tail, arose to a point of order; that the hour was 12:40, being the morning of the last days of the session and that under the constitution the legislature has no right to pass bills the right day, and demanded a ruling on the point from the chair, and an explanation of whether "some lawless man can turn back the senate clock"—for the time piece had been shoved back to 10:45. The chair said to rule on the question might imperil all pending measures which should be considered. On roll call for final passage of the bill, it failed, 32 nays to but 26 ayes.

In the house, Messrs. Nolan and Zelch started a filibuster as soon as the bill for examination of the state fair by the public examiner was reached. They made various motions to kill time, and proposed several amendments. The final result was the carrying of a motion to adjourn.

One veto came from the governor tonight; the senate judiciary bill, a substitute for the Pugh bill to relieve the Le Sueur and Rat Portage Lumber companies from certain judgments secured against them on timber for which they had fully paid the state, but failed to remove from state land on contract time. The substitute bill established a compromise commission consisting of the attorney general and two justices of the supreme court to be named by the governor, to consider all requests for such settlements. The veto declared it a dangerous principle to permit state judgments to be compromised in such a manner.

Important bills passed by the senate before adjournment included the following: by Duea, providing the county shall get 10 per cent of liquor license moneys; by Rosenwald, to tax freight lines 6 per cent of earnings; by drainage committee, to authorize a topographical survey of the watersheds of the state to establish a state drainage system; by Stuart, to reduce the mortgage registry tax to 10 cents per $100 of face value; by Rodenberg, providing uniform system of accounting and reports for companies paying gross earnings taxes; by Mackenzie, to grant pensions of $12 a month to citizen soldiers of the 1862 Indian uprising (similar to Wright bill which was vetoed yesterday); by illuminating oils committee, providing for gravity test of oils, inspection of gasoline, and permitting $30,000 to be used in salaries of inspectors; by Lobeck, the so-called anti-white slave bills to prohibit bringing immoral women in the state or holding them for unpaid debts; house substitute for Elwell senate bill, to appropriate $175,000 for each of the coming two years for university campus extension. These were all house bills and but await action by the governor to become laws.

In the house, important bills passed tonight include: by Hackney, to appropriate $30,000 for establishment of a correspondence school of inspection at the state agricultural college and to send out instructors to the farmers; by Pugh, to permit the town of Duluth to vote on refunding $10,000 of pioneer day bonds illegally given as a bonus to certain parties; judiciary committee, to permit the secretary of state to secure bids for publishing supreme court reports; by Putnam and Dale, to permit towns to vote on whether they shall demand road taxes to be paid in cash; by V. L. Johnson, prohibiting the use of false statements to obtain credit.

The Clague bill, to prevent fraud by the publication of false financial statements, was killed in the senate, Moonan denouncing it because any party made defendant could be taken to any place where the circular in question happened to be. Peterson declared the measure one for the benefit of collection agencies.

St. Paul, Minn., April 22.—The thirty-sixth session of the Minnesota legislature drew to a harmonious conclusion at 1 p. m. today, with exchanges of gifts, extension of good wishes, and hearty farewells. Personal and factional differences were forgotten, and the utmost good feeling prevailed.

There was an echo of the tonnage tax contest in both house and senate by the introduction of a resolution in each body instructing the state tax commission to increase the assessment of the iron ore properties from $190,000,000 to $300,000,000. Carl Wallace of Hennepin gave notice of debate in the house to this resolution which was introduced by C. M. Bendixen of Morgan, which prevented action for the day, and as this was the last day, killed the proposition. In the senate, George R. Laybourn gave like fatal treatment to the same resolution introduced by T. E. Cashman of Owatonna. A house resolution by A. K. Ware censuring the tonnage tax veto received notice of debate by Carl Wallace.

The senate also passed the Mattson house resolution, on motion of E. S. Durment of Ramsey, which provides that a committee of 3 house members and 2 senators, be named to investigate the feasibility of disposing of the old capitol building and grounds, and use the funds so raised for erection of an annex office building nearer the new capitol; this committee to report to the next session.

The senate also adopted a resolution by C. J. Swanson of Fridley instructing the state livestock board not to exceed its appropriation in the allowance of claims. On motion of George H. Sullivan of Stillwater, E. E. Smith of Minneapolis was reelected president pro tem of the senate.

Julius Coller of Scott county, democrat, moved that the thanks of the senate be extended to Lieut. Gov. A. O. Eberhart for his fairness and courtesy to one and all in his efficient work as presiding officer. He requested that Albert Schaller of Dakota county, as dean of the senate, put the motion. Senator Schaller did so, and it was adopted unanimously by a rising vote.

George P. Wilson of Minneapolis offered a resolution of thanks for the efficiency of the secretary of the senate and his desk assistants.

"Why not include all the senate employees in that motion?" suggested Virgil Seward.

"There's a lot of the employees here I don't even know," responded Senator Wilson, causing a general laugh, and the resolution was adopted in its original form.

Then came the usual resolution requesting gratuities, most of them being turned down. The two telephone operators and telegraph operators (who are not legislative employees) were allowed $100 each. James Ege, sergeant at arms, secured a raise in his pay of $2.50 per day to apply for the session, his remuneration having been $5 a day. Mrs. L. C. Goodnow, stenographer and clerk for the finance committee, was also allowed $2.50 per day extra for the session, in recognition that her services had been so efficient that the committee had needed no other help during the session. E. A. Nelson, engrossing clerk, also received an award of $2.50 per day extra for the session.

In the house, there were also a large number of resolutions for gratuities considered, but all of them turned down. Then came presentations. R. J. Wells in the name of the house, presented Speaker A. J. Rockne with a beautiful gold watch. G. E. Mackenzie in the name of the members, presented L. H. Johnson, chairman of general legislation and former speaker, with a handsome watch chain. "Johnny" Jones, reading clerk, in the name of the "third house," presented the speaker, Mr. Rockne, with a handsome easy chair and a mantel clock. R. F. Grant, for the tri-county delegation, gave John Lennon, its chairman, a diamond ring. L. H. Johnson, in the name of the tax committee, gave John Dalzel, its chairman, a ring. Appropriate speeches accompanied each presentation and were feelingly responded to.

Just before the senate adjourned, Lieut. Gov. Eberhart made a brief address, expressing his deep regret at the coming separation and stating that his work had been made easy by the universal courtesy and kindness of the members of the senate. He said the session had been charged with being conservative, but that this is a good fault. He expressed one regret—that the close of the session saw no enactment of a re-apportionment bill.

PARDONS FOR EXILES

ALLEGED CONSPIRATORS IN GOEBEL MURDER FREED BY KENTUCKY GOVERNOR.

MAY RETURN TO THE STATE

Taylor, Finley and Four Others Accused as Slayers, After Nine Years Are Relieved of Charges by Action of Executive.

Frankfort, Ky.—Pardons were granted Friday night by Gov. Willson which clear the dockets of the Kentucky courts of all charges growing out of the assassination of Senator William Goebel, who had been declared governor in January, 1900., except those against state's evidence witnesses. Those pardoned without trial are: Former Gov. W. S. Taylor and former Secretary of State Charles Finley, who have been fugitives in the state of Indiana for nine years; to John Powers, brother of Caleb Powers, who is believed to be in Honduras; to Holland Whittaker of Butler county, John Davis of Louisville, and Zach. Steele of Bell county, under indictment and who did not flee the state.

Those over whom indictments are left hanging are Wharton Golden of Knox county, now in Colorado; Frank Cecil of Bell county, now a railroad detective in St. Louis, and William H. Culton of Owsley county, said to have died in the west a few months ago.

These cases, with the possible exception of Cecil, will be dismissed, leaving Henry E. Youtsey, now serving a life sentence in the state penitentiary, the only person to suffer for the taking off of Goebel.

Reiterating the belief he expressed some months ago, when he granted pardons to Caleb Powers and James B. Howard, that no one but Youtsey had part in the murder, and that it was not a conspiracy, as the commonwealth charged, Gov. Willson says he believes it a "sacred duty, which I must no longer delay, to carry this belief into effect," and grant pardon to the men charged, and who fled the state as they "had the greatest reasons to believe" that they could not "have a fair trial," and if they stayed here would be forced to trial before a partisan jury under conditions which would give them no chance at all for a just decision.

In extending clemency in the Taylor case, the governor, after reviewing the state gubernatorial election of 1899 and the contest instituted before the legislature by Senator William Goebel, says:

"For years it seemed as if there never would be an end of the political use of the Goebel murder to keep up hatred and contention. In the campaign of 1907 it was again brought up, as it had been in every campaign since 1899, by speeches in which it was claimed that the Democratic nominee for governor would not pardon Taylor, Powers and others, and that the Republican nominee would pardon them if elected.

"I made no answer to these speeches until I came to the home of Powers in the mountains, where I told the people, his friends, that I would not prejudge these cases; that I would not promise anybody either to pardon or not to pardon these men, but that if the cases ever came before me I would take them up officially and decide them on their merits, and that I was as anxious for the conviction and punishment of every person guilty of the murder of William Goebel as anyone in Kentucky.

"There is no need to repeat here the statements of the Powers and Howard cases; they are well known to the people. The study of these records constrained me to believe, to the exclusion of a doubt, that Howard did not fire the shot which killed Goebel.

"The only evidence in all of the four trials of Powers and three trials of Howard by which the prosecution in any way attempted to connect Gov. Taylor with the murder was the testimony as to his writing to get Howard to come to Frankfort to kill William Goebel, and tending to show that Howard, on the request in that letter, did come to Frankfort, entered into the plot and committed the murder.

"But Howard did not kil Goebel, and Gov. Taylor could not be guilty of getting Howard to do what he did not do.

"From the fair, impartial study of all of the trials and from my knowledge of the conditions of these times, I believe that William S. Taylor had no guilty knowledge of the murder of William Goebel, and that he would never have been indicted but for political excitement and passion."

The governor then reviews the cases of the other defendants, against whom he says there was no proof of conspiracy.

In a statement issued at Indianapolis Taylor and Finley expressed their gratitude for relief from the burden of being exiles. Taylor will remain in Indianapolis but Finley will return to Williamsburg, Ky

ILLINOIS WOMAN THE VICTOR

MRS. MATTHEW T. SCOTT TO HEAD D. A. R.

Administration Candidate Defeats Mrs. Story of New York by Eight Votes.

Washington. — Men and women of Illinois here in Washington are happy over the victory of Mrs. Matthew T. Scott of Bloomington in her race for the presidency of the Daughters of the American Revolution. Backed by the administration Mrs. Scott defeated her rival, Mrs. William Cummings Story of New York, 436 to 428.

Mrs. Scott's election was a victory for the administration faction. A number of delegates refused to make the election unanimous on Mrs. Story's motion.

The second office in point of honor, that of vice-president general in charge of organizations, however, went to the anti-administration followers by the election of Mrs. Miranda B. Tulloch of this city.

The congress approved the election of the various state regents. They included the following: Alabama, Mrs. Robert A. McClellan; Arizona, Mrs. Walter Talbot; Arkansas, Mrs. John Barrow; California, Mrs. Frederick J. Laird; Colorado, Mrs. Frank Wheaton; Florida, Mrs. J. M. Mahoney; Georgia, Mrs. P. W. Godfrey; Idaho, Mrs. David H. Tarr; Illinois, Mrs. John C. Ames; Indiana, Mrs. John J. Dinwiddie; Iowa, Miss Harriet Lake; Kansas, Mrs. George T. Guernsey; Kentucky, Mrs. Sarah H. Chenault; Michigan, Mrs. J. P. Brayton; Minnesota, Mrs. Edgar H. Loyhed; Missouri, Mrs. Samuel G. Green; Montana, Mrs. Emil H. Renisch; Nebraska, Mrs. O. S. Ward; New Mexico, Mrs. L. B. Prince; Ohio, Mrs. Clayton R. Truesdall; Oklahoma, Mrs. William J. Pettee; Pennsylvania; Mrs. H. P. Perley; South Carolina, Mrs. Robert M. Bratton; Tennessee, Mrs. William G. Spencer; Texas, Mrs. Seabrook W. Sydnor; Washington, Mrs D. A. Gove; West Virginia, Mrs. R. H. Edmondson; Wisconsin, Mrs. Ogden H. Fethers; Wyoming, Mrs. H. B. Patten.

LAKE SHIP SINKS; FIVE DEAD

Steamer Eber Ward Strikes Ice Floe in Lake Michigan and Goes to Bottom.

Mackinaw, Mich.—Five men were drowned Tuesday when the steamer Eber Ward collided with a heavy ice floe and sank five miles west of here.

The dead are John Hern, James Perry, John Meberoth, Kinney McKay and an unidentified deckhand.

The survivors are Capt. T. Le May, First Mate A. P. Galino, Chief Engineer Frank Baldwin, Second Engineer S. R. Shipman, Wheelsmen Charles Lester and Frank Gutch, Deckhand August Palmer, Steward John Winterhaler and Mrs. Winterhaler and Al Quin.

The boat went to the bottom in one of the deepest spots of the Straits of Mackinaw and will be a total loss together with her cargo of corn. She was bound from Milwaukee to Port Huron, Mich.

So completely was the bow of the steamer shattered by the collision with the ice floe that she was flooded from stem to stern almost instantly. Five of her crew were caught without warning asleep in their bunks and went to the bottom with the sinking steamer.

No Parole for Stensland Now.

Joliet, Ill. — Paul O. Stensland will not be pardoned nor paroled at present, in spite of a most eloquent appeal made in his behalf by Attorney Clarence Darrow of Chicago Tuesday afternoon. While the decision of the board had not been made public and will not be until the official report of the board is made to Gov. Deneen at Springfield, the attitude of the board is known.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

We are in reciept of a copy of congressman Steenersons speech delivered in the house of Representatives on April 6th, and it is a masterly argument against the reduction of the tariff on Canadian barley, from 30 to 15 cents a bushell. The passage of the bill would mean a reduction in the price of barley of 15 cts. a bushell, and Mr. Steenerson is putting up a good fight to defeat it, for the interest of the farmers of his disirict, with a very good prospect of success.

TWO WAYS TO GET WHAT YOU WANT.

An honorable way, and a dishonorable way.

If you want a permission from the government to build a bridge across Red Lake River, at any point on a section line, employ an attorney to draw up an application for you in legal form to present to the government. Then have your town, or county board indorse it. Then hitch up your team and drive down to St. Hilaire and employ an experienced engineer to come up and, take the measurements and draw the plans of your proposed bridge to file with the war department. Then send all papers to congressman Steenerson, and he will get an act through congress granting you the permission. This is the honorable way. Another way is to wait until your neighbor goes to all this expense and then get up a petition and try to steal his bridge site, and if he objects, to your doing it; just tell him that he should not kick and stir up a row in the town This would be the method employed by dishonorable men If you want a cow the honorable way to get it is to go and buy it. If you want to get it in a dishonest way, wait until your neighbor buys, then go and try to steal his cow, and it he catches you at it and trys to stop you; just tell him to not kick, but let you have the cow and not stir up a row in the town. If you want a new coat the honorable way to get it, is, to go to your merchant and buy it. The dihonest way to getit is, to wait until your neighbor buys it, then go and try to steal it from him, and if he catches you tiying to steal his coat and tryes to stop you; just tell him to keep quiet and let you have the coat, and not stir up a row in the town.

We will render any assistance we can to any one wanting to get a bridge permission in the former, honorable way, but if you want to get it in the latter, the the dishonest way, you might see Swanson, who writes communications for a sheet up at Erie, got out by a peaked head, that says "he is a printer", and they might help you out, for the newspaper work. Then you would be stuck for a town clerk, that would certify to congressman Steenersor, that a muskeg swamp had been traveled as a road for four years But you might get Swanson and Vrolstor to sign as ex-town clerks. Then have Lattimore sign, as ex-candidate for town clerk, that was still a running. Then have them write to Steenerson and tell him they would like to certify as town officials, but they got hit by the tail end of a cyclone at the last springs election and got put out of business.

SKINNED ALIVE.

Town Clerk Singer Answers

Rhoda Minn. April 25th, 1909.

To W A. Swanson.

I see you have had published, in answer to my article in The Sunbeam, another one of your misleading articles regading the sentiment of the people of Deer Park, as to the location a bridge across Red Lake River in the eastern part of the county.

Now I wish to state, that the Red Lake River runs throu part of our town as well as town of Highlanding, and think we have just as good a right to say where we want the bridge located as the people of Highlanding, when the state of Minnesota is paying for it, and if you are representing the people of this town, why are you so affraid to mention the names of a few of them? You know the names of all of your neighbors have been published as signers on the petition for a bridge at its present location, and yet you have "gall,, enough to come out in print and say "you are voiceing the sentiment of the people." As a matter of fact Mr. Swanson you are working in the interests of a few men on the north side of the river, that are useing you as a "tool" "tool'e" or "toolie", for their own private gain, and you should have more honor and principal than to try to misrepresent and betray the interest of your town, as you have in this matter.

As to my standing in the this town as compared to yours, the people spoke at the last election, when we were opponents for the office of town clerk, and if you want to hear a farmer laugh long and loud, just tell him that Swanson said he voted for me for town clerk. Of course we could not prove you sold out, but if you did the fellow that bought you got badly beat. If he gave you two codfish for your influence in this town, he got beat out of a codfish and a half, as I would not give a quater of codfish for a man that would try to betray the interests of his neighbors and run them into a swamp, as you are trying to do.

If you take such a thundering interest in the Highlanding creamery, why is it that your father, who is a shareholde in that creamery, is hawling his cream to the Clearwater Creamery? Is it not a fact that he has a good ferry to cross on at High landing, but can not get across the swamp south of there to get to it? You know these are facts, and yet we suppose you will come out with an other statement of how you are takeing such an interest in the dear people of High landing, liveing on the north side of the river, that you are willing to betray the interests of your neighbors and your own town to them.

You had better keep your postage to pay for fowarding your "Communications", instead of writing personal letters to me, and then you get the me t picked out of this we will crack you up another one, as we don't propose to have you come any of your Benedict Arnold games on the town of Deer Park.

Yours Touly,

EDWARD SINGER.

Philosopher and Philanthropist.

"Coquelin was very charitable," said a theatrical manager. "He did more for superannuated actors and actresses than any other man in France. I once heard him speak on charity in the French Actors' home, that he did so much for.

"'There are plenty of philanthropists,' said Coquelin. 'There are plenty of philosophers—plenty, I mean, according to the definition that too many of us accept.'

"He smiled grimly.

"'Too many of us,' said Coquelin, 'define a philosopher as one who bears with resignation the cold and hunger from which his neighbor is suffering, and too many of us define a philanthropist as one who gives away other people's money.'"

Called the Deal Off.

A lad attending school craved a little holiday one morning when he started out to wrestle once again with the trials incident to getting an education. As he entered the schoolroom he hatched a plot to get the coveted holiday. He went up to the teacher's desk and told his story. "My mother wants to know if you won't excuse me for today?" he began. "She wants me to do some work at home and thought if I'd study at home this evening and make up what I'd missed mebby you'd let me off."

Something about the lad's manner kept the words from carrying conviction. The teacher bluffed back as follows: "Tommy," said she, "you won't need to go home at all. Since you started to school your mother called me on the phone to tell me that she had changed her mind and for you to stay here."

The lad looked at her, startled. "Aw, well," he said, "as long as both of us are lyin' about it let's just call it quits. I'll stay here."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Wealthy Soldier's Idea.

Australians still tell stories of the colonial volunteers, although the war is a far memory. One, a member of the Stock Exchange, was left one wet and miserable night to guard a wagon load of goods. He shivered in the unsheltered place for some hours pondering many things, and then a bright thought struck him just as the colonel came around on his tour of inspection.

"Colonel," he asked, "how much is this wagon worth?"

"I don't know," was the answer. "Much, or little, we can't afford to lose it."

"Well, but, colonel," persisted the amateur soldier, "you might give me a rough idea of the value."

"About £200," said the colonel testily.

"Very well," was the answer; "I will come down to the camp and give you a check for the amount. Then I'll turn in. I wouldn't catch my death of cold for twice that much."

What the colonel said is not recorded.—Melbourne Times.

The Glowworm Cavern.

The greatest wonder of the antipodes is the celebrated glowworm cavern, discovered in 1891 in the heart of the Tasmanian wilderness. The cavern or caverns (there appears to be a series of such caverns in the vicinity, each separate and distinct) are situated near the town of Southport, Tasmania, in a limestone bluff, about four miles from Ida bay. The appearance of the main cavern is that of an underground river, the entire floor of the subterranean passage being covered with water about a foot and a half in depth. These wonderful Tasmanian caves are similar to all caverns found in limestone formation, with the exception that their roofs and sides literally shine with the light emitted by the millions of glowworms which inhabit them.

How Ledgers Got Their Name.

On the authority of the best lexicographers "ledger" is an adaptation of a once common word, "ligger," signifying any large book suited better for lying on a desk than for carrying about. Sometimes this was applied to a large account book, cartulary, or the like, frequently a great breviary for use in church, as distinct from a "portas," or small one, carried by a "book bosom priest." "Coucher" is another old synonym for "ligger," the forrunner of the now general "ledger."

A Dangerous Subject.

Professor Henry Drummond when a boy discovered that he could hypnotize people. At a birthday party a little girl declined to play the piano. Drummond happened to catch her eye and said, "Play." To his surprise she rose at once, went to the piano and played. At another time he hypnotized a boy and gave him a poker for a gun. "Now," said Drummond, "I'm a pheasant. Shoot me." The boy did so, and Drummond fell to keep up the illusion, whereupon the boy, seeing the "bird" move, was about to hit it over the head with the poker. The hypnotizer had just time to stop the magnetized sportsman.—Pearson's Weekly.

THE LOCAL NEWS.

Snow on tap to-day, have some?

There will be a meeting held at the Peter Hedeen school house on Sunday May 9th, at 11 o'clock a.m., and at the school house by Salve T. Myrums place at 4 o'clock p.m.

We understand there was a curly headed fellow driveing around the north eastern part of this town last week, with a cuple of codfish in his bugry inquiring for the man that "communicates" for the leven towns to help people to steal bridge sites.

We have never seen the water so low in the Red Lake River, for the past four years as it is at the present time, and should the low water continue it will hang up all boating and make it very difficult for the lumber companys to get their logs down.

Andrew Ellingson informs us, that he will get his ferry, at Highlanding ready to ferry for the season as soon as the ice thaws out of it. This ferry was built by Mr. Ellingson two years ago and has been a great accomidation to people that have wanted to cross with teams at that place.

The Kratka creamery is haveing quite a searious time in geting water. At last accounts they had drilled to a depth of 180 feet and had not struck water. The remarkable thing about it is, that the well is only 150 feet from the Red Lake River, the bed of which is not more than 15 feet from the surface.

The Red Lake county court house, at Red Lake Falls was entirely distroyed by fire on Friday evening last. The fire was discovered at 8 o'clock p.m., and is supposed to have caught from a defective chimney. All books and papers were saved in the vaults, and as the old shack was well insured it will not be any great loss to the county.

We extend our thanks to Mr. Swanson for the grand send off he gave THE SUNBEAM, as an advertiseing medium last week Had the same thing been published in the thing he "Communicates" for Mr. Jacobson would not be botherd at all, for no one would ever seen it, but it was in the paper, "that the people take home and read."

We hope northern Minnesota, is haveing their last snow storm of the season to day. The snow fell to a depeth of two inches last night, but is rapidly melting away to day. Of course we northern Minnesotians do not pay any attention to little matters of this kind and soon forget it, when we see our healthy looking fields of grain in the merry month of June, for if Minnie is a little slow in the spring, she always "gets thare" in the fall and is sure to bring a bumper crop with her.

We have just learned that the reason that Lattimore and Swnson had to mark their brilliant? "communications" of half a colum in length "to be contiaued" was because it took them so much time to corect the errors in THE SUNBEAM, for which we are very sorry, but we attended the state University between two plow handles, and graduated with honor, back of a farmers barn behind a manure fork, and our office pup got at our old Webster dictionary and distroyed it, so now when we have anything to say, we just crawl up on the type stool, and "lash it to um" and if our high tohed gentelmen don't understand what we mean, they can ask our farmer subscribers, and they will tell them, and they will not have to go far to find one, as they found them plentiful enough to suit them on the last election day.

Do your Notary Public business at the SUNBEAM office.

The late spring has caused a shortage of hay, which will cause some loos to our dairymen.

James O'Brien, C. L. Clark, Roy Livingston and Mr. Boss were assisting Joe O'Toole to raise his new log barn, on Monday.

We expect to be absent from home, at Thief River Falls on next Monday and Tuesday. Anyone haveing business to do with us will, will call on Wednesday.

If you get hungry going down to Thief River Falls, stop at The Soo Cafe, near the Soo depot, and get a lurch, or a square meal at a reasonable price.

George Jarman, Proprietor

Says He Is A Printer.

There is a feller up at Erie gets out a kind of weekly sheet, that says he's a printer. It is lucky he has published this statement, as the few people that have seen the thing would have no idea that he was a printer, by looking at his paper. As we know hundreds of people will see this that never herd of him or his paper we will mentor some of his "make up" styles At the head of its editorial colum he has weekly the one word, "communicated" and under it he has set weely three or four sticks of type and under that "to be continued next week." The rest of the colum he has filled up with with old dead head adds. His communication writer is the famous Swanson, who at one time used to write for this paper, but we cut him out when he came pretty near getting us into a libel suit because we published some of his dirty lies that he wrote about his neighbors, and that they could prove were lies by the records of the county auditor. Then he got busy the rest of the summer writeing "communications" to have himself published as a liar, to save his carcass from going into a criminals cell for criminal libel, and we have the record to prove that what we say is true. This is the man whose name you publish weekly under a string of lies, that he is representing the interests of the respectiable farmers of Deer Park township, then say you are a printer.

It is related that once a German American, growing more and more afflicted with extreme nervousness, got the impression that he was forgetting English. The impression got so strong that he refused to talk anything but German. Then he became convinced that he was forgetting that, closed up like an oyster and was led away to a sanitarium, where he spent his days in complete silence.

A course of treatment was prescribed for him in which baths played an important part. Every morning the dumb German American was thrown bodily into a tub filled with very hot water, allowed to remain there awhile and then hauled out and set to cool on the piazza.

But once the sanitarium acquired a new attendant who got his signals mixed. He was told to bathe the German American. Filling a tub with ice cold water, he threw the patient into it.

"You ——! You confounded ——!" roared the dumb man, beside himself with fury. "You ——!" Then he switched to German. "Du verfluchter Esel! Du ——!"

The doctors pronounced him cured, and he left the sanitarium the next day.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Domestic Hen.

Joe Jefferson used to tell this one:

"In the spring of 1892, being in the vicinity of West Swanzey, N. H., I drove over to call on my old friend, Den Thompson. It happened that I called at an inopportune time, as the women folk were housecleaning. In fact, I noticed as I drove up to the house that the clotheslines in the yard back of the house were laden with carpets.

"Den was very anxious that I should look over his prize fowls, in which he took especial pride. We went out into the big yard back of the house. As Den was pointing out to me his favorites we noticed one old hen going through some queer antics. She was pecking away at something on the ground, lifting it in her bill and dropping it again.

"'What's the matter with the old Biddy, anyway, Den?' I asked.

"Den was silent for a minute, then drawled out:

"'Well, you see, Joe, as she's a rather domestic sort of hen I cal'late the old girl must be getting ready to lay a carpet.'"—New York Telegraph.

Daintiness In Dough.

A west side family that abhors all products of the bakeshop advertised for a maid of all work.

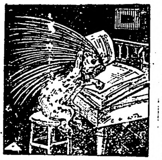
"Can you make bread?" was the question put to each applicant.

Of all the maids who professed to own that accomplishment the mistress chose the one with the frailest hands and arms.

"I don't know about the wisdom of that choice," ventured a male member of the family. "Wouldn't it have been better to pick out a sturdier girl?"

"Not at all," said the lady. "What we require in this family, above all things, is good bread. We half live on bread. I am confident I have chosen a good breadmaker. A girl with rather delicate hands always makes better bread than one whose fists are like sledge hammers. Bread to be good needs to be coddled in the kneading. The light fingered do that instinctively, but the heavy handed slam and bang the very life out of the dough."—New York Globe.

Looking For His Pen.



Porcupine Bookkeeper—How annoying! Just a moment ago I stuck my quill pen back of my ear, and now I can't find it!—New York Herald.

Forehanded.

The London Telegraph tells of a small girl who entered a grocer's shop in Whitechapel and said:

"Please, sir, I wants 'arf a pound of butter and a penn'orth of cheese, and muvver says she will send a shilling in when farver comes home."

"All right," replied the man.

"But," continued the child, "muvver wants the change, cos she 'as got to put a penny in the gas meter."

Conceit.

Conceit is that attitude of the mind which convinces a man that if he had only lived soon enough he would have been the author of the Bible.—Detroit Free Press.

I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience. I know no way of judging of the future but by the past.—Patrick Henry.

Their Designs.

Bishop (kindly)—And all these lovely young ladies whom I have just met in the guild room have some common bond?

Curate (modestly)—Yes. They all hope to marry me.—Judge.

The Substitution.

It is a well known fact that both Sir Arthur Sullivan and Sir W. S. Gilbert had a horror of the titles of their operas becoming known until the very night of their performance. This fear that they might be forestalled created considerable confusion at the initial production of "Iolanthe; or The Peer and the Peri." The opera was rehearsed for weeks under the title of "Perola." It was only at the dress rehearsal that the company was instructed to substitute the name "Iolanthe" for that of "Perola" wherever it occurred in the text or lyrics. It was no easy task to replace vocally and in the dialogue a name of three syllables for one of four. Sullivan, however, said (maybe aside) to one or two of the actors who were nervous: "Go ahead and sing the music. Gilbert won't be in front" (Gilbert never attended the first night), "so use any name that you think of first if you are rattled. No one in the audience will be any wiser."—Boston Post.

Young's Impromptu.

To most persons Edward Young is the author of "Night Thoughts" and nothing more, but he was also a man of the world and a shrewd and caustic wit as well as the rector of St. Mary's church at Welwyn.

It was there in the garden of the rectory that he composed some of the best impromptu verses known. He was walking with two ladies when some one summoned him to the house. His companions were agreeable, and he was in no haste to leave them. Turning as he reached the gate, he said:

Thus Adam looked when from the garden driven
And thus disputed orders sent from heaven.
Like him, I go and yet to go am loath;
Like him, I go, for angels drove us both.
Hard was his fate, but mine still more unkind;
His Eve went with him, but mine stays behind.

The Alternative.

"If the window had been eight feet from the ground," pouted the young wife, "instead of eight stories, I'd have thrown myself out when you quarreled with me. Then you'd have had to be sweet to me when you picked me up. A lot of wives attempt suicide, they say, just to be petted when they come to."

"Yes," said he, "but sometimes they don't come to, remember."—New York Press.

Marlin

THE Marlin Model 1894 is a medium light weight repeating rifle, a well proportioned, finely balanced gun with all the advantages and comforts of the Marlin solid-top, side-ejecting construction. Its quick and easy of operation, accurate up to 300 yards and a very pleasant gun to carry and to shoot.

For settled districts and farming country where the shooting at woodchucks, badgers, foxes, coons, hawks, etc., is at ranges from 100 to 200 yards, the .25-20 and .32-20 rifles in this model are low-pressure smokeless loads cannot be equalled for accuracy and safety. The factory ammunition for the Model '94 rifles is cheap, and can be reloaded at very small cost.

The up-to-date sportsman needs the "Marlin Book" every day in the year. It contains 136 pages of live stuff for the man who loves a good gun, and wants to know everything about it. FREE for 3 stamps postage.

Fourteenth Century Doctors.

Synge's "Social Life in England" quotes a number of fourteenth century hints to success for physicians:

Suppose you know nothing, say there is an obstruction of the liver. Perhaps the patient will say, "Nay, master, it is my head or legs that trouble me." Repeat that it comes from the liver, and especially use the word "obstruction," for patients do not understand it, which is important.

Never dine with a patient who has not paid you. It will be cheaper to get your dinner at an inn, for such feasts are usually deducted from the surgeon's fee.

When you are treating a wound or accident, the friends of the patient should be excluded, for they may faint and cause a disturbance, but sometimes a higher fee may be got from persons present fainting and breaking their heads against wood and the like than from the principal patient.

WESTERN CANADA'S HAPPY PROSPECTS.

In no year since the development of Western Canada began has spring brought a brighter outlook than it brings this year. In no preceding spring has there been greater assurance of advancing development and prosperity. The movement of immigration has already assumed large proportions, and is as desirable in character as it is satisfactory in volume; from across the Atlantic sturdy, industrious and thrifty newcomers are arriving in large numbers, homeseekers from Ontario and the other older Provinces are coming in a steady stream, and from across the international boundary a movement is already in full flow, which, it is confidently predicted, will beat the records of all previous years; special settlers' trains are crossing the line, loaded with effects, actual material wealth being thus brought into the country at the rate of millions of dollars' worth monthly.

The movement is so unprecedentedly large that extra Dominion Immigration officials have had to be provided at both North Portal and at Emerson, and it is estimated that the total number of new settlers from the United States this year will be 70,000, at least, and may run well up toward 100,000. Last year's total of new settlers from the South was 53,723; thus the area that will be placed in wheat and other grains this year will greatly exceed that of last year. Settlers are making extraordinary efforts to get on their lands and begin seeding operations. The price of wheat now, away above the dollar mark, is incentive enough, and when one has in view the splendid results that the past few years have shown, it is not to be wondered at that the present will be the banner year for Immigration to Canada. Ask your nearest Canadian Government Agent for rates of transportation, and he will also send you illustrated pamphlets.

WEAK TEAMS STRENGTHENED

Last Year's Second Division Clubs in Big Leagues Threaten to Unseat Leaders—New Outfield for New York Nationals—World's Champions Not to Have Kling and Evers.

The umpire's cry of "Play ball!" has resounded throughout the major league circuits and the baseball season of 1909 has been started on the long six months' race pennantward.

After many weeks of preparation and training in the south, the sixteen clubs composing the National and American leagues have started their annual diamond struggle and will fight it out to the finish.

Rarely has a season opened so auspiciously for the sport of baseball. Weak spots have been strengthened in all the teams, and baseball sharps declare at least five teams in each of the big league must be reckoned as serious contenders for the championship.

The weeding out of old timber and the infusion of new blood in the weaker teams has increased public interest in all cities which have heretofore supported second division clubs.

Radical changes in team composition and managers have increased the uncertainties of the pennant race. In the National league baseball fans find that New York practically has a new outfield in Murray, O'Harra and Herzog, while the pitching staff has been strengthened.

Chicago will be without the services of Catcher Kling and Second Baseman Evers, in the early part of the season at least, and this is a problem that Manager Chance must solve before his team can meet last year's standard.

Pittsburg remains practically unchanged from last year's club, which made a game fight, clear to the finish, while Philadelphia will present the same formidable array of players that last year upset the pennant hopes of New York and other contenders.

Roger Breshnahan, former catcher of the New York team, is now at the helm of the St. Louis club, made up of young players. Breshnahan believes his club will prove a stumbling block to many championship aspirants.

Many changes will be noted in the American league. Fielder Jones will be missed from center field and as manager of the Chicago club. Chicago will start the season with practically the same club as last year.

With Moriarity at third the Detroit club has plugged the hole in its infield and again has pennant aspirations. Manager Lajoie of Cleveland has braced his pitching department by the acquisition of Cy Young from Boston, and believes he has a championship club.

St. Louis will make the race with the same team that did so well last year. Philadelphia, Washington and Boston have been strengthened. New York has a new manager, George Stallings, who has developed a team of youngsters, and also has a few seasoned veterans.

WHAT COLORS SHALL I USE?

This Question Is Important in Painting a House or Other Building.

A proper color scheme is extremely important in painting a house. It makes all the difference between a really attractive home and one at which you wouldn't take a second glance. And it makes a big difference in the price the property will bring on the market.

As to the exterior, a good deal depends upon the size and architecture of the house, and upon its surroundings. For a good interior effect you must consider the size of the rooms, the light, etc.

You can avoid disappointment by studying the books of color schemes for both exterior and interior painting, which can be had free by writing National Lead Company, 1902 Trinity Building, New York, and asking for Houseowner's Painting Outfit No. 49. The outfit also includes specifications, and a simple instrument for testing the purity of paint materials. Pure White Lead which will stand the test in this outfit will stand the weather test. National Lead Company's famous Dutch Boy Painter trademark on the keg is a guarantee of that kind of white lead.

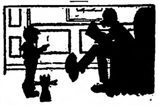
Meeting of National Association for Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis Will Be Largely Attended.

The fifth annual meeting of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis will be held in Washington, D. C., at the New Willard hotel, on May 13, 14 and 15. Owing to the present interest in the campaign against tuberculosis, the meeting will be of unusual interest and importance. The membership of the national association now numbers nearly 2,000, and is distributed in almost every state in the United States. The national association has also a considerable membership in Canada, Cuba, Porto Rico, Philippine Islands, and in several of the European countries. Ex-President Roosevelt and Dr. William Osler are honorary vice-presidents of the national association. Dr. Vincent Y. Bowditch of Boston is the president; Mr. Homer Folks of New York city, and Dr. Charles L. Minor of Asheville, N. C., are the vice-presidents; Gen. George M. Sternberg of Washington, D. C., is treasurer; Dr. Henry Barton Jacobs of Baltimore, is secretary, and Dr. Livingston Farrand of New York is the executive secretary of the association.

ANOTHER BORING QUESTION.



"I say, pa, is a man from Poland called a Pole?"

"Yes, my son."

"Then, pa, why isn't a man from Holland called a Hole?"

A Natural Mistake.

A teacher in a Pennsylvania primary school instructed her pupils one "composition day" that they might each write her a letter making excuse for not inviting her to an imaginary birthday party.

The following effort of one little girl was decided to be the best:

"My Dear Miss Alice: It becomes my duty to apologize for not inviting you to my birthday party last week. I had fully intended to do so, but—as I always do in everything—I postponed it till the last minute. When I at last started and reached your gate, I saw the doctor's carriage standing there, and thinking some one was ill, I did not think it best to go in. What was my mortification and consternation to learn the next day that the doctor was courting your sister!"—Illustrated Sunday Magazine.

FOOD FACTS

What an M. D. Learned.

A prominent Georgia physician went through a food experience which he makes public:

"It was my own experience that first led me to advocate Grape-Nuts food and I also know, from having prescribed it to convalescents and other weak patients, that the food is a wonderful builder and restorer of nerve and brain tissue, as well as muscle. It improves the digestion and sick patients always gain just as I did in strength and weight very rapidly.

"I was in such a low state that I had to give up my work entirely, and went to the mountains of this state, but two months there did not improve me; in fact I was not quite as well as when I left home.

"My food did not sustain me and it became plain that I must change. Then I began to use Grape-Nuts food and in two weeks I could walk a mile without fatigue, and in five weeks returned to my home and practice, taking up hard work again. Since that time I have felt as well and strong as I ever did in my life.

"As a physician who seeks to help all sufferers, I consider it a duty to make these facts public."

Trial 10 days on Grape-Nuts, when the regular food does not seem to sustain the body, will work miracles.

"There's a Reason."

MADE NEAT BIBLICAL RETORT

Writer Who Expected to Score Off of Editor Met with a Really Witty Counter.

Few editors have the humor and good nature which characterize Robert H. Davis, chief of the Munsey staff and author of the play, "The Family." A writer who had submitted a story to him received a courteous rejection, stating that the tale, although charming, was not suited to the Munsey publications. In the course of a few months the story won a prize in a contest, and, highly elated, the writer dispatched the information:

"Dear Mr. Davis:

"Psalms 118:22. See ——'s announcements in the current issue."

The Scriptural reference was: "The stone which the builders refused is become the head of the corner."

The next mail brought Mr. Davis' answer:

"Dear ——:

"Psalms 118:23."

The chagrined writer found that the fatal juxtaposition reads: "This is the Lord's doings; it is marvelous in our eyes."

Big, Painful Swellings Broke and Did Not Heal—Suffered 3 Years.

Tortures Yield to Cuticura.

"Little black swellings were scattered over my face and neck and they would leave little black scars that would itch so I couldn't keep from scratching them. Larger swellings would appear and my clothes would stick to the sores. I went to a doctor, but the trouble only got worse. By this time it was all over my arms and the upper part of my body in swellings as large as a dollar. It was so painful that I could not bear to lie on my back. The second doctor stopped the swellings, but when they broke the places would not heal. I bought a set of the Cuticura Remedies and in less than a week some of the places were nearly well. I continued until I had used three sets, and now I am sound and well. The disease lasted three years. O. L. Wilson, Puryear, Tenn., Feb. 8, 1908."

GREAT CONGRESS OF PEACE WORKERS HELD IN CHICAGO

Thousands of the Opponents of Warfare, Including Many Distinguished Diplomats and Statesmen, Gather to Discuss Disarmament and Worldwide Arbitration.

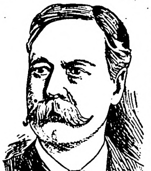
Chicago.—Every civilized country on the globe was represented in the second National Peace Congress, which began here Monday. The gathering was the greatest of its kind ever held in America, and brought to Chicago some 25,000 persons who are zealous workers in the cause of world-wide peace. Among these were eminent statesmen and diplomats of this and other nations. Unfortunately, official duties prevented both President Taft, the honorary president, and Secretary of War Dickinson, the president of the congress, from being present.

On Sunday there were special services in most of the Chicago churches, peace meetings under the auspices of socialist and labor organizations, and a large mass meeting which was addressed by President Schurman of Cornell university, Rev. Jenkins Lloyd Jones and Dr. Emil G. Hirsch of Chicago.

Welcome to the Congress.

Orchestra hall was filled to the limit Monday when the first session was called to order by Robert Treat Paine of Boston, the presiding officer, for governors, mayors and hundreds of clubs had been asked to appoint delegates, and most of them had responded. President Dickinson's address, the same he delivered several weeks ago before the Hamilton club, was read, and the congress was then formally welcomed by Gov. Charles S. Deneen for the state, Mayor Fred A. Busse for the city and Rev. A. Eugene Bartlett, chairman of the reception committee. The secretary then read a brief letter from President Taft, in which the chief executive heartily commended the aims of the congress.

Miss Anna B. Eckstein of Boston next was introduced to the meeting and read a "World Petition to the Third Hague Conference." This was followed by an address by Dr. Benjamin F. Trueblood, secretary of the American Peace Society, on "The Present Position of the Peace Movement."



William J. Calhoun.

What Has Been Accomplished.

Dr. Trueblood said in part:

"Let me sketch in the barest outlines what has already been accomplished. The interpretation will take care of itself.

"I. The men and women, now a great host, who believe that the day is past when blind brute force should direct the policies of nations and preside at the settlement of their differences, are now thoroughly organized. A hundred years ago there was not a society in existence organized to promote appeal to the forum of reason and right in the adjustment of international controversies. To-day there are more than 500, nearly every important nation having its group of peace organizations. Their constituents are numbered by tens of thousands, from every rank and class in society—philanthropists, men of trade and commerce, educators and jurists, workingmen, statesmen, rulers even.

"The organized peace party has its International Peace bureau at Berne, Switzerland, binding all its sections into one world body. It has its International Peace congress which has held 17 meetings in 20 years—congresses over which statesmen now feel it an honor to preside.

Triumph of Arbitration.

"II. The position which the peace movement has reached is no less distinctly determined by the practical attainments of arbitration. We are this year celebrating what is really the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of our movement, for it was in 1809 that David L. Dodge, a Christian merchant of New York city, wrote the pamphlet which brought the movement into being, and led six years later to the organization in his parlor in New York of the first Peace society in the world. There had then been no arbitrations between nations in our modern sense of the word 'nations.' In the 100 years since 1809 more than 250 important controversies have been settled by this means, not to mention an even greater number of less important cases, the settlement of which involved the principle of arbitration. Within the past 20 years so rapid has been the triumph of arbitration that more than 100 international differences have been disposed of by this means, or between five and six a year for the whole 20 years.

The Hague Conferences.

"III. In order to determine further the advanced position which the peace movement has attained on its practical side, the two Hague conferences and what they have accomplished must be taken into account. It is still the habit of some persons to speak disparagingly of these great gatherings and their results. Some do it because they are satisfied with nothing short of immediate perfection; others because they wish the whole movement for the abolition of war to fail. Othere do it purely from ignorance.

"The first Hague conference gave us the permanent international court of arbitration, to which 24 powers finally became parties by ratification of the convention. This court has now for eight years been in successful operation, and not less than four controversies have been referred to it during the past year. The second Hague conference enlarged and strengthened the convention under which this court was set up, and made the court the tribunal, not of 25 powers, but of all the nations of the world.

"The high water mark of the work of the second Hague conference was reached in its action in regard to future meetings of the conference. The principle of periodic meetings of the conference hereafter was approved without a dissenting voice. The date even of the third conference was fixed and the governments urged to appoint at least two years in advance an international commission to prepare the program of the meeting."

Dean W. P. Rogers of the Cincinnati Law school brought this session to a close with an eloquent talk on "The Dawn of Universal Peace."

Addresses Monday Evening.

Monday evening's meeting was devoted to "The Drawing Together of the Nations," and was presided over by Dr. Hirsch. The addresses were on "Independence Versus Interdependence of Nations," by Prof. Paul S. Reinsch of the University of Wisconsin; "Racial Progress Towards Universal Peace," by Rev. H. T. Kealing of Nashville, Tenn.; and "The Biology of War," by President David Starr Jordan of Leland Stanford, Jr., University. At the same time another meeting was in session in Music hall, with Miss Jane Addams in the chair. The speakers there were Joseph B. Burtt of Chicago, on "Fraternal Orders and Peace;" Prof. Graham Taylor of Chicago Commons, on "Victims of War and Industry;" Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, on "Organized Labor and Peace," and John Spargo of Yonkers, N. Y., on "International Socialism as a Peace Factor."

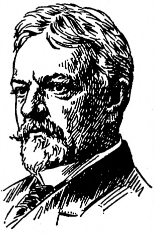
Commercial and Legal Views.

Two big meetings were held Tuesday morning, one on commerce and industry, presided over by George E. Roberts, president of the Commercial National bank of Chicago, and the other on "Women and Peace," with Mrs. Ellen M. Henrotin of Chicago as chairman. The former session was addressed by Belton Gilreath of Birmingham, Ala., W. A. Mahoney of Columbus, O., James Arbuckle, consul of Spain and Colombia, St. Louis, and Marcus M. Marks, president of the National Association of Clothiers, New York city. The women heard interesting speeches by Mrs. Philip N. Moore, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; Miss Jane Addams and Mrs. Lucia Ames Mead of Boston.

"Some Legal Aspects of the Peace Movement" was the general topic of the Orchestra hall meeting Tuesday afternoon, and the chairman William J. Calhoun of Chicago. Prof. William I. Hull of Swarthmore college discussed the advances registered by the two Hague conferences, and James Brown Scott, solicitor of the state department, talked about some questions which the third Hague conference probably will consider. "Legal Problems Capable of Settlement by Arbitration" was the subject of a learned paper by Prof. Charles Cheney Hyde of Chicago.

In Mandel hall, at the University of Chicago, a special session was held for universities and colleges, a feature of which was an oratorical contest participated in by students. Louis P. Lochner of Madison, Wis., spoke on "The Cosmopolitan Clubs."

The general session of Tuesday evening was perhaps the most interesting of the congress. "Next Steps in Peacemaking" was the topic. The audience was aroused to great enthusiasm by an eloquent and spirited address by Congressman Richard Bartholdt of Missouri, president of the American Group, Interparliamentary union. Another paper that met with deserved applause was that of Edwin D. Mead of Boston on "The Arrest in Competitive Arming in Fidelity to The Hague Movement."



Richard Bartholdt.

Competitive Arming.

In discussing this question, Mr. Mead said:

"Let us consider simply Great Britain, Germany and the United States. It is unnecessary to go further, because these three nations control the situation, and they are the chief sinners. If these three nations began today to act, with reference to armaments, in accordance with the spirit and purpose of The Hague convention, the peace and order of the world would be assured to-morrow.

"In 1898 Great Britain spent on her navy $124,000,000; Germany spent $29,000,000; and the United States spent $50,000,000. Last year Great Britain spent $170,000,000; Germany, $83,000,000; and the United States, $104,000,000. The increase in precisely ten years when there should have been decrease was enormous. Our own army expenses last year were as great as our navy expenses. Our navy expenses this year will be $30,000,000 greater than last year. We are today paying for expenses of past wars and preparations for possible wars 65 per cent., practically two-thirds, of our total national revenue, leaving barely one-third available for all constructive purposes. What would Washington and Jefferson and Franklin say to this? We know what they did say about things of this sort. They would say to-day that the republic was standing on its head.

Hope for the Future.

"This is what has come about in ten years in these three nations because The Hague conference in 1899 did nothing about the reduction or arrest of armaments. As we now look back, we see that it could not do much directly at that time. The war system of nations could be supplanted only by the gradual development of a system of international law and justice to take its place. When the first Hague conference created the international tribunal, it did indirectly the most probably which it could do in behalf of the reduction of armaments, because it took a long step in furnishing the nations with such legal machinery for the settlement of their differences as makes recourse to war machinery more and more unnecessary and inexcusable. It has been in the line of this thought that the international lawyers have had their hopeful assurance. Develop the legal machinery, they said, and the armaments will perforce crumble of their own dead weight.

"The continued and rapid development during the decade of provision for the peaceful settlement of international disputes has been something unparalleled in history. The leaders of the movement for international justice are sometimes reproached with being dreamers. The only trouble with them in the past ten years has been that, so far as the development of the instruments of international justice are concerned, they have not been able to dream daringly enough or fast enough to keep up with the facts."

Among the diplomats who came to Chicago to attend the Peace congress were: Ambassador Count Johann Heinrich von Bernstorff of Germany; Herman de Lagercrantz, envoy from Sweden; Wu Ting Fang, envoy from China; Alfred Mitchell Innes, counselor of the British embassy, and Dr. Halvdan Kont of the University of Norway. The Japanese, Turkish and French embassies also were represented.

130 DEAD IN STORM

MIDDLE AND SOUTHERN STATES SWEPT BY FIERCE TORNADOES.

TENNESSEE SUFFERS WORST

Many Towns Are Totally Destroyed by Winds—Wide Area Covered and Hundreds Are Left Homeless—Partial List of Dead.

Chicago.—At least 130 persons were killed and 300 injured by the tornadoes which swept the middle and southern states Thursday. The property losses will total several million dollars. Only meager reports had been received Friday from the stricken districts. Two were killed and half a dozen hurt in this city.

The tornadoes touching here and there carried their devastation through Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Arkansas, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky and Missouri.

An incomplete list of deaths follows:

Chicago, Ill.	2
Texas City, Ill.	4
Horn Lake, Miss.	18
Fayetteville, Tenn.	15
Summerville, Mo.	3
Golden, Mo.	11
Wheatley, Ark.	2
West Marion, Ark.	1
Young's Crossing, Tenn.	5
Medina, Tenn.	4
Forest City, Ark.	2
Mammoth Springs, Ark.	8
Giles County, Tenn.	20
Hartsell, Ala.	4
Danville, Ala.	2
Noblesville, Tenn.	1
Hardeman County, Tenn.	1
Clarksville, Tenn.	1
Centerville, Tenn.	1
Franklin, Tenn.	1
Hillsboro, Tenn.	4
Laconia, Tenn.	2
Bells, Tenn.	2
Quito, Tenn.	8
Alton, Mo.	6

Nashville, Tenn.—Advices being received by the Banner show that the storm was the worst ever known in this state. The indications are that the death list in this state will foot up seventy or more, and the damage will run into the millions of dollars. The wires are prostrated in every direction, and it will be several days before the full extent of the loss of life and damage will be known.

Twenty persons were reported to have been killed and 40 injured in the tornado which swept over the eastern section of Giles county. Bee Springs, a village in the southeast section, 16 miles from Pulaski, was reported to have been totally destroyed. The country in this section is devastated and details are meager.

Mammoth Springs, Ark.—A tornado passed 18 miles east of here killing eight persons and injuring many others The known dead: B. F. Sanders, wife and daughter; George Whitworth and wife, Robert Frost and wife, Miss Holland.

South Bend, Ind. — Six hundred feet of the west wall of the Northern Indiana state prison at Michigan City was blown down by a cyclone which passed over this section of the state. The prisoners were all in their cells at the time of the accident, and any possible outbreak was prevented by the prompt action of Warden Reid, who placed patrols in the corridors with orders to use their rifles to put down any attempt at escape. Although the convicts were excited, no effort was made to effect a delivery. Company F, Third regiment Indiana National Guard, received orders from Gov. Marshall to proceed immediately to Michigan City to preserve order and prevent any possible outbreak. No lives were lost by the falling of the walls.

Evansville, Ind.—A wind storm in southern Indiana and western Kentucky caused many thousands of dollars' damage in the destruction of outbuildings and fences. The gale blew at the velocity of 50 miles an hour. Boats could not leave port. The damage along the river is quite heavy.

Detroit, Mich.—A tidal wave ten feet high at South Haven, on the east shore of Lake Michigan, was the most unusual feature of the terrific wind and rain storm which swept over lower Michigan. The wave caused about $2,000 damage to water front property at South Haven.

Cincinnati.—A violent wind storm that swept over Kentucky hit Latonia with almost the severity of a tornado, causing a damage of $10,000 to the Latonia race track and from $10,000 to $15,000 damage to the town of Latonia and the vicinity.

At Piqua, O., a tornado 20 miles wide dived down in this section and caused a property damage estimated at $100,000. The path of destruction extends over several counties, and extreme damage was done by the wind in the towns of Piqua, Sidney, Houston, Fletcher, St. Paris and Kirkwood. No loss of life.

HOLLAND HAILS PRINCESS

DUTCH CELEBRATE BIRTH OF DAUGHTER OF QUEEN.

President Taft Joins Civilized World in Sending Congratulations to the Mother.

The Hague. — The birth of a daughter to the queen has caused great joy throughout Holland. Every town and city is celebrating the arrival of the princess, who is the heir to the throne. Among those who have sent congratulations is President Taft of the United States.

The accouchement took place at seven o'clock. Owing to the early hour the contemplated salute was not fired and the first persons outside the royal palace to hear the news was a party of workmen passing the residence of the queen on their way to work. The cheers they raised were the signal for the general rejoicing. Flags and bunting that had been held in readiness were unfurled and the city took on holiday attire.

Prince Henry at once telegraphed his mother advising her of the happening and adding that the condition of the queen was most satisfactory.

Heralds accompanied by trumpeters clad in ancient Dutch dress, made the rounds of the city, halting at the principal square and other suitable spots to make, after the fanfares, the following proclamation:

"Fellow Citizens: With great joy we announce the news that her majesty, by the grace of God, has been delivered of a princess.

"The entire population of The Hague shares the feelings of deep joy of the Dutch people, and is thankful for the blessing bestowed upon the royal house and upon the country. May the happy event strengthen the bonds uniting the Netherlands and the house of Orange. Long live the queen. Long live the princess of Orange."

START LIBEL PROCEEDINGS

Government Attorney at Indianapolis Seeks to Extradite Owners of News to Washington.

Indianapolis, Ind. — Stuart McNamara, assistant United States district attorney of the District of Columbia, arrived in this city Friday to begin the further proceedings against Delavin Smith and Charles R. Williams, proprietors of the Indianapolis News, indicted in the District of Columbia, with the proprietors of the New York World, on the charge of having libeled former President Roosevelt and other by printing allegations that there had been an enormous "graft" in connection with the purchase by the United States of the Panama canal tract.

The first step in the matter was taken this morning when Mr. McNamara and Charles W. Miller, United States attorney for this district, asked Judge Anderson for an order for the removal of the defendants to the District of Columbia. He may set a later date for a hearing on the question.

157,176,800 ACRES FREE.

Government Designates Lands for Homesteads in Colorado, Nevada, Montana and Oregon.

Washington. — About 157,176,800 acres of land in the various western states to which the 320-acre homestead bill applies have been designated by Secretary of the Interior Ballinger as coming within the provisions of the act. The area of land designated in each of the states is as follows:

Oregon, 7,004,160; Washington, 3,576,960; Utah, 7,044,480; Wyoming, 9,221,760; New Mexico, 14,334,560; Nevada, 49,512,960; Arizona, 26,657,280; Colorado, 20,160,000, and Montana, 19,664,649.

It was stated at the department that approximately 40 per cent. of the area designated, except in Nevada, is now held by individuals through "some color of title" and it is believed that a larger percentage in Washington and Oregon are so held.

OFFICER AND THUG SLAIN.

Policeman Trying to Avert Hold-Up Is Shot Down, But Kills One of the Robbers.

Logansport, Ind.—A patrolman, Joseph Kroeger, and a pickpocket, whose name is unknown, were killed in a duel with revolvers following a performance of a circus. Charles Pierce of Scranton, Pa., was captured by policemen chasing him on a handcar, six miles north of this city, and is charged with having fired the shot that killed the policeman.

After the night performance of the circus, the thugs raided the crowd with revolvers in their hands. Patrolman Kroeger came running, and one of the thugs shot. The policeman fell, but was able to draw his revolver and answer. One of the men went down. The other fled. The policeman, carried into a restaurant, moaned: "I'm dying. Call my wife and baby," and lived only a few minutes.

THE TWO SIDES OF HISTORY.

Some Pertinent Observations Made by Writer Evidently Not Fond of Subject.

History is a running account of how King Somebody-or-other either did or did not get to a certain place, which nobody ever heard of, before King Somebody-else got there, from which we are usually supposed to conclude that it would have made quite a difference whether he did not not.

Like nearly everything else, history has two sides. The history of the Garden of Eden depends upon whether it is related by a man or a woman. The history of the American revolution reads quite different in English books from the way it reads in our own books. The history of the civil war depends upon which side of the Mason and Dixon line you happen to be sitting when you write it.

History is a bore, not only because you are unacquainted with the people who figure in it, but because it repeats itself.—Life.

RASH ALL OVER BOY'S BODY.

Awful, Crusted, Weeping Eczema on Little Sufferer—A Score of Treatments Prove Dismal Failures.

Cure Achieved by Cuticura.

"My little boy had an awful rash all over his body and the doctor said it was eczema. It was terrible, and used to water awfully. Any place the water went it would form another sore and it would become crusted. A score or more physicians failed utterly and dismally in their efforts to remove the trouble. Then I was told to use the Cuticura Remedies. I got a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, and before we had used half the Resolvent I could see a change in him. In about two months he was entirely well. George F. Lambert, 139 West Centre St., Mahanoy City, Pa., Sept. 26 and Nov. 4, 1907."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. C. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam, Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

We present our readers with a copy of the session laws this week, and if we are a week later than some of the other papers it is because we had our shipments come by freight, instead of by express, and as we got them shiped at car load rates it made quite a difference to us from a financial standpoint.

We are getting somewhat tired of this bridge discussion controversy, and are going to close the argument by saying, that THE SUNBEAM represents the PEOPLE, pubished on a farm by a farmer, that always wants the representatives of the people to represent them. Now all we ask of representatives, is to represent the people If Hon. H. Steenerson is under the impression that he is representing the people by moveing this bridge site, he should move it. If our representatives in the legislature are under the impression, that the state money should be put in at Highlanding, put it there. We only ask one kindness of you, and that is, don't ask THE SUNBEAM, in the next campaign to support you for office, unless you represent the people, because we intend to.

The Middle Horse.

A farmer, plowing with three horses hitched abreast, noticed that the middle horse became tired and exhausted long before either of its mates. As the animal was the equal in every way of the other two, he was puzzled as to the cause of its not being able to stand the same amount of work. He finally observed, however, that as they drew the plow along the three horses held their noses close together, with the result that the middle horse was compelled to breathe the expired air from its fellows. The farmer then procured a long "jockey" stick, which he fastened with straps to the bits of the outside horses. The device worked perfectly, for, given its rightful share of good, fresh air, the middle horse was able to do the same amount of work and with no greater fatigue than its fellows.

Many persons are like the middle horse—they do not get their rightful share of pure air. And this is why they are not able to perform as much work nor of as good a quality as they would otherwise be able to do.—Chicago Tribune.

A Ticklish Moment.

If to act cleverly on the spot is the measure of tact, then the man who figures in the subjoined New York Tribune story deserves both respect and admiration: A woman, driving through New England last summer, noticed suddenly that her horse limped a bit, so when she reached the next village she stopped at the door of the blacksmith shop. A man was holding up the doorpost, and to him she said:

"Will you please tell the blacksmith to come out? I want to see him."

After the manner of the village idler, the man did not stir, but smiled sweetly at the woman and, lifting up his voice, called:

"Bill, come out! There's a lady wants to see you."

From the depths of the blacksmith shop a deeper voice roared:

"Is she young, John, or old?"

In the words of the old poem, "she looked at John and John looked at her." Then, still without moving, he answered:

"You'll be satisfied, Bill, when you get out."

THE CANNON BURST.

Tragedy In a Celebration to Honor President Tyler.

In 1844 an accident took place in the American navy—the explosion of a big gun, the Peacemaker, on board the frigate Princeton, off Broad bay, in the Potomac river, eight miles below Washington.

Those killed were Abel Upshur of Virginia, secretary of state; Thomas W. Gilmer, governor of Virginia; Commodore Kennon of the navy, Representative Sykes of New Jersey, Representative Maxey of Maryland and Mr. Gardiner, an ex-member of congress from New York.

The severely wounded were William Wilkins of Pennsylvania, secretary of war; Miss Wickliffe, daughter of the postmaster general; Colonel Dade, Colonel Benton, Judge Phelps of Vermont, Commodore Stockton, commander of the Princeton, and nine seamen.

On Feb. 28, 1844, President Tyler, the members of his cabinet and their families and many other prominent persons, said to number over 400, were invited by Commodore Stockton to spend the day on the frigate Princeton, which was lying at anchor off Alexandria. After the guests were on board anchor was weighed for a short sail on the Potomac, and the ship proceeded down the river to a point below Fort Washington. On the trip down the heaviest piece of ordnance on the frigate was fired several times, presumably as a matter of entertainment for the company. The gun had been constructed from a model made by Commodore Stockton, and President Tyler expressed a decided interest in the weapon. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon on the return trip the Princeton anchored off Broad bay, and the company was invited to luncheon in the cabins below the gun deck After luncheon Commodore Stockton proposed that the gun be fired once more as a salute, he said, to the memory of the great peacemaker, George Washington. President Tyler, his cabinet and a number of gentlemen repaired to the gun-deck.

As the gun was fired the breech end from the trunnion's back was blown off, and this section was split in twain. One-half of it fell on Secretary Upshur. Two sailors removed it, but the secretary expired in a few moments Governor Gilmer had been struck and killed by this section of the gun before it felled Mr. Upshur. The party on the gun deck was scattered, and the whole ship shook under the force of the explosion.

The excitement was great. The bodies were removed from the Princeton, taken to Washington, placed in hearses at the wharf and carried to the White House, where they lay in the east room till the day of the funeral—a day of general public mourning.—Exchange

The Old Ones.

"We'll have to give up the idea of puttin' pictures in the parlor, Jane," remarked old John Turnipseed as he threw the bridle under the table.

"Why?" asked his wife.

"Too dear! Why, I priced one in town today, and the dealer sez, sez he, 'That's an old master; it's price is £500.'

"'Why,' sez I, 'it looks like a second-hand pictur'.'

"'Yes, it is,' sez he.

"Then, thinks I, if a secondhand pictur' costs that much it's no use to price a new un. So, Jane, I reckon we'll have to hang up a few mottoes, 'God Bless Our Home' and the like, and let the pictur's go."—Pearson's Weekly.

City of Snow White Domes.

The little city of El-Oued, with its population of 8,000 people, at the extreme south of the province of Constantine, in Algeria, is unique even for a Mohammedan city, because of the great number of its snow white domes or cupolas So extraordinary is the great number of these cupolas that many writers have referred to El-Oued as "the city of a thousand cupolas." The homes of the residents of El-Oued are constructed of white plaster and were it not for the whiteness of the domes would be taken at a cursory glance to be a city of coke ovens.—Popular Mechanics.

Called the Deal Off.

A lad attending school craved a little holiday one morning when he started out to wrestle once again with the trials incident to getting an education. As he entered the schoolroom he hatched a plot to get the coveted holiday. He went up to the teacher's desk and told his story. "My mother wants to know if you won't excuse me for today?" he began. "She wants me to do some work at home and thought if I'd study at home this evening and make up what I'd missed mebby you'd let me off."

Something about the lad's manner kept the words from carrying conviction. The teacher bluffed back as follows: "Tommy," said she, "you won't need to go home at all. Since you started to school your mother called me on the phone to tell me that she had changed her mind and for you to stay here."

The lad looked at her, startled. "Aw, well," he said, "as long as both of us are lyin' about it let's just call it quits. I'll stay here."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Wealthy Soldier's Idea.

Australians still tell stories of the colonial volunteers, although the war is a far memory. One, a member of the Stock Exchange, was left one wet and miserable night to guard a wagon load of goods. He shivered in the unsheltered place for some hours pondering many things, and then a bright thought struck him just as the colonel came around on his tour of inspection

"Colonel," he asked, "how much is this wagon worth?"

"I don't know," was the answer. "Much or little, we can't afford to lose it."

"Well, but, colonel," persisted the amateur soldier, "you might give me a rough idea of the value."

"About £200," said the colonel testily.

"Very well," was the answer; "I will come down to the camp and give you a check for the amount. Then I'll turn in. I wouldn't catch my death of cold for twice that much."

What the colonel said is not recorded.—Melbourne Times.

The Glowworm Caverns.

The greatest wonder of the antipodes is the celebrated glowworm caverns, discovered in 1891 in the heart of the Tasmanian wilderness. The cavern or caverns (there appears to be a series of such caverns in the vicinity, each separate and distinct) are situated near the town of Southport, Tasmania, in a limestone bluff, about four miles from Ida bay. The appearance of the main cavern is that of an underground river, the entire floor of the subterranean passage being covered with water about 3 foot and a half in depth. These wonderful Tasmanian caves are similar to all caverns found in limestone formation, with the exception that their roofs and sides literally shine with the light emitted by the millions of glowworms which inhabit them.

A Dangerous Subject.

Professor Henry Drummond when a boy discovered that he could hypnotize people. At a birthday party a little girl declined to play the piano. Drummond happened to catch her eye and said, "Play." To his surprise she rose at once, went to the piano and played. At another time he hypnotized a boy and gave him a poker for a gun. "Now," said Drummond, "I'm a pheasant. Shoot me." The boy did so, and Drummond fell to keep up the illusion, whereupon the boy, seeing the "bird" move, was about to hit it over the head with the poker. The hypnotizer had just time to stop the magnetized sportsman.—Pearson's Weekly.

THE LOCAL NEWS.

The cattle are begining to enjoy feeding on the new grass.

Roy Livingston is helping us get out THE SUNBEAM, to day.

The meadows are beginning to put on their new coat of green.

The farmers are rushing the the seed into the ground this week.

The water is so low in the river that steamboating has about been abandoned.

The farmers steam boat had a break down a mile below Kratka last night.

There will be a holliday ball at the Kratka Hall, on Saturday evening May 15th. All are invited to attend.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Wojnerowski, of Hilda were transacting Notary Public business at Sunbeam to day.

There has been quite a large inquiry for realestate in this locality the past week.

August J. Wentzel will remove to Fisher soon, but his place will be taken by an other good farmer.

We only have one river bank farm left for sale in this school district. Three have been sold lately. One left for sale. W. G. Hunt.

Ole Hanson ran his motor boat down from Hilda today, to Sunbem, with passengers. He has the swiftest running boat on the river.

Swanson will have enough to last him this week in answering our last week's shots, and when he gets that done we are loaded for an other shot.

The Thief River Falls Lumber Co wanigan passed by here on Sunday evening on their way up river, and a few logs are begining to pass by today.

August Wentzel, Sever Nelson, Joseph O'Toole and W. G. Hunt made final proof on their homesteads, before Hon. J.M. Bishop, at Thief River Falls on Monday last. Mr. George Singer, of Rhoda was down as witness.

Joseph O'Toole will leave for Crystal N.D next Monday, where he will put in a couple of months work on the telephone line.

If you get hungry going down to Thief River Falls, stop at The Soo Cafe, near the Soo depot, and get a lunch, or a square meal at a reasonable price.

George Jarman, Proprietor

We understand the Soo railroad surveyors are running the Thief River Falls line, south of here this week, and that it will cross the Eleven towns between the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers. Some of our Deer Parker's are likely to be in a railroad city soon.

Dissolution Sale, At The Golden Rule, at Thief River Falls. A sale in which the price of every piece, parcel and yard of merchandise in the store will be radically reduced in a determined effort to turn these goods immediately into cash. Big discounts in; Suits; Dress Goods, Shoes Cloaks Groceries & etc.

Owing to our absence at Thief River Falls this week we have not the time to devote much time to Swanson, but will just say that as he still keeps up his falshoods about representing his neighbors, that they are requesting us to publish their names to a signed statement, which we may do

The County Commissioner decided to build a thirty five thousad dollar court house, to take the place of the old one distroyed by fire. While this will not be the finest county court house in the northern part of the state, it will be better than some of them, and a big improvement over the old one.

Do your Notary Public business at the SUNBEAM office.

CLEARWATER LOCALS.

Spring has come at last.

The Clearwater Flyer went down to Plummer, but diden't come back.

Have your baskets ready for the good old May time.

A Coy Maiden.

A girl played postoffice at a party and yelled and shrieked and howled and ran behind the door and scratched the young man's face in seven places, upset a lamp, kicked over the piano stool and when he finally kissed her on the tip of the ear she fainted dead away and said she could never look anybody in the face again. They led the bashful, modest, gentle, sobbing creature home; and the next day she ran away with a married lightning rod peddler.—Altoona (Kan.) Tribune.

A Strong Reason.

"You always speak kindly to your wife?" said the prying friend.

"Always," answered Mr. Meekton. "I never think of giving Henrietta a harsh word."

"Because you believe in ruling by gentleness?"

"No. Because self preservation is the first law of nature."—Washington Star.

Military Valor.

I wonder is it because men are such cowards in heart that they admire bravery so much and place military valor so far beyond every other quality for reward and worship?—Thackeray.

No Such Good Luck.

Nervous Old Lady (for the seventh time)—Oh, captain, is there any danger—shall I be drowned? Exasperated Skipper—I'm afraid not, ma'am.—London Fun.

Dangerous Combination.

Weary Walker—I allers knowed it. Tired Tatters—Knowed what? Weary Walker—Wot that sign meant, "Cleaning and Dyeing." Tired Tatters—Well, wot about it? Weary Walker—Why, I allers knowed they went together.—Illustrated Bits.

Stage Paint.

Painting the face on the stage is a barbarous custom come down to us from the age of oil lamps and candles. With gas and electric light and opera glasses for the remote seats in the house it is not needed.—London Mask.

Humiliated.

Just watch the man "whoknows it all"
And his expression pained
When his small boy comes forth with things
He'd like to have explained.
—Washington Star.

The Buds.

"What became of all the buds who were here last year?"

"Some have grown into bachelor's buttons and some into wallflowers.—New York Life.

Lead Pencils.

Lead pencils, which really contain graphite or plumbago, derive their name from the use of lead plummets for ruling faint lines on paper before the discovery of the Cumberland graphite mines.

Missed Vocation.

Client—Didn't you make a mistake in going into law instead of the army? Lawyer—Why? Client—By the way you charge there would be little left of the enemy.—London Tit-Bits.

Rash presumption is a ladder which will break the mounter's neck.—German Proverb.

How Ledgers Got Their Name.

On the authority of the best lexicographers "ledger" is an adaptation of a once common word, "ligger," signifying any large book suited better for lying on a desk than for carrying about. Sometimes this was applied to a large account book, cartulary, or the like, frequently a great breviary for use in church, as distinct from a "portass," of small size, carried by a "book bosom priest." "Coucher" is another old synonym for "ligger," the foregoer of the now general "ledger."

BOA CONSTRICTORS.

The Young Shift For Themselves as Soon as Hatched.

The real home of the boa constrictors is in the tropical countries. Mrs. Boa seeks a sandy place. When she has found it she coils herself into a great and almost flat corkscrew. Then by just two or three turns of her body she digs a shallow hole in the sand. This is her nest. In this hole she lays about twenty-four eggs. The eggs are about as large as those bantam chickens lay and are a dark cream color. They are oblong and more the shape of a pecan than of a hen's egg. The shell is not hard, like a hen's egg, but yields to the pressure of your finger, something like rubber.

Having laid her eggs in the nest of sand, the mother boa winds herself into a perfectly flat coil like a round mat. This done, she gently pushes waves of sand upon the eggs until they are covered from four to six inches deep. Then she settles herself upon the top and stays there for nineteen days. At the end of this time a lot of little snakes may be seen pushing their way out from the nest and away into the world to get their own living. They don't show a bit of affection for their mother or for each other, but glide away, probably never to be together again. Is it any wonder, when they act so just after being hatched out, that boa constrictors never like anybody and never have anything to do with people if they can avoid it?

Each little snake measures from twelve to fourteen inches in length and is about as big around as a lead pencil. It is said that they eat nothing at all during the first six months of their lives or until they are old enough to catch and crush to death small animals and swallow them whole. The boa constrictor never bites—it has no poison fangs—but always kills by coiling about its victim and crushing it to death. Fully grown the boa constrictor is thirty to forty feet long and as big around as the large part of a man's leg.

CHEWING TOBACCO.

The Grip With Which This Habit Holds Its Victims.

Every slave of the weed will know better than I do how much truth exists in a story told me a few evenings ago by a well known committing magistrate in New York.

We were seated at a club table discussing various kinds of dissipations, especially the fascination that liquor and gambling are said to have for men who cannot resist the impulse to gratify one or the other of these passions. The judge spoke:

"In my opinion the most overmastering craving known to our race is that for chewing tobacco. Opium in some forms may be as bad, but I am sure it isn't worse. A few weeks ago an incorrigible was brought before me, and after hearing the evidence I sentenced him to the island for three months. He appeared to take it very sensibly until a police officer as a teaser whispered into the man's ear, as I afterward learned, that he would not be allowed any tobacco while in the penitentiary. The poor chap turned pale, rose in his seat and held up his hand as a sign that he desired to ask me a question. I motioned to him to speak up.

"'I say, good Mr. Judge, will you do me a great favor?'

"'Certainly, if it be within my power,' I replied.

"'I hear my tobacco will be cut off. Cannot you make my term six months or even a year if I am allowed to have chewing tobacco?'"

The judge had to explain that he couldn't do anything of that sort. He relieved the prisoner's mind on the tobacco question by telling him that if he was a habitual chewer the prison physician could order a small quantity of the weed for him daily.

"Never did I see a greater change in a human face," concluded his honor.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Supplying an Alibi.

If culture remains confined within the splendidly bound volumes of the new library that has just been bought by a New Yorker it will not be the fault of the rich man's secretary. He is doing everything he can to let it loose.

"I am cutting the leaves in all the books," he said. "The chances are nobody belonging to the family will ever look inside these books, but the boss has friends who may go snooping around through the library sometimes. In case they do he doesn't want them to gain the impression that literature is neglected in this house, so I am making sure that they will at least find the leaves cut."—Exchange.

The Finest City In Great Britain.

Edinburgh may be noted for its learning and for beauty of situation, Dublin may rank as one of the most beautiful cities in the world, Oxford may boast its colleges and Canterbury its picturesque streets and grand old cathedral, but London stands supreme—the finest city of Great Britain.—London Captain.

A Paying Garden.

"No money in gardening? Why, I know a man who cleared $30,000 last summer from less than an acre."

"Impossible! Utterly absurd!"

"Not at all. You see, it was a roof garden."—Boston Transcript.

The Best Way.

Old Ben Franklin was about the wisest product this country ever produced, and he never said anything much better than that the best way to find money is to earn it.—Atchison Globe.

Survival of the Fittest.

Only one oyster embryo out of every 5,000,000 produced grows up through all the successive stages of youth to the adult state. Even in animals which produce a small number of young there is great destruction, and, taking all the individuals into consideration, only a single pair of young arrive at maturity to replace their parents. There is no exception to the rule that every organic being naturally multiplies at so high a rate that if not destroyed the progeny of a single pair would soon cover the earth. The elephant is reckoned the slowest breeder of known animals. It commences to breed at thirty years of age, dies at 100 and has six young in the interval. After 750 years, supposing all the offspring of a single pair fulfilled the rule and were not destroyed in an untimely way, there would be nearly 19,000,000 elephants alive descended from the first pair.—Sir Ray Lankester in London Telegraph.

Failure of a College Education.

"Well," observed old man Potts, "I've spent a heap of money on my boy Bill's education, more'n $900, jest to see him through Yale, and I ain't through yet. It shorely makes me sore to think of the money I'm wastin' on a boy who ain't got as much sense now as he had before he went to college."

"What's the matter, father?" asked Mrs. Potts. "Mebbe you're a little hard on Bill."

"No, I ain't, Mary," answered the old man. "Just to show you, a little while ago I says to him I thinks it was going to rain tomorrow. What fool answer, d'ye suppose he made me?"

"I'm sure I don't know, father."

"He begged my pardon!"—Harper's Weekly.

A Case of Urgent Need.

It was in the hotel of a mining town that the New England guest, registering in the office, heard a succession of loud yells. "What in the world is that—a murder going on upstairs?" he demanded.

"No," said the clerk as he slammed the book and lounged toward the stairs. "It's the spring bed up in No. 5. That tenderfoot up there don't get the hang of it, and every few days he gets one of the spiral springs screwed into him like a shirt stud. I guess I'll have to go up if there ain't anything more I can do for you for a few minutes."—Youth's Companion.

A Severe Sense.

Grateful Mother—Oh, are you the noble young man who rescued my daughter from a watery grave? Noble Young Man (who is truly modest)—Yes, madam, but I assure you I only did it from a sense of duty.—Exchange.

Marlin

THE Marlin Model 1894 is a medium light weight repeating rifle, a well proportioned, finely balanced gun with all the advantages and comforts of the Marlin solid-top, side-ejecting construction. It is quick and easy of operation, accurate up to 300 yards and a very pleasant gun to carry and to shoot.

For settled districts and farming country where the shooting at woodchucks, badgers, foxes, 'coons, hawks, etc., is at ranges from 100 to 200 yards, the .25-20 and .32-20 rifles with the black and low-pressure smokeless loads cannot be equalled for accuracy and safety. The factory ammunition for the Model '94 rifles is cheap, and can be reloaded at very small cost.

The up-to-date sportsman needs the "Marlin Book" every day in the year. It contains 136 pages of live stuff for the man who loves a good gun, and wants to know everything about it. FREE for 3 stamps postage.

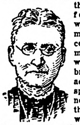
NEW STRENGTH FOR OLD BACKS.

No Need to Suffer Every Day from Backache.



Mrs. Joannah Straw, 526 North Broadway, Canton, S. D., says: "For three years I suffered everything with rheumatism in my limbs and a dull, ceaseless aching in my back. I was weak, languid, broken with headaches and dizzy spells, and the kidney secretions were thick with solids. I was really in a critical condition when I began with Doan's Kidney Pills, and they certainly did wonders for me. Though I am 81 years old, I am as well as the average woman of 50. I work well, eat well and sleep well."

Judge Will Wait and See.

An earnest plea was made by Attorney Charles Pettijohn to Judge Pritchard of the criminal court for leniency to a client who had entered a plea of guilty to larceny. The burden of the attorney's argument was that his client was the father of twins and was tempted to theft in order to feed the mouths of the infants.

"Your honor, I will say frankly," said Mr. Pettijohn in closing, "that if I were the father of twins and needed food for my family, I would not hesitate to go out and steal it."

"Mr. Pettijohn, when you are the father of twins I will consider your proposition," said Judge Pritchard.—Indianapolis News.

Vases in Autos.

Vases of flowers have for some time been an adjunct of the closed automobile. Now some smart broughams have a vase of flowers beside each door. The hanging vases of Japanese porcelain are the favorites, though the metal cases into which a vase slips are also used.

MADE WELL AND STRONG

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Bardstown, Ky.—"I suffered from ulceration and other female troubles for a long time. Doctors had failed to help me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended, and I decided to try it. It cured my trouble and made me well and strong, so that I can do all my own work." Mrs. JOSEPH HALL, Bardstown, Ky.

Another Woman Cured.

Christiana, Tenn.—"I suffered from the worst form of female trouble so that at times I thought I could not live, and my nerves were in a dreadful condition. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured me, and made me feel like a different woman. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is worth its weight in gold to suffering women."—MRS. MARY WOOD, R.F.D. 3.

If you belong to that countless army of women who suffer from some form of female ills, don't hesitate to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs.

For thirty years this famous remedy has been the standard for all forms of female ills, and has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, fibroid tumors, ulceration, inflammation, irregularities, backache, and nervous prostration.

If you want special advice write for it to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. It is free and always helpful.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Merchants Meet at Rushford.

Rushford—The third annual convention of the Fillmore County Business Men's association met here and after transacting routine business, elected the following officers: President, George H. Julsrud, Rushford; vice president, P. W. Young, Canton; secretary, Sydney Anderson, Lanesboro; treasurer, Will Kenthe, Preston. The address of welcome was delivered by Mayor J. W. Magelssen, and the response by J. C. Halbkat of Spring Valley, the retiring president of the association. The ladies of Rushford, under the auspices of the Commercial club, gave a banquet for the association, there being 125 guests.

Saloons Voted Out.

Amboy—Amboy voted out the saloons. Seventy-four votes were cast against license to forty-four for license. Amboy has been a license town for years. The following officers were elected: President, C. W. Chamberlain; trustees, N. Stevens, E. A. Tiffany and Fred Apitz; recorder, J. H. Dredge; treasurer, C. D. Alte; assessor, Thomas Randall; constable, Walter Kinney; justices of the peace, N. W. Sargent and L. W. Reed.

Tight 'Lid" at Moorhead.

Moorhead—At a meeting of the city council the license of the Empire Bottling Works saloon was revoked for Sunday selling. Another saloon has been notified to show cause why its license shall not be taken away. Mayor W. H. Davy has plainly stated his policy and the council has stood by him. It means that the Sunday lid is to be held down, and the 11 p. m. closing hour to be enforced.

Court House Is Burned.

Red Lake Falls—Despite good work by the local fire department, fire destroyed the Red Lake county court house here. The building was about thirty years old. The loss, $4,500, is fully covered by insurance. The records were saved. The blaze was caused by a defective chimney.

Pioneer Lumberman Dies.

Winona, Minn.—Earl S. Young, eighty-four years old, banker, capitalist and lumberman, died at his home in Winona, after an illness extending over a period of a year. He was one of the first lumbermen on the upper Mississippi and was president of the First National bank of Winona.

Wadena School to Cost $40,000.

Wadena — Leonard Schaf was awarded the contract to erect the new school building here, the contract price being approximately $40,000. W. D. Bishop will install the heating and ventilating systems, which will cost $7,000.

Blow up the Bank.

Ostranda—The state bank here was burglarized, the vault being dynamited, but the cracksmen failed to get any of the money contained therein.

NEWS NOTES.

Redwood Falls—The persons who were indicted at the last term of the district court on the charge of distributing campaign literature that was defamatory of certain county candidates, appeared before Judge Olsen in chambers, pleaded guilty, and paid fines and costs amounting to $67.90.

Nerstrand—Wood placed in a kitchen oven to dry was left so long that it became ignited, and when Mrs. Gunhild Rudningen, 75 years old, residing on a farm near Nerstrand, opened the oven door and admitted the air the flames darted forth, setting fire to her clothing and enveloping her whole body, causing burns from which she died.

Crookston—The tragic death of H. C. Baskerville at Tabriz, while leading a sortie in order to secure provisions, has caused great sorrow here from the fact that the young man was born in Crookston. His father, Rev. H. C. Baskerville, was the first minister of the Presbyterian church in this city, serving from July, 1882, to July of the following year.

Cloquet—The annual state firemen's convention will be held in this city June 8 and 9. About 800 visiting firemen are expected representing over 300 departments in the state. The features of the entertainment will be baseball games, foot races, parades, band concerts, etc. No efforts are being spared to make the affair a great success.

Sauk Center—The board of bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church at their next meeting will consider a petition from Brainerd district clergymen to appoint Bishop Robert McIntyre as presiding officer at the next annual conference at Duluth in October. Another resolution was to ask Bishop McIntyre to reappoint the present district superintendent, Rev. E. F. Cooper of Brainerd, for another year. The district conference adjourned to meet at Duluth in October at the annual meeting of the northern Minnesota conference.

Two Harbors—The city council appointed C. F. Warner to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of J. W. Brownell as councilman from the Second ward. John Dwan and David H. Lawrence were candidates for city attorney. The latter was successful. Dr. J. D. Budd was re-elected health officer with George S. Roper and Charles Yernberg as members of the board of health.

Sleepy Eye—Rev. John S. Rood, for three years pastor of the Congregational church, has resigned, intending to remove to Oberlin, Ohio.

PAINT EVERY YEAR.

No One Wants to Do It, But Some Paint Will Wear No Longer.

When you have a job of painting done you don't expect to have it done over again very soon. But to make a lasting job, several things must be taken into consideration—the proper time to paint—the condition of the surface—the kind of materials to use, etc. All these matters are fully covered in the specifications which can be had free by writing National Lead Company, 1902 Trinity Building, New York, and asking for Houseowner's Painting Outfit No. 49. The outfit also includes a book of color schemes for both interior and exterior painting, and a simple instrument for detecting adulteration in the paint materials. The outfit will solve many painting problems for every houseowner.

Meantime while buying paint see that every white lead keg bears the famous Dutch Boy Painter trademark, which is an absolute guarantee of purity and quality. If your paint dealer cannot supply you National Lead Company will see that some one else will.

WARNING TO ALL CONCERNED

Simple and Comprehensive Sign Put Up by Small Boy with a Grievance.

The Langworths lived in a corner house so easily accessible from the street that they were constantly annoyed by persons ringing to ask where other possible inhabitants of that block were to be found. Finally, goaded to desperation by these interruptions, the family boy attempted to put a stop to the nuisance.

"I guess," said he, complacently, "there won't be any more folks asking if the Browns, the Biddles or the Hansons live in this house. I've fixed 'em."

"What have you done?" queried Mrs. Langworth.

"Hung out a sign."

"And what did you print on it, laddie?"

"Just five words," replied Harold, proudly: " 'Nobody lives here but us.' " Lippincott's.

A Frank Opinion.

Once a youth thought it his solemn duty to learn something about Henry James. So, to the great admiration of his frivolous friends, he picked up "The Wings of the Dove" and disappeared into its pages.

Two weeks later he was thinner, but still at it, when one of the afore-mentioned frivolous friends came into the room, and, for the first time showed interest.

"Say," he observed, "is 'The Wings of the Dove' a collection of short stories or one long story?"

The delver into James glanced up from the pages.

"One darned long story," he replied, throwing his whole soul into the words.

Future Ideal Town.

In the ideal town of the future, as pictured by Sir Oliver Lodge, the houses will have gas for heating by open fires and for cooking, and electricity for lighting. The gas, produced from the coal at the mine, will be sent long distances through pipes, as water is now distributed. It is hoped that the experiment will be tried soon, the burning of crude coal in town being absolutely forbidden, and at least two English towns are already considering the plan. The purification of the air is one of the greatest needs in the improvement of the conditions of city life.

OLD SOAKERS

Get Saturated with Caffeine.

When a person has used coffee for a number of years and gradually declined in health, it is time the coffee should be left off in order to see whether or not that has been the cause of the trouble.

A lady in Huntsville, Ala., says she used coffee for about 40 years, and for the past 20 years was troubled with stomach trouble.

"I have been treated by many physicians but all in vain. Everything failed to perfect a cure. I was prostrated for some time, and came near dying. When I recovered sufficiently to partake of food and drink I tried coffee again and it soured my stomach.

"I finally concluded coffee was the cause of my troubles and stopped using it. I tried tea and milk in its place, but neither agreed with me, then I commenced using Postum. I had it properly made and it was very pleasing to the taste.

"I have now used it four months, and my health is so greatly improved that I can eat almost anything I want and can sleep well, whereas, before, I suffered for years with insomnia.

"I have found the cause of my troubles and a way to get rid of them. You can depend upon it I appreciate Postum."

DOLLAR WHEAT HAS COME TO STAY

IN LESS THAN FIVE YEARS CENTRAL CANADA WILL BE CALLED UPON TO SUPPLY THE UNITED STATES.

A couple of years ago, when the announcement was made in these columns that "dollar wheat" had come to stay, and that the time was not far distant when the central provinces of Canada—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—would be called upon to supply a large part of the wheat consumption in the United States, there were many who laughed at the predictions and ridiculed the idea of wheat reaching the dollar point and staying there. Both of these predictions have come to pass. Dollar wheat is here—and it is not only here, but is here to stay; and at the same time, whatever unpleasant sensations it may arouse in the super-sensitive American, Central Canada is already being called upon to help keep up the bread supply, and within the next five years will, as James J. Hill says, literally "become the bread-basket of our increasing millions."

There are few men in the United States better acquainted with the wheat situation than Mr. Hill, and there are few men, if any, who are inclined to be more conservative in their expressed views. Yet it was this greatest of the world's railroad men who said a few days ago that "the price of wheat will never be substantially lower than it is today"—and when it is taken into consideration that at that time wheat had soared to $1.20, well above the dollar mark, the statement is peculiarly significant, and doubly significant is the fact that in this country the population is increased at the ratio of 65 per cent., while the yield of wheat and other products is increasing at the rate of only 25 per cent. For several years past the cost of living has been steadily increasing in the United States, and this wide difference in production and consumption is the reason.

This difference must be supplied by the vast and fertile grain regions of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. There is now absolutely no doubt of this. Even the press of the country concedes the fact. Results have shown that no other country in the world can ever hope to equal those provinces as wheat producers, and that no other country can produce as hard or as good wheat. Said a great grain man recently, "If United States wheat maintains the dollar mark, Canada wheat will be well above a dollar a bushel, for in every way it is superior to our home-grown grain."

With these facts steadily impinging their truth upon our rapidly growing population, it is interesting to note just what possibilities as a "wheat grower" our Northern neighbor possesses. While the United States will never surrender her prestige in any manufacturing or commercial line, she must very soon acknowledge, and with as much grace as she can, that she is bound to be beaten as a grain producer. It must be conceded that a great deal of the actual truth about the richness of Canada's grain producing area has been "kept out of sight," as Mr. Hill says, by the strenuous efforts of our newspapers and magazines to stem the exodus of our best American farmers into those regions. It is a fact that up to the present time, although Canada has already achieved the front rank in the world's grain producers, the fertile prairies of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have as yet scarcely been scratched. Millions of acres, free for the taking, still await our American farmers; and when these millions are gone there are other millions in regions not yet opened up to immigration. A few years ago the writer, who has been through those wheat provinces several times, laughed with others of our people at the broad statement that Canada was bound to become "John Bull's Bread Basket." Now, after a last trip (and though he is a stanch American) he frankly believes that not only will Canada become John Bull's bread-basket, but it will within the next decade at least BECOME THE BREAD-BASKET OF THE UNITED STATES. Perhaps this may be a hard truth for Americans to swallow, but it is a truth, nevertheless. And it is at least a partial compensation to know that hundreds of thousands of our farmers are profiting by the fact by becoming producers in this new country.

The papers of this country have naturally made the most of the brief period of depression which swept over Canada, but now there is not a sign of it left from Winnipeg to the coast. Never have the three great wheat raising provinces been more prosperous. Capital is coming into the country from all quarters, taking the form of cash for investment, industrial concerns seeking locations, and, best of all, substantial and sturdy immigrants come to help populate the prairies. Towns are booming; scores of new elevators are springing up; railroads are sending out their branch lines in all directions; thousands of prosperous farmers are leaving their prairie shelters for new and modern homes—"built by wheat:" everywhere is a growing happiness and contentment—happiness and contentment built by wheat—the "dollar wheat," which has come to stay. Notwithstanding this, the Canadian Government is still giving away its homesteads and selling pre-emptions at $3.00 an acre, and the Railway and Land Companies are disposing of their lands at what may be considered nominal figures.

Early Experiences.

Some time ago an office boy, answering the telephone for the first time in his life, and not knowing how to use it, was told that when the bell rang he was to answer it.

When, therefore, he heard it ring, he picked up the receiver and shouted:

"Hello, who's there?"

The answer came back: "I'm 105."

"Go on," said the boy. "It's time you were dead."

Judgment for Plaintiff Ward.

Mankato.—The April term of the federal court adjourned after receiving the verdict of the jury in the case of Beechen H. Ward of Fairmont, a former member of the state game and fish commission, against the John D. Young Lumber company of La Crosse, Wis. The action was brought to recover $4,000, claimed as rental for land at Fairmont used by the defendant as the location for twelve years of its lumber yard. Mr. Young is dead and most of the stock in the company is owned by Mrs. Young, who is a sister of Mr. Ward. The defense put in a counter-claim for about $2,000, based on a transaction said to have been made by Ward while manager of the company. The jury brought in a verdict for Ward for $1,200.

Faribault Wins Test Case.

Faribault.—A decision in favor of the city of Faribault was handed down yesterday by Judge Buckham in the case of the city of Faribault against the Chicago, Milkaukee & St. Paul railroad, relative to the removal of the stock yards near the Milwaukee station. A hard legal battle was fought by City Attorney McMahon and his victory is greatly appreciated, especially by the residents of West Front street. The common council served notice on the railroad company last September requesting the yards to be removed, as the board of health declared them a nuisance. The company refused to comply with the request and suit was started before Judge Buckham. Being a test case, the victory is of great importance to the city.

Freight Routes Changed.

Pipestone.—Word has been received here to the effect that within the next two ~~or three weeks~~ five work trains will be sent out on the Southern Minnesota line for the purpose of putting the track and bridges in condition for heavy freight traffic. It is proposed by the Milwaukee, it is said, to route much of its Pacific coast freight from the east by way of La Crosse, where, instead of taking the regular coast line through Hastings and the Twin Cities, it will be sent west over the Southern Minnesota division on the road to Madison, S. D., and thence north to the Milwaukee's coast extension.

Bond Issue Will Be Fought.

Red Lake Falls.—The board of county commissioners of Red Lake county will endeavor to issue bonds to the amount of $35,000 for the construction of a new courthouse, to replace the old structure which burned last week. There is a contest in the courts, and has been for five years, between the present county seat town, Red Lake Falls, and Thief River Falls, the latter trying to get a vote of the people on the removal of the county seat to Thief River. It is probable steps will be taken to prevent the board from issuing bonds for the purpose stated.

Starving Birds Fed.

Winona.—Great numbers of birds migrating north were caught here by the cold wave and storm and hundreds have died. There was one flight of hundreds of cock robins which alighted on the normal school grounds and remained here two days. The next most numerous bird is the hermit thrush. There are also many bluebirds. Such a visitation of feathered songsters has never been known in Winona before. Citizens generally provided them with food.

Governor Criticised.

Lake Crystal.—Pastors of Lake Crystal have addressed a communication to Governor Johnson protesting against his sanction of the Sunday baseball bill. The pastors contend that the game cannot be "conducted in a quiet and orderly manner" and that the law is lamentably subversive of moral character and a stain upon the honor of the state.

Little Boy Burns to Death.

Biwabik.—In a fire which destroyed the residence of Gust Lundeen, John F. Francilla, 3-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Francilla, was burned to death. The boy was on the second floor of the Lundeen residence, and, owing to the fierceness of the flames, it was impossible to rescue him.

NEWS NOTES.

Sauk Center.—The Northern Pacific railway has changed the name of its "Birch Lake" station to "Ward Springs," to agree with a change recently made by the postoffice department.

Isanti.—Andrew Ellingson was drowned in the Rum river near this village while fishing. The boat was over-turned, but his companion reached land without assistance. He was about thirty years of age and unmarried.

Two Inlets.—Ed Hoffman, about 60 years old, who lived alone, committed suicide. He borrowed a shotgun from a neighbor, placed the muzzle at his head and pulled the trigger with a string, dying instantly. His relatives live in Stearns county. Financial trouble is supposed to have prompted his act.

Arcadia.—J. P. Gleason, who for ten years has lived the life of a hermit on a farm at Glencoe near Arcadia, has been adjudged insane and committed to the asylum at Mendota, Wis. Prior to going upon the farm Mr. Gleason made his home in Winona and was a member of the Winona County Bar association.

Crookston.—Before burning the clothing worn by the man whose dead body was discovered in the Red Lake river last week, Coroner N. P. Stenshoel decided to make a final examination in an effort to discover some clue that would lead to identification. The search resulted in the discovery of $105 in bills sewed between the lining and the outside of the vest.

Bagley.—There is further excitement in the southern part of Clearwater county over the recent strikes of iron ore. Two borings were made near Mallard recently, and it is said pay ore was found on a place belonging to Harry Sinker. Land owners have either taken their holdings from the market or will only sell on condition that the mineral rights are reserved.

Alexandria.—So great has been the increase in the value of farm land in western South Dakota that several residents of this city, who recently made final proofs on homesteads in Stanley county, are refusing offers of from $2,500 to $3,000 for their 160-acre tracts. They secured the land from the government upon payment of fifty cents an acre—or $80 for an entire farm.

Rochester.—The health board of the city of Rochester while investigating the water supply of the city to guard against contamination from sewage and other sources, discovered a natural curiosity. In the southeastern part of the city beneath the ground about thirty feet, is an underground river twice the width of Bear creek and Zumbro river combined, and of great depth.

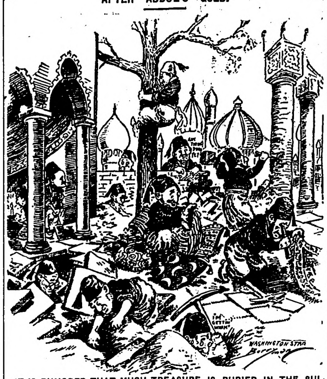
Minneapolis.—Hennepin county roads will be macadamized with gravel from the county's own pits. The county commissioners authorized the purchase of forty acres of gravel pit at Osseo from a resident of California at a cost of $1,250. The road and bridge committee was also instructed to secure a price on the Odenbreit pit at Osseo and if it deemed advisable to purchase it.

St. Paul.—Under the authorization of the legislature, Governor John A. Johnson has appointed members of the state board of accountancy, who will license accountants throughout the state. The board consists of Ralph D. Webb and Fred A. Ross of Minneapolis, and Herbert M. Temple of St. Paul. Dr. Charles L. Green has been appointed a member of the visiting board of the state institutions.

Long Prairie.—Royal Rankin and Theo Stites were sentenced to the St. Cloud reformatory for grand larceny. They pleaded guilty to entering a house at Burtrum and stealing furniture. Henry George was sent to Stillwater for two years for obtaining money under false pretenses. He had served a term at Stillwater, when he went to the home of a man who is serving a prison sentence and represented to the wife that he was an embassy from Governor Johnson, and by giving him a stipulated amount of money he could secure the release of her husband.

Amboy.—The high school building was completely destroyed by fire which originated from some unknown cause. It was erected twelve years ago at a cost of $20,000, and was insured for $11,000, besides $1,500 carried on the contents. Many of the pupils lost their books, but the board will buy new books at once for the free use of the pupils. School will not be interrupted, for it has been arranged to do class work in the Presbyterian, Evangelical and Methodist churches, the I. O. O. F. hall, the Lutheran school and the opera house. It is expected that the building will be rebuilt as soon as possible. A theory advanced for the fire is spontaneous combustion in the laboratory.

AFTER ABDUL'S GOLD.



IT IS RUMORED THAT MUCH TREASURE IS BURIED IN THE SULTAN'S PALACE.

WHITLA KIDNAPER CONVICTED

MRS. BOYLE'S TRIAL FOLLOWS THAT OF HUSBAND.

Verdict Quickly Rendered in Man's Case and Woman Now Faces Jury.

Mercer, Pa.—James Boyle, charged with kidnaping "Billy" Whitla, was convicted Thursday, after a trial lasting but a few hours. No defense was made and the jury was out but a few minutes. The penalty is from one year to life imprisonment. Mrs. Boyle was immediately placed on trial, charged with aiding and abetting the kidnaping.

The first witness called by the state in Mrs. Boyle's case was Miss Ella Boyle, a sister of James Boyle. Apparently from the line of questioning the prosecution wanted to prove by her that the kidnaping conspiracy was formed while Mrs. Boyle was visiting in Sharon with her husband and that she was implicated in it.

Mrs. Boyle took a prominent part in the selection of her jury, prompting her attorneys in numerous cases and evidencing a preference for young, unmarried jurors.

As she was being taken from the courthouse to the jail at the close of court yesterday, Mrs. Boyle was surrounded by a crowd of angry women, who threatened to attack her.

That Boyle's trial came to such an abrupt ending, immediately after the state had rested, was due to the fact that so strong a case had been made against him. From the night before the abduction when he was seen in Sharon, till the time of his arrest in Cleveland almost every movement he made was testified to by one or more witnesses. A man who hired him a horse and buggy, another who saw Boyle driving with "Billy" in the buggy, the barber who saw the two together and shaved Boyle's mustache off, train and electric railway conductors, who saw the couple on the way to Cleveland and identified them in court, all told stories which fitted in perfectly with that of "Billy" Whitla and left no doubt as to the part Boyle had taken in the case. The penalty is from one year to a life sentence in the penitentiary. Sentence has not been pronounced yet.

Plot to Steal Governor's Son.

Oakland, Cal.—A plot to kidnap the eight-year-old son of Gov. Gillette was unearthed at San Quentin prison when it was found that J. B. Clifton, one of the most notorious criminals in the state, who is serving time for attempting the life of Detective Hodkins in Oakland, had completed arrangements with a confederate on the outside to steal the boy and hold him for ransom.

The price of the lad's return to his father was to have been Clifton's pardon.

Celebrates Discovery of Gold.

Denver, Col.—Colorado celebrated Friday with fetes in Denver and other cities the fiftieth anniversary of the discovery of gold that started the great Pike's Peak stampede of fortune-seekers in 1859. The discovery was made by George W. Jackson near the present site of Idaho Springs, and the company he organized began the development of the first paying deposits 50 years ago. On May 6, 59 years ago the first recorded find of gold in the Rocky mountains was made in the district of Clear creek by Capt. John H. Gregory, a Georgia miner.

AWFUL HORROR AT TARSUS.

Soldiers Aid in Slaughter of Christians by Armenians—Adana Still Lawless.

Adana.—Adana is still lawless. More people have been killed in the city. There are 30,000 dead in the Adana provinces as a result of the massacres, and 35,000 homeless and penniless refugees are wandering in the vilayet.

The deaths in Adana city alone are estimated at 6,500.

Adana is terrorized by 4,000 soldiers, who are looting, shooting and burning. No respect is paid to foreign properties. Both the French schools have been destroyed, and it is feared that the American school, commercial and missionary interests in Adana are totally ruined.

Tarsus, Asiatic Turkey.—Authentic details of the atrocities committed by the fanantical Mohammedans in the villages and farms in this district are now coming in to Tarsus with sickening abundance.

At least 10,000 persons lost their lives in this province, and some estimates place the total casualties at 25,000. Villages like Osmanieh, Bazsche, Hamadieh, Kara, Kristian, Keoy and Kezolook were actually wiped out. Each of these places had populations of from 500 to 600 people.

Marash, Asiatic Turkey.—A letter received here by messenger from Harni says hat every man there has been killed. Only women, girls and boys under ten years of age have been left alive. The churches and houses were plundered and most of them were burned.

GET $7,000 BY FRAUD.

Illinois Couple Alleged to Have Wrongfully Obtained Part of Estate in New York.

New York.—How a man and woman from Hamburg, Ill., are alleged to have fooled the supreme court and the state attorney general into paying them $7,000 in the belief they were half-brother and half-sister of John Edward Hughes, who died intestate in the Flatbush asylum, November, 1902, was revealed in motion papers submitted to Justice Seabury in the supreme court.

Hughes left $26,000, and it was not known that he had a living relative. The man and woman from Illinois turned up and demanded the estate. They were in a fair way to get all of it when, after an investigation, James T. Williamson declared they were not related to Hughes and that relatives of Hughes live in Newark, N. J., and in Ireland.

Federation of Musicians Meets.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Nearly three hundred delegates were present Monday when the fourteenth annual meeting of the American Federation of Musicians opened. Joseph Weber of Cincinnati, the president, was in the chair. The convention will last six days. The federation is composed of 510 locals in the United States and Canada, with a membership of about 52,000 professional musicians.

Mothers' Day Celebrated.

Chicago.—Sunday was set aside officially in many states as "Mothers' day," and in the cities and towns innumerable mass meetings were held at which collections were taken up for the relief of destitute mothers. In Chicago thousands of men and women wore white carnations.

TRIAL FOR JUDGES

MURPHY SAYS HE WILL FILE IMPEACHMENT CHARGES AGAINST JURISTS.

REPEATS CHARGES IN HOUSE

Declares He Will Attempt to Oust Philips and McPherson from Federal Bench for Conduct in Missouri Railroad Rate Cases.

Washington.—Mr. Murphy of Missouri, following a speech in the house Thursday, said he would file formal charges of impeachment against Federal Judges McPherson and Philips of the western district of Missouri, whom he accused in a resolution Monday of misconduct.

Incensed over a telegram to Attorney General Wickersham by Frank Hagerman, attorney for 18 railroads, in which Mr. Hagerman characterized Mr. Murphy's resolution of inquiry into the official conduct of the two judges, introduced in the house Monday, as "an outrageous tissue of misrepresentation," Mr. Murphy held the attention of the house with a repetition of the charges.

His colleague, Mr. Rucker, corroborated all that he said in denunciation of the action of the two judges in connection with Missouri's two-cent passenger rate law and the maximum freight law. Incidentally Mr. Rucker remarked that Judge Philips ought to have been impeached 20 years ago.

Mr. Murphy brought the matter up as a question of personal privilege.

Mr. Murphy had read some newspaper dispatches to the effect that Hagerman had telegraphed the attorney general of the United States alleging that the charges in the Murphy resolution were "an outrageous tissue of misrepresentation by one who had no knowledge of the facts." He said that he had confirmed the fact that such a telegram had been received by Attorney General Wickersham.

Mr. Clayton of Alabama, a member of the judiciary committee, objected, saying that the argument was not one of personal privilege.

Speaker Cannon ruled that Mr. Murphy was within his rights and could continue, but he had not proceeded far when Mr. Henry of Texas, another member of the judiciary committee, stopped him with an inquiry as to whether he did not intend to formally bring in charges of impeachment.

The Missouri member, however, did not give a direct answer, but continued his recital of the charges contained in his resolution.

Several times Mr. Payne, the majority leader, objected, saying Mr. Murphy could not yield for debate. Later he again objected on the ground that Mr. Murphy was traveling outside the issue raised by the Hagerman telegram and the preamble of the resolution.

Again in passing on the objection, Speaker Cannon ruled in favor of Mr. Murphy, remarking that "the telegram is pretty broad."

Continuing, Mr. Murphy denied that the state of Missouri had been accorded every courtesy in the rate cases, as was stated in Mr. Hagerman's telegram. The state, he declared, had no knowledge or notice whatever of the first injunction in those cases.

"I am asking the congress of the United States," he said, "to give back to us that government which you handed to us when you admitted us as a state in the union by requiring the federal judiciary in the western district of Missouri to proceed along orderly and decent lines in the execution of the law."

Both Judge McPherson and Judge Philips declined to discuss the announcement that Representative Murphy will ask their impeachment.

BRITONS THE BEST SHOTS.

John Bull's Riflemen Defeat Uncle Sam's 14,583 to 14,179 Points in Match.

Washington.—British riflemen in the international small bore match just ended, demonstrated their superiority over the Americans. The match was a friendly one with bore rifles on gallery ranges in the respective countries.

The targets were issued by the British Society of Miniature Rifle Clubs, were signed by the respective associations and interchanged, and the results announced by cable. Australia, the other contestant, has not yet been heard from but the National Rifle association of America, under whose auspices the contests were conducted in this country, is of the opinion that their scores will not equal those of the British team.

The British team made the grand total of 14,583 points out of a possible 15,000, or an average of 291 per man. The scores of the American team were 14,179.

POET'S STATUE UNVEILED

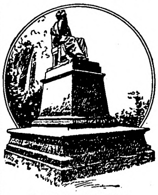
MONUMENT TO LONGFELLOW IS GIVEN TO NATION.

President Taft and Other Notables Take Part in the Ceremonies at Washington.

Washington.—To the strains of "Hiawatha" and "The Star-Spangled Banner," played by the Marine band, the statue erected to the memory of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow was unveiled Friday. The monument, which shows the American poet seated with a book in his hand, represents 12 years of hard and conscientious work by the Longfellow National Memorial association and the generosity of the public in coming forward with subscriptions to perpetuate in the national capital the memory of one of the nation's greatest poets.

The occasion was the more notable because of the presence of the president of the United States, members of the diplomatic corps, men distinguished in letters, and by practically all of the living relatives of the poet.

The statue itself is an artistic addition to the tributes to Americans who have won renown in the higher arena of individual effort which adorn the national capital. It is the first statue erected here to mark distinguished services rendered to our national literature.



Monument to Longfellow.

The statue, which is located in a small triangular parking at the intersection of Connecticut avenue and U street, is of heroic size, of pure white Persian marble, and the pedestal, in striking contrast, is of reddish brown marble imported from Scottish quarries. William Couper of New York is the sculptor.

Chief Justice Fuller of the supreme court of the United States presided at the unveiling exercises, and the invocation was delivered by Rev. Charles Wood, pastor of the Church of the Covenant. Addresses were delivered by Rt. Rev. Alexander Mackay-Smith, coadjutor bishop of Pennsylvania, on "The History of the Statue;" by Maj. Gen. A. W. Greely on "Longfellow the Man;" by Prof. Bliss Perry of Harvard university, on "Longfellow the Citizen," and by Hamilton W. Mable on "Longfellow the Poet."

The statue was presented to the city by Brainard H. Warner, treasurer of the Longfellow National Memorial association, and was accepted by President Taft.

21 ARE REPORTED DEAD.

Duluth Hears the Steamer Shores Went Down in Lake Superior—Vessel Long Overdue.

Duluth, Minn.—Advices received here are to the effect that the steamer Shores, six days overdue at Duluth, went down off White Fish Point in Lake Superior with all on board.

The crew and passengers numbered 21. News of the destruction was brought to Duluth by the crew of the steamer Northland, who say that as the latter was passing White Fish Point on the way up they discovered wreckage strewn all over the lake and in their opinion it belonged to the Shores. The fact that she was a week overdue adds color to the theory.

The Adelia Shores belonged to the S. O. Neff Transportation Company of Milwaukee, Wis.

The gale in which the ship foundered last week and in which also the Aurania, the Russia and the Nester went down was one of the fiercest in the history of Lake Superior for this season of the year. The wind at times gained a velocity of 70 miles an hour. This, together with the fact that a violent snowstorm prevailed for three days, made navigation extremely perilous for ships that were caught away from land and in the trough of the sea.

Taft Has a Sore Eye.

Washington.—President Taft appeared at the White House offices Friday wearing an eye shield over one eye. It was stated that on Wednesday the president got something into his eye. After suffering pain from it all day he finally consulted an oculist and had the source of the irritation removed.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. C. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam' Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

The sudden call to pay up published in an other colum will cause some hustling up this way.

Now comes Thief River Falls with a full fledged petition for the division of Red Lake county at the next general election. It will be rememberd that we suggested this remedy last fall to end the county seat war, but whoever drew the southern boundry line made a mistake in divideing the townships with the proposed county line. The new county is named Pennington, with the county seat at Thief River Falls. The southern boundry line passes through the towns of Deer Park. Mayfleid, Wyandott, River Falls, Black River and Polk Centre, wich will leave part of them in Red Lake county and part in the proposed new county of Pennington, which may create war on the southern boundry line. The proposition is new yet, and it is difficult to tell how it will be received by the farmers, but it is likely to be received favorbly in the northern part, and if it is the new county of Pennington will be ready to open up for business soon after the next general election.

SWAN SUN AS A CREAMERY PATRON.

We don't know as we had ought to tell this, but as Mr. Swanson started the personal attact on us at a time when we did not have time to answer, and believe we said we would give him a personal answer that would make his hair kink, here goes.

Mr Swanson has said, that we should not have anything to say about the location of this bridge because we did not take cream to the creamery. Now how about Swanson as a creamery patron? Last year he took some stock in the Highlanding creamery and began to hawl his creame here, but got dissatisfied and quit, and began to take his cream to the Clearwater creamery. Soon after that butter maker Hoveland began to have trouble to keep his butter grade up, and knowing the cause but not desireing to take the respnsibility of condemming the patrons cream, he called the state insrector to come on a creamery day and inspect the cream. When he raised the lid of Swansons can the stink pretty near knocked the inspector down and put him out of busidess, and he promptly marked the can regected; unfit for use. Swanson took his can home, and it is the last time Swanson has shown up as a creamery patron, and we are informed that he reduced his stock of cows, sold his cream seperator, and now the only time he is a creamery patron, is in his mind, when he "communicates" for the leven towns. If the state insector had not shut him off he might have tryed to kept on hawling cream, and "communicated" to the leven tows and blamed some one else until he stunk everbody out of the country.

Later. We did not learn what Swanson done with the cream, but maybe that accounts for that headless hog that he spoke about for if repots are true, a whiff of that cream would have snapped the poor animals head off so quick he never would have known what hit him.

NOTICE TO SETTLERS.

By direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Inteior we have been required to to issue a notice to each of the homesteadr enteryman on the Eleven Red Lake Towns who may be in default in making their payments, giving them thirty days from that notice within which time they may show cause why their entries should not be canceled by reason of default in making payments as required by law.

The law under which these lands were opened for settlement requires that at the time of making the entry, or purchase one fith of the purchase price should then be paid and the balance to be paid in five equal annual instalments thereafter, and provided that if any purchaser faild to make such payments promptly when due or within sixty days thereafter all his rights to the land so entered, or purchased by him, should cease and the moneys paid be forfleted, and directed the Secretary of the Interior to declare such forfeiture by re-offering said lands for sale.

Later, by an act approved June 21st, 1906, the time for making all such payments was extended one year, so now the law may be read that within two years and sixty days from the time the purchase is made the next payment must be made and each payment thereafter within one year, and so on until the full amount be paid.

To go through the books and get these notices will require about two weeks and this advance notice is given through the press so that settlers may have a little more time within which to prepare.

There is no particular reason for a rush or alarm. We are of the opinion that if we receive the delinquent payments by June 20th, or where it becomes necessary to make proof in order to enable the parties to get money. If we receive the applications for proof by June 20th, showing that the person intends to make proof and payment in July, that it will be early enough. In such cases we will report the facts as a sufficient showing or cause why the entry should not be canceled It would be better in such late applications to make proof that some letter or statement should accompany it showing why the payments are not made at an earlier date.

We would advise all persons who mean to make proofs to enable them to obtain the money, to make application to make proof at as early a date as practicable after May 20th, so that we may be enabled to scatter the proofs along during the month of July.

All delinquent claimants will be notified by registered mail from this office addressed to them at the postoffice address given by them when they made payment of their last installments

This notice in no way affects those persons outside of the Eleven Red Lake Towns nor does it in any manner affect such persons who have made entries therein and made payments in accordance with the requirements of the law.

R. J. MONTAGUE.
Register.

WILLIE WORRYS.

Our friend Swanson seems to be awful alarmed about us lossing the good will of the good people of our town, Highlanding. Don't let that worry you any more Willie, as we are going to make our home here and expect to be a patron of our creamery next season, with cream that wont stink enough to drive a butchers dog off of a gut wagon, and ruin the sale of other people cream. Oh yes we will be here Willie, and as your bowels yearn for office, and you seem to be a back number in Deer Park you had better move up here; and have your dear friends elect you; but you are likely to get struck with a cyclone that will put you out of business worse than them "Tom Dick and Harry" neighbors of yours, as you call them, did at the last election. But you need not worry about us not looking after the best interests of the town of Highlanding, all the time, and just let me whisper to you Willie, that if we had not been, you fellows that think you are so smart would not have been in the race, as the bridge site would have been about five miles farther west to accomidate the largest number of people, and that is where it should have, and where it is likely to be located yet, if you can get that investigation to work.

ANECDOTES OF REYER

The Famous French Composer Was Blunt of Speech.

HE HAD A CAUSTIC TONGUE.

His Biting Wit Was Lavishly Bestowed Upon Those Who Annoyed or Displeased Him—As an Officeholder He Was the Limit of Indifference.

Ernest Reyer, the famous French composer, had a biting wit and a caustic tongue. Fortune frowned on him at the beginning of his musical career, and his first opera, "Erostrato," was played only twice. This did not worry Reyer much, although, as he said to the manager, "I had hoped to see it played three times at least." "Erostrate" was rather meanly staged. In the first act the temple of Ephesus was supposed to fall and did not. "I suppose," said Reyer, "that they thought that if the play dropped hard enough the audience would excuse the temple!"

At that time the manager of the opera was a man named Halanzier, who was no musician and whom Reyer disliked. Halanzier had a way of patronizing the composer which made him furious, and he took his revenge one evening in Brussels. "Sigurd," after having had some success in Paris, was played at the Theatre de la Monnaie in Brussels and achieved a triumph. After the first performance Reyer gave a supper, to which he invited Halanzier, who was delighted when the composer, after a speech in his honor, lifted his glass and said, "And now I wish to drink to Halanzier." Halanzier bowed and smiled, and Reyer, without moving a muscle, went on calmly and imperturbably—"to Halanzier, the one manager to whom I owe nothing."

Reyer was playing one of his compositions at a friend's house when a little girl—he hated children—commenced to cry and would not be comforted. "For pity's sake," cried Reyer furiously, "put that child on a chair and sit on her face, one of you!" The crying child became some fifteen years later Mme. Rose Caron, the singer who helped Reyer to the pinnacle of fame.

It was Ernest Reyer who was the original perpetrator of the joke with reference to twins which has been ascribed to so many people. A friend of his had just become the father of two boys and had them brought in to the composer. "Charming," said Ernest Reyer nervously—"charming children," patting their cheeks gingerly with his gloved hand, "delightful children really. Which one are you going to keep?"

When he was appointed librarian to the Paris Opera he took his duties very easily and as a matter of fact scarcely ever went to the opera house. He was fond of telling the story of his first visit to his office. He went to it one evening at dusk six years after he had been appointed. He lost his way and wandered about up and down narrow passages and dark corridors until he ran up against a doorkeeper whom he had passed two or three times already. The man, distrusting the stranger, stopped him and said, "Who are you, and where are you going?" Reyer looked him up and down. "I am the librarian," he said haughtily, "and I am looking for the library!"

One day a young musician called on him with a warm letter of introduction from a mutual friend. Reyer received him and, wincing, asked him to play the two pieces which his friend had recommended. After the first one had been performed the pianist turned expectantly to the composer. "What do you think of that?" he asked. "I prefer the other one," said Reyer, and the young man left without playing it. When he was on the stairs the old composer leaned over the banisters and called to him, "Your future is assured, young man," he said. "You have nearly learned when to stop. But if you had let me off the first piece too"— And, chuckling, he went into his flat again.

Once a young lady sang him the grand air from "Sigurd" and sang it rather badly. "I was so frightened, cher maitre!" she said. "Not nearly as frightened as I was!" was the old man's answer.

On another occasion a lady said to him: "Oh, M. Reyer, when I hear the air of 'Doves' in 'Salammbo' I can positively see you writing it! I can see you in your beautiful home in Provence, between the mountain and the sea, drawing inspiration from the sunshine of the south and"— Reyer interrupted her. "There is something the matter with your eyesight, madame," he growled. "When I composed that air I was sitting on the top of an omnibus, smoking a pipe, and it was raining in torrents."

One more example. A lady who lodged opposite him in the Rue de la Tour d'Auvergne was an ex-pupil of the conservatory, and this, it seemed to her, was the chance of a lifetime. The master could not help hearing her sing, and if he heard her he would be captivated and her future would be assured. So she opened her window and daily sang numbers from his "Salammbo." In due course a messenger knocked at her door. "M. Reyer has heard you," he began, and the singer believed that all her dreams were coming true. "M. Reyer has heard you," the messenger continued, "and he sends his compliments and would esteem it a favor if you would close your windows when you are practicing!"

You had better watch in the market place than slumber in the temple.—Maeterlinck.

Letting the Cat Out.

"What would you do if papa should die, Charlie?" asked the father before a room full of company.

"Send away the ugly nurse girl and get the pitty one ag'in!"—London Tit-Bits.

Safety Sandwiches.

Parson—Oh, Mrs. Hostess, how did you slice this meat in your sandwiches so evenly? Mrs. Hostess (delighted)—Oh, easily! We used my husband's safety razor.—Judge.

KRATKA HEARD FROM.

And now comes the town of Kratka with the just complaint that if the state and county are not going to put in but one bridge to accomidate the Eleven Townships, for the present, that it should be built in that town.

There is a goodeal of sound sense in this kick as their town have a large number of farmers liveing on the south side of the river, that raise large crops of wheat that would have a good deal better road to market if they had this bridge.

FOILED THEIR PLOT.

The Way Mme. Alboni Frustrated a Scheme to Hiss Her.

"Once upon a time, when Mme. Alboni was at Trieste," writes Henry C. Lahee in "Famous Singers of Today," "she was informed of the existence of a plot to hiss her off the stage. Having ascertained the names of her detractors and where they were to be found, she donned male attire, to which her short hair and robust figure helped to complete her disguise, and went to the cafe at which the conspirators met. Here she found them in full consultation, and, taking a seat at a table, she listened to their conversation for a time. After awhile she addressed the leader, saying: 'I hear that you intend to play a trick upon some one. I am very fond of a little practical joke myself and should be glad if you would allow me to join you on this occasion.'

"'With pleasure,' was the reply. 'We intend to hiss an opera singer off the stage this evening.'

"'Indeed. And of what is she guilty?'

"'Oh, nothing, except that, being an Italian, she has sung in Munich and Vienna to German audiences, and we think she ought to receive some castigation for her unpatriotic conduct.'

"'I agree with you, and now please tell me what I am to do.'

"'Take this whistle,' said the leader. 'At a signal to be given at the conclusion of the air sung by Rosina the noise will begin, and you will have to join in.'

"'I shall be very glad to do so,' said the singer and put the whistle in her pocket.

"In the evening the house was packed—every seat was occupied—and the audience warmly applauded the opening numbers of the opera. In due course Mme. Alboni appeared, and at the point at which she was about to address her tutor a few of the conspirators began to make a disturbance, not waiting for the signal.

"Without showing any concern Mme. Alboni walked down to the footlights and, holding up the whistle, which was hung to her neck by a ribbon, she exclaimed: 'Gentlemen, are you not a little before your time? I thought we were not to commence whistling until I had sung the air.'

"For a moment a deathly stillness prevailed; then suddenly the house broke into thunders of applause, which was led by the conspirators themselves."

A GRATEFUL PATIENT.

The Coin That Was Measured by a Famous Surgeon.

Dr. Grenfell, an old London hospital pupil, in a sketch of Sir Frederick Treves in the Pall Mall Gazette tells the story of a tiny sovereign gold piece given by a grateful patient to the famous surgeon and guarded by him as a priceless treasure. A sailor from Norway had been operated on by Sir Frederick in hospital. His life had been saved, and he had gone his way. Late one evening a timid knock brought Sir Frederick himself at that unusual hour to his door in Wimpole street. A tall, gaunt sailor in threadbare attire asked if this was where "Mr. Treves lives." At his earnest request, though somewhat under protest, he was allowed to enter. He at once proceeded to get out a jackknife, and from the lining of the belt of his trousers he cut out a small gold piece and offered it to Sir Frederick. On his refusal to accept it the man was so hurt that Sir Frederick listened to his story, and an interesting one it was.

The man had on leaving hospital sought a berth at the London docks, but, being a stranger, had been unable to get one. He had got out of money and had gone hungry day after day, though he knew that he had sewed up in his waistband by his wife in Norway the piece of gold in question. He had got so pulled down by bad living that he at last decided he must spend the money, but that very day he succeeded in getting a berth on a ship, and his advance had given the food he stood so sorely in need of. He had promptly tramped all the way to Wimpole street, and his bearing was such that Sir Frederick found himself "bowing into the darkness, holding the gold piece in his hand and with an overwhelming sense of inferiority strongly impressed on his mind."

Bishop, Municipal Judge for the City of Thief River Falls Minnesota, at Thief River Falls Minnesota on the 23, day of June 1909.

Claimant names as witnesses:

Fourteenth Century Doctors.

Synge's "Social Life in England" quotes a number of fourteenth century hints to success for physicians:

Suppose you know nothing, say there is an obstruction of the liver. Perhaps the patient will say, "Nay, master, it is my head or legs that trouble me." Repeat that it comes from the liver, and especially use the word "obstruction," for patients do not understand it, which is important.

Never dine with a patient who has not paid you. It will be cheaper to get your dinner at an inn, for such feasts are usually deducted from the surgeon's fee.

When you are treating a wound or accident, the friends of the patient should be excluded, for they may faint and cause a disturbance, but sometimes a higher fee may be got from persons present fainting and breaking their heads against wood and the like than from the principal patient.

Samuel R. Gummere.

Samuel R. Gummere, United States minister to Morocco, through whose cleverness the American authorities obtained possession of Paul O. Stensland, the fugitive Chicago banker, has a post whose duties are often peculiar. The sultan of Morocco is superior as a ruler to some of his predecessors, but he is a young man of many freaks and fancies, and to get on well with him the representative of the United States has to keep his wits with him all the time. Minister Gummere was United States consul at Tangier when the Perdicaris kidnaping occurred, and his efficient conduct during that episode resulted in his promotion to his present post. Now he has another feather in his cap.

A Bibliophile's Reply.

Mandell Creighton, who was bishop of London, had a horror of lending his favorite books. A fellow clergyman once visited the bishop and took a fancy to an old edition of Shakespeare. He borrowed the volume and did not think to return it for several months. Finally the minister returned it with a letter, saying, "My Dear Bishop—I have great pleasure in returning the volume you lent me."

The bishop answered, "My Dear Brother—All the joy is mine."

Mutual Surprise.

They stood beneath the mistletoe.

She was justly resentful of what he had done.

"How dare you kiss me?" she exclaimed. "I never was so surprised in all my life!"

"Neither was I," he replied contritely. "I thought it was your younger sister."—Chicago Post.

Forbidden Fruit.

"Your luncheons are always so successful, Mrs. Penrhyn-Paget. Do tell me how you select your menus."

"Oh, you see, the doctor has given me a printed list of things I mustn't eat, and I choose the dishes from that."—Woman's Home Companion.

A kindness done to the good is never lost.—Plautus.

Large Doings.

On Long Island a hundred and more years ago there was fox hunting for three days during the season, and the biography of Catherine Schuyler contains the following apt lines from the pen of a witty woman whose name remains unknown:

A fox is killed by twenty men.
That fox perhaps had killed a hen.
A gallant act no doubt is here.
All wicked foxes ought to fear
When twenty dogs and twenty men
Can kill a fox that killed a hen.

Ideal Justice.

"Sammy," said a Germantown mother recently to her youngest born, "when you divided those seven pieces of candy with your brother did you give him four?"

"No, ma'am," replied Sammy. "I knew they wouldn't come out even, so I ate one before I began to divide."—Harper's Weekly.

Slow and Sure.

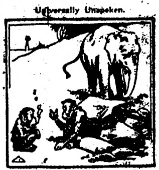
"How is my son getting along?" asked a parent of the headmaster of a school.

"He's slow and sure," was the response.

"That's satisfactory!"

"Not so," rejoined the master. "By it I mean that he is slow to learn and sure to forget."—London Telegraph.

Universally Unspoken.



"Papa, what is volapuk?"
"A universal language, my boy."
"And who speaks it?"
"Nobody."—Sourire.

Pews That Carry a Vote.

The parish church of Chertsey possesses a curious anomaly. It has several pews in its gallery which are bought and sold by auction, just like a table or a chair, and these pews give their owners for the time being a legal right to vote at parliamentary elections in the division. Moreover, the owners of the pews have to pay the poor rate of £2 a year into the bargain, a privilege they are not so eager to use as the former one. Many years ago the churchwardens of Chertsey were at their wits' end in order to raise money for the restoration and repair of the sacred edifice, and they could find no solution to the question until some parishioners suggested that they should sell the gallery pews to the highest bidder. They accepted the idea and obtained a special act of parliament allowing them to do this and also giving the privilege of a parliamentary vote.—London Spectator.

Discretion.

First Lawyer—It seems to me you let that last witness down pretty easily in your cross examination. Second Lawyer—I had to. He is my tailor, and I owe him a big bill.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Gardiner, Maine.—"I have been a great sufferer from organic troubles and a severe female weakness. The doctor said I would have to go to the hospital for an operation, but I could not bear to think of it. I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash—and was entirely cured after three months' use of them."—Mrs. S. A. WILLIAMS, R. F. D. No. 14, Box 39, Gardiner, Me.

No woman should submit to a surgical operation, which may mean death, until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made exclusively from roots and herbs, a fair trial.

This famous medicine for women has for thirty years proved to be the most valuable tonic and renewer of the female organism. Women residing in almost every city and town in the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It cures female ills, and creates radiant, buoyant female health. If you are ill, for your own sake as well as those you love, give it a trial.

Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

An Error.

He had dined exceedingly well and was standing in the hotel lobby, hatless, and looking exactly as if he were quite at home there. It was no wonder that the hotel guest walked up to him and inquired imperiously:

"Where's the news stand?"

"Dunno."

The guest glared.

"I'll report you for insolence," he hissed.

"Huh?" inquired he who had dined well. "R'port m'?"

"Say, what are you? A bellboy or a detective or—what?"

"I'm a haberdasher," answered the other, with a pleasant smile.

The other snorted and withdrew.

Mrs. Howe's Opinion.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe's sense of the ridiculous has always been a saving grace, leading her to avoid grandiloquence. On one occasion a lady at Newport, trying to get a fine sentiment out of her, said, one moonlit evening on a vine-hung veranda: "Mrs. Howe, do say something lovely about my piazza!" Whereupon every one listened for the reply. In her delicately cultivated voice Mrs. Howe responded: "I think it is a bully piaz."—New York Herald.

Shiloh Church to Be Repuilt.

An effort is being made to build a suitable memorial church on the site of the original Shiloh church, on Shiloh battlefield, now one of the most attractive of military parks. It was on this very spot the bloody battle of Shiloh was begun on the morning of April 6, 1862. It is the purpose to build a memorial church to cost not less than $10,000. The names of all contributors will be recorded in a permanent register and kept on exhibition in the church, which will be open to visitors and tourists.

The Burnt Child.

Stern Parent—Bobby, I thought I told you to order that trunk sent around right away, all ready to use. The trunk has come, but there is no strap.

"Well, pa, I told the man he needn't mind sending the strap."

NOT DRUGS
Food Did It.

After using laxative and cathartic medicines from childhood a case of chronic and apparently incurable constipation yielded to the scientific food, Grape-Nuts, in a few days.

"From early childhood I suffered with such terrible constipation that I had to use laxatives continuously going from one drug to another and suffering more or less all the time.

"A prominent physician whom I consulted told me the muscles of the digestive organs were partially paralyzed and could not perform their work without help of some kind, so I have tried at different times about every laxative and cathartic known, but found no help that was at all permanent. I had finally become discouraged and had given my case up as hopeless when I began to use the predigested food, Grape-Nuts.

"Although I had not expected this food to help my trouble, to my great surprise Grape-Nuts digested immediately from the first and in a few days I was convinced that this was just what my system needed.

"The bowels performed their functions regularly and I am now completely and permanently cured of this awful trouble.

"Truly the power of scientific food must be unlimited." "There's a Reason."

SHOWED STRONG ON THE DEFENSE

BOSTON AND WASHINGTON LED AMERICAN LEAGUE IN HOLDING DOWN OPPONENTS.

FIGURES FROM LAST SEASON

Fewer Runs Scored Against Tail-End Teams Than Against Detroit—Latter Club Scored Most Runs Against New York—Interesting Statistics for Baseball "Fans."

Both Boston and Washington surpassed the pennant-winning Tigers in defensive work last season in the American league, only 516 runs being scored against the Boston Red Sox and 537 against Washington, as against 554 against Detroit.

Philadelphia was almost on a par with the Tigers in defensive work, holding its opponents to 562 runs, or eight more than Detroit. Against New York opposing teams scored 713 runs, an average of almost 102 for each team, and more than five to each game.

Detroit scored most runs against New York, 119. It fell 20 below this total with Philadelphia, Chicago held the Tigers to 92 runs, Boston to 89, Washington to 88 and St. Louis to 87, while the Tigers found the Naps a big stumbling block, scoring only 73 runs against Lajole's crowd.

Like Detroit, Cleveland found New York easy when it came to scoring runs. It ran up a total of 110 against the Highlanders, and almost equaled the number against Detroit, scoring 101. It counted 92 times against Philadelphia, 84 against Boston, 73 against Chicago, 62 against St. Louis, while Cantillon's Washington crowd lived up to its reputation as Nap hoodoos by holding Larry's boys to 57 runs.

Boston counted 91 times against Philadelphia, 89 against Detroit, 80 against St. Louis, 79 against New York, 75 against Chicago, 73 against Washington and Cleveland.

St. Louis also found New York easy, scoring 109 runs, following with 84 against Washington, 77 against Philadelphia and Detroit, 69 against Cleveland, 67 against Chicago, and 61 against Boston, the latter club being almost as big a hoodoo to the Browns as was Washington to the Naps.

Chicago scored 90 runs against New York, 89 against Boston, 79 against Detroit and St. Louis, 72 against Washington and only 49 against Cleveland, this latter being the smallest total runs scored by any one team against another in which two teams played 23 games instead of 22, the scheduled number. Philadelphia, sixth in the list, scored 92 runs against New York, 76 against Detroit and Washington, 68 against Cleveland, 60 against Chicago, and 54 against St. Louis.

Washington's 481 runs were scored as follows: New York, 114; Boston, 78; Cleveland, 77; St. Louis, 62; Philadelphia, 55; Chicago, 53, and Detroit, 42. Washington, however, played only 21 games against Detroit, compared to the 23 played by Chicago against Cleveland.

Strangely enough, the tail-end Highlanders scored more runs against Detroit than against any other team, 90 in number. They scored 87 against Washington, 69 against Philadelphia, 59 against Chicago, and 47 against Boston. All the teams except Boston scored most runs against New York, the Red Sox scoring its highest number against Philadelphia.

In runs scored against or on offensive play Washington set the pace against Cleveland, leaders in this department, with 79 runs, followed by Detroit and Boston, 73; St. Louis, 69; Philadelphia, 63; New York, 58, and Chicago, 49.

Chicago, next in line, had Detroit mark up 92 runs against her, followed by Boston, 75; Cleveland, 73; St. Louis, 67; Philadelphia, 60; Washington, 53, and New York, 50.

Detroit led against St. Louis with 87, followed by Boston, 80; Chicago, 79; Cleveland and Washington, 62; New York, 59, and Philadelphia, 54.

Detroit led against Boston with 89, against Washington with 88, Philadelphia, 99, and New York, 119. Chicago tied Detroit against Boston. Cleveland counted 84 times against the Red Sox, Washington, 78; Philadelphia, 68; St. Louis, 61; New York, 47. New York was only one run behind Detroit against Washington. St. Louis scored 84 runs, Philadelphia 76, Boston 73, Chicago 72 and Cleveland 57.

Against Detroit Cleveland led with 101, followed by New York, 90; Boston, 89; Chicago, 79; St. Louis, 77; Philadelphia, 76, and Washington, 42.

Cleveland followed Detroit against the Athletics with 82, Boston scored 91, Chicago 79, St. Louis 77, New York 69 and Washington 55.

Couldn't Stand the Pace.

Jack O'Connor, the former St. Louis catcher, who purchased a half interest in the Fort Smith, Ark., league club franchise, has abandoned the venture, forfeiting all rights, and announcing that the life of a mogul in a minor league was too expensive for him. He will continue as field manager and captain of the Little Rock Southern league team. He was a mogul ten days.

Killian Goes Back to Minors.

Pitcher Ed Killian of Detroit will go back to the minors. Detroit has received waivers, but the disposal of the player has not been definitely decided. Killian probably will be permitted to select his own club, as did Coughlin. Killian's arm went bad last season.

PUBLIC STATEMENT

By a Public Official—County Treasurer of Granbury, Texas.

A. A. Perkins, County Treasurer of Granbury, Hood Co., Texas, says: "Years ago a severe fall injured my kidneys. From that time I was bothered with a chronic lame back and disordered action of the kidneys helped to make life miserable for me. A friend suggested my using Doan's Kidney Pills, which I did, with the most gratifying results. I made a public statement at the time, recommending Doan's Kidney Pills, and am glad to confirm that statement now."

IN PRAISE OF THE COUNTRY.

Residence There Has Many Advantages of Which City Dweller Knows Nothing.

There are hardships in the country; struggles are necessary to wrest a livelihood from the soil or from business in a small community. But every stroke can be made to count for permanence, comments the Columbia State. The food and the air are better; man's independence is more real, where he can own the roof that shelters him and the ground upon which he can grow his provisions. Every cow or horse added to his holdings is an increase of his capital. Little by little, year by year, he can, with industry and good judgment, increase his store of worldly goods and give to his children a tangible inheritance, a foothold in their own land, an anchorage from which the shifting tides of trade cannot dislodge them. And while such a family is living its own life, solving its own problems, it may enjoy the same literary and artistic pleasures, and the same general advantages that the city family has.

AN INTERESTING PAINT TEST

There is a very simple and interesting chemical test by which to detect impurity in paint materials. Thousands and thousands of people, all over the country, are making this test. It is a sure way to safeguard against the many adulterated white leads which are on the market. Any one can make the test—all that is needed is a simple little instrument which may be had free by writing National Lead Company, 1902 Trinity Building, New York, and asking for Houseowner's Painting Outfit No. 49. The outfit includes also a set of color schemes for exterior or interior painting, or both, if you wish, and a book of specifications. No houseowner should make any arrangements for painting till he gets this outfit.

One can't expect a satisfactory painting job without pure white lead. There is a way to make sure you're getting a pure white lead—without testing it. See that the keg bears National Lead Company's famous Dutch Boy Painter trademark, which is a positive guarantee of purity. Your dealer probably has this white lead. If not let National Lead Company know.

"I am seventy-seven years old, and some years ago I was taken with eczema from head to foot. I was sick for six months and what I suffered tongue could not tell. I could not sleep day or night because of that dreadful itching; when I did sleep it was from sheer exhaustion. I was one mass of irritation; it was even in my scalp. The doctor's medicine seemed to make me worse and I was almost out of my mind. I got a set of the Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent. I used them persistently for twenty-four hours. That night I slept like an infant, the first solid night's sleep I had had for six months. In a month I was cured. W. Harrison Smith, Mt. Kisco, N. Y., Feb. 3, 1908."

While work on a new building was going on in a southern town not long ago an old negro employed as a hodcarrier suddenly slipped while nearing the third story and plunged headlong to the ground. Several passersby rushed over expecting to find a man dead with a broken neck, as the old fellow had struck squarely on the top of his head. Finding the old man still alive some one emptied the contents of a whisky bottle down his throat. In a few moments the old negro sat up and looked around.

"How do you feel now, uncle?" asked a bystander kindly.

"Well, sah," came the reply, "I wuz sorter cornfused when I fust started, but now dat I's hit I's all right!"

"The Last Best West"

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The government of Canada now gives to every actual settler 160 acres of wheat-growing land free and an additional 160 acres at $3.00 an acre. The 300,000 contented American settlers making their homes in Western Canada is the best evidence of the superiority of that country. They are becoming rich, growing from 25 to 50 bushels wheat to the acre; 60 to 110 bushels oats and 45 to 60 bushels barley, besides having splendid herds of cattle raised on the prairie grass. Dairying is an important industry.

The crop of 1908 still keeps Western Canada in the lead. The world will soon look to it as its food-producer.

"The thing which most impressed us was the magnitude of the country that is available for agricultural purposes."—National Editorial Correspondence, 1908.

Interesting Items Gathered Throughout the Gopher State.

Plan Fine Court House.

International Falls.—Within thirty months of the date of the county's birth work will have been started upon the construction of a court house for Koochiching county, which is to cost completed, in the neighborhood of $85,000, and which will be one of the finest buildings of its kind in the state. With an assessed valuation of but little more than four million dollars, $42,000 represents the sum for which the county could be bonded for court house purposes, and this amount having been arranged for with the state loan board, the county commissioners have just let the contract for the building of the structure to a Brookings (S. D.) firm for the sum of $41,750. Bedford stone and buff pressed brick are the materials which will be used above the basement walls, the latter to be of concrete. The structure will be ninety-six feet wide and sixty-four feet deep, with a sub-basement and three full stories, surmounted by an imposing dome thirty-five feet in height. One of the finest blocks of ground in International Falls, valued at $25,000 has been given as a site for the building by the townsite company.

$4,000 For Creek Channel

Pipestone.—Word has been received in Pipestone from Washington to the effect that, included in the appropriations at the last session of congress for the Pipestone Indian training school, the sum of $4,000 was intended for the purpose of lowering the channel of Pipestone creek which passes through the reservation and feeds the Falls of Winnewassa, which are located on the reservation. All obstructions are to be removed from the creek and when the work has been completed a large section of land in the vicinity of Holland, this county, will be drained and the amount of water passing over the falls will be about doubled by the changes to be made in the creek.

Says She Was Jilted, Sues.

Crookston.—Papers have been filed in a $25,000 damage suit by Miss Nellie Rogers, of East Grand Forks against Charles Hanson, who, she says, failed to keep an alleged promise to marry her. She says in her complaint that they have been keeping company nine years and that he set the wedding date in June, 1905, but postponed it from time to time and finally refused to marry her at all. Hanson is wealthy and is agent for a brewing company at East Grand Forks. He left Tuesday for a trip to Norway, but the papers were served upon him as he crossed into Minnesota from Fargo.

Board of Trade Wins Suit.

Duluth.—The Duluth Board of Trade has won out in the case brought by former Attorney General Young to dissolve its charter. The board won its case before Judge Dibell in the district court here. It was appealed and the decision of Judge Dibell was affirmed. The case was brought on the ground that the Duluth Board of Trade had refused to permit the Minnesota Farmers' exchange to do business on the board; also, that the commission rule of the Duluth board was a violation of the anti-trust laws of the state.

Faribault Auto Club Elects.

Faribault.—The annual meeting of the Faribault Automobile club was held at the rooms of the Commercial club. There are forty members and the organization is in a flourishing condition. The following officers were elected: President, A. Blodgett, Jr.; vice president, K. D. Chase; secretary and treasurer, Walter M. Nutting; director in state association, Alfred H. Bill; board of governors, John Dobbin, Dr. M. L. Mayland, Walter Scott and W. McC. Reid of Faribault; Dr. A. F. Pringle, Northfield; J. D. Plonty, Morristown.

Prof. Bothne To Speak.

Moorhead.—Concordia college, acting conjointly with the Norwegian society, known as the Norske Selskab, is preparing to celebrate the seventeenth of May on an elaborate scale. The society will hold its annual reunion at the college and listen to addresses by Prof. Bothne of the University of Minnesota and Attorney Dosland of this city. The Commercial club is backing up the enterprise.

Sheriff Demands Raise.

Little Falls.—Sheriff Frank Armstrong petitioned the commissioners to advance his salary from $1,100 to $1,700. He was denied the request and filed notice that he would take an appeal before the district court. On May 12 he will appear before Judge M. D. Taylor at St. Cloud to push his claim.

Cloquet.—Bonds to the amount of $30,000 have been voted for the erection of a new school building.

Duluth.—June 14 has been selected as the day on which the Y. M. C. A. boys will start from Duluth on a walk to St. Paul.

Winona—Michael Wiseman committed suicide by hanging himself in a shed at the rear of his home. Despondency over his discharge by the new city administration from the street force inspired his deed.

Glenwood—Mr. Nutter, landscape architect of Minneapolis, is here to survey and make plans for improving the city park. His services have been secured by the Ladies' Improvement league, which has also planned to beautify the public library grounds.

Little Falls.—Charles E. Vasaly, the new member of the state board of control, resigned his position as register of deeds, the resignation to take effect July 1. The county commissioners appointed Frank Bastien of this city to fill the unexpired term. Many candidates were in the field for the appointment.

Detroit—Henry S. Dahleen, county auditor, has tendered his resignation to the county board. Mr. Dahleen has been auditor of Becker county four years, having been elected three times without opposition. He gives up his position to become president of the Security State bank, which will be started about June 1.

Belle Plaine.—There will be a meeting of the Minnesota River Improvement league at Belle Plaine Thursday, May 20. George A. Ralph, state drainage engineer, will address the meeting on "How to Control the Waters of the Minnesota River, Based on Actual Surveys." The legislative committee will also make a full report.

Hutchinson.—The Minnesota conference of the Evangelical association opened its annual session with Bishop S. C. Breyfogel, D. D., of Reading, Pa., presiding. The session was opened with the celebration of the Lord's supper, after which Bishop Breyfogel delivered an address to the conference, Rev. Duebendorf of St. Paul was again appointed secretary of the conference.

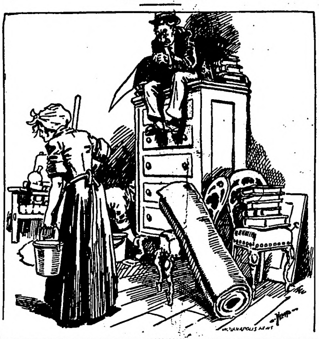
Pipestone—The Altona-Fountain Prairie Rural Telephone company has been formed in this county and will construct a line at once, running from Luctor and Verdi to Pipestone, where connection will be made with the Northwestern Telephone Exchange company's system. A. E. Harris has been named as president of the new company; G. Luschen, vice president; C. H. Warrick, secretary, and P. Mantel, treasurer.

Duluth—Duluth people were surprised to hear that Acting Secretary of War Oliver has approved the plans of the Northern Pacific for the reconstruction of its Grassy Point bridge, connecting West Duluth and Superior. It is desired here to have the new bridge made available for general traffic as well as railroad traffic, and special legislation to that end was being prepared here.

Pipestone.—John M. Day who, last October, married Miss Eva Sample, and who at the last term of the district court here was found guilty of perjury and sentenced to state's prison, will appeal his case to the supreme court in an effort to secure a new trial. Day, who is 38 years of age, came to Pipestone with Miss Sample, 15 years of age, and swore, it is asserted, that the girl was 18 years of age. He now says he was not sworn by the clerk of court. Day and his young bride were arrested in Omaha and brought back here a week after the marriage.

Owatonna—The annual meeting of the Owatonna Civic League was held last evening. Professor P. J. Kuntz of the city schools was elected president; Register of Deeds Rowland, vice president; Mrs. Gertrude Holden, corresponding secretary; Mrs. C. S. Crandall, recording secretary; Guy B. Bennett, treasurer; J. A. Rawyer, W. H. Vinton, J. C. Hansel, Claude Clefton, O. E. Williams, Miss Esther Adair, Mrs. Sylver Belt, John Adsit, Miss Grace Randall, Mrs. George Schultz, W. C. Zamboni, C. J. Pegg, F. J. Labare, Mrs. Anna Davidson and W. E. Darby, members of the executive committee. Each of the five wards is represented by three members of this committee. It is planned to have a clean-up day. Two thousand packages of flower seeds were ordered and they will be given to the school children, who will be instructed how to plant them for the best results. Liberal prizes will be awarded for the ten best flower gardens and for the best work in keeping yards clean. The league has about one hundred members.

HOUSECLEANING.



HITS AMERICAN BEEF TRUST

ENGLISH REPORT POINTS OUT DANGER OF MONOPOLY.

Armours, Swifts, Morris' and Hammond Companies Are Named—Testimony Is Doubted.

London. — The departmental committee appointed in July of 1908 to inquire into the alleged combinations in the meat trade in the United Kingdom devotes a large portion of its report to the American beef trust and its representatives in London.

The committee concludes that while a combination exists to a certain extent between four companies in the United States, engaged in the United Kingdom, it is not at present sufficiently powerful seriously to endanger the beef trade as a whole. But should these firms, as seems possible, acquire considerable interest in the Argentine situation with regard to the meat supply of the United Kingdom might become serious.

"With such command," the report says, "of practically the whole imported live cattle and chilled and frozen beef trade, the firms composing such combination might be able to determine beef prices at Smithfield market itself and largely affect prices throughout the country."

According to the report, the representatives of the American companies in London all told the committee that they knew nothing of the conditions prevalent in the United States and, commenting on these statements, the committee says:

"The committee reluctantly is compelled to express grave doubt as to the reality of this uniform ignorance, and its assumption naturally has tended to throw doubt upon the other statements made by the representatives of these firms. It is almost incredible that Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Morris & Co., and the Hammond Beef Company, the last-named representing the National Packing Company, should be in combination in the United States and in competition in the United Kingdom."

The committee failed to find evidence of any deliberate action on the part of the Americans with the object of destroying inconvenient rivals, and it does not think that they have yet attempted to capture or control the whole beef trade in this country, as alleged. At the same time it is satisfied that the firms mentioned consult together with regard to prices and the amount of the supplies to be put on the market, and they fix the prices at which chilled beef shall be sold in the provinces, and furthermore, that provincial salesmen are practically bound to sell at the price daily dictated by the Americans.

TAFT REBUKES GOVERNOR.

Stubbs of Kansas Feels Presidential Wrath—Man He Had Appointed Will Not Get Job.

Washington.—President Taft administered a severe rebuke to Gov. Stubbs of Kansas and at the same time served warning to politicians that he did not purpose to be used to promote the causes of contending political factions.

The president at the same time announced the withdrawal of the appointment of Robert Stone of Topeka to be assistant attorney in the department of justice.

Stubbs is making a hot fight for the senate against Senator Curtis. When Stubbs got back to Kansas he announced that the president had appointed Stone as a personal favor to him and that Senator Curtis, Mr. Anthony and other members of the Kansas delegation did not cut much figure at Washington.

BLOODHOUNDS ON TRAIL.

Charles Caldwell in Jail Following His Attentions to Elizabethtown (Ind.) Girl.

Columbus, Ind.—Charles W. Caldwell, a lawyer who sought to oust Philander C. Knox, secretary of state, from President Taft's cabinet, is in custody here awaiting investigation of a serious charge. Caldwell was found in his office, after bloodhounds and armed men had sought him at Elizabethtown. Caldwell is married, and he is accused by A. M. Remy of Elizabethtown of making secret visits to his 16-year-old daughter, Belah Remy. He pleaded not guilty to both charges and his bond was fixed at $300. He was unable to give bond and was taken back to jail.

The Remy girl was closely questioned by Sheriff Cox and others. She admitted being in love with Caldwell and told a straight story of Caldwell's attentions. She said he sent her clandestine notes and gifts and had visited her since last March. She was firm in her denial, however, of any wrongdoing and said that he was just so good to her she could not help loving him. She showed a diamond ring, several pieces of jewelry, books, music and other gifts made to her by Caldwell.

HAIR "RAT" SAVES TWO.

Mother and Baby Escape Death in Auto Accident When Padding Acts as Buffer.

Jackson, Mich.—A large "rat" in her hair saved the life of Mrs. Richard Frost, in an automobile accident Thursday, her physicians say. Mrs. Frost and her baby were both thrown from the machine when it collided with a telephone pole and Mrs. Frost struck on her head with such force that hair pins were driven into her scalp.

At the hospital the surgeons who attended her said the "rat" saved her head being crushed. The baby was injured about the head, and it is feared both mother and child were also internally injured.

Richard Frost, the husband and father, was driving the automobile when the accident happened.

LEAVES PRISON AT 71.

James Saunders Pardoned by Iowa Governor Set Free—Has Saved $1,800 Pension Money.

Fort Madison, Ia.—James R. Saunders, alias William B. Glyndon, was released from the penitentiary by pardon of the governor Thursday, after serving 31 years for the alleged murder of a 14-year-old girl in Grundy county.

Saunders served a longer term than any other man ever sent to the prison and is now hale and hearty at 71 years. He was a sharp-shooter in an Ohio regiment in the civil war and was granted a soldier's pension since his incarceration, during which time he saved $1,800.

He came of a prominent eastern Ohio family and has all these years hidden his family name.

Long Race with Death.

New York. — Racing with death, which the physicians have assured him is inevitable, Alexis Laudent is attempting, with a broken back, to make the trip from Birmingham, Ala., to Moscow, Russia. His parents reside in Russia, and it is due to an overweening desire to see them that he has undertaken the remarkable journey. Laudent was injured in an accident in an Alabama mine several weeks ago. He will rest in a Jersey City hospital there and will then sail for home.

BARES TURKS' PLOT

AMERICAN MISSIONARY SAYS ABDUL'S GOVERNMENT PLANNED THE ADANA MASSACRE.

RAPS AMERICAN TARDINESS

Declares United States Subjects Had to Depend on British Consul for Aid—Forty-five Mutiny Leaders Arrested at Salonika.

Boston.—That the recent massacre at Adana, Asiatic Turkey, was deliberately planned by the Turkish government under Abdul Hamid, is the belief expressed in a letter to the American Board of Foreign Missions, from Rev. Stephen Van R. Trowbridge, one of the missionaries in the district where many were killed.

The letter from Trowbridge, dated April 23 and sent by way of Constantinople, has just reached the American board, and it gives some particulars of the recent massacres not hitherto made known in this country.

Briefly describing the funeral of American Missionaries Maurer and Rogers, who were killed during the disorders, Mr. Trowbridge writes:

"The burial took place on Friday evening, the 16th of April. With the city in terrible disorder and scores of conflagrations raging, it was impossible to take the bodies out to the cemetery. The graves were dug side by side at the edge of the girl's school yard and services were conducted by Mr. Macallum and Mr. Trowbridge.

Mr. Trowbridge criticises the American government in the following paragraph of his letter:

"All regret the tardiness of the American government in meeting the crisis. A week and three days have passed and yet not a word from the embassy. Were it not for the untiring efforts of the British consul, Maj. Doughty-Wylie, whose right arm is broken from a bullet, we could neither send letters nor telegrams."

Erzeroum, Asiatic Turkey.—Forty-five leaders of the mutiny here have been arrested on orders issued by Field Harshal Ibraham Pasha, commander of the Fourth army corps.

There is great uneasiness among the population of this city on account of the threatening attitude of the garrison, which has refused to accept 52 officers belonging to the Young Turk party. Djelal Pasha has gone to Constantinople to report on the situation.

Alexandretta, Asiatic Turkey.—The United States revenue cutter Tahoma arrived at this port Thursday for the protection of American interests. The Tahoma is the first American ship to appear in Turkish waters since the beginning of the massacres and disorders in Asiatic Turkey.

Cologne.—The Koelnische Zeitung published a dispatch from Saloniki saying that the Young Turk officers at Erzeroun, Asiatic Turkey, have sent a telegram to the local officers of the committee of union and progress declaring that their soldiers are refusing obedience and demanding the restoration of the Sheriat, and at the same time threatening a general massacre.

The message begs Schefket Pasha to send representatives to quiet the troops and the people, and concludes with the statement that the Young Turk officers do not dare to show themselves abroad.

Marash, Asiatic Turkey.—Distressing accounts continue to be received here from the country side of Armenian villages assailed by bands of Mohammedans, who, acting on the supposition that the Armenians were rising against the government, were quick to strike the first blow. The men were killed whenever found within reach of knife or bullet. The girls were often maltreated, and some of them were carried off to become the wives or slaves of rich men.

Houses were sacked and then burned, farm animals were driven off, and small parties of horsemen rode through the country "'cleaning up the Armenians." The entire population of Bechkeny, 2,000 souls, moved to the Zeitoon region for safety.

Children See Three Drown.

Pittsburg, Pa.—To save five cents' bridge toll, five foreigners, who had been out of work for many months, attempted to cross the Monongahela river at McKeesport, a suburb, in a small boat, which sank as they got into midstream, drowning three of men. Five hundred school-children enjoying their first day's diversion in a new playground, saw them drown.

Ten bodies had been recovered when the search was abandoned at dark Wednesday night for the victims of Tuesday night's ferryboat accident.

New Minister from Spain.

Madrid. — It is announced that Marquis de Villalobar, first secretary of the Spanish embassy at London, will succeed Don Ramon Pina, the Spanish minister at Washington. Senor Pina goes to the foreign office as under secretary of state in place of the Marquis de Herrera, who has been appointed ambassador at Vienna.

FIVE DIE; 55 HURT IN STORMS

TORNADOES HIT KANSAS, MISSOURI AND OKLAHOMA.

Complete Reports May Increase Number of Dead—Train Plunges Into River.

Kansas City, Mo. — A series of tornadoes in Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma Friday evening killed at least five, injured 55, devastated one town, wrecked a train and did great damage to property.

Twenty-five were injured by a storm that swept over Mount Washington and Fairmount Park, suburbs of Kansas City. At least two of these are thought to be fatally injured and others seriously.

The town of Hollis, Kan., near Concordia, was swept away. Here three were killed and ten seriously injured.

The dead are Fred Jeardoe, John Cyre and George Eckert.

The Eckstrom family, consisting of five persons, is mising. Their house is laid in ruins and it is thought they are dead.

Near Great Bend a tornado killed two and injured 20. All wires are down in that vicinity and it is feared that the death list may be greater.

William Ackerly, a Santa Fe engineer, was killed while working with a bridge gang between Great Bend and Kinsley. Frank Nicholson, a conductor, was also killed. The tornado wrecked the work train of which Ackerly was engineer and blew it into a ditch.

The storm spread over a wide area, however, laid waste many farm houses and injured many whose names could not be obtained. On account of a great portion of the damage done on farms its full extent could not be learned. Many conflicting reports have been received. One had ten killed.

At Hoisington, Kan., a tornado injured and greatly damaged farm property. It was not so severe, however, as that passing over other portions of the state.

Wabash passenger train No. 9 ran through a bridge that had been weakened by a flood into Bull creek, near Randolph. The engine, baggage and mail cars fell into the water. A telephone message from Randolph said several trainmen were missing but that no bodies had been found.

TWENTY BLOWN TO ATOMS

Half Ton of Dynamite Explodes in New York State with Fatal Results.

Albany, N. Y.—The explosion of half a ton of dynamite in the stone quarry of the Callanan Road Improvement Company at South Bethlehem, near Albany, Wednesday, blew to atoms the bodies of 20 workmen.

One thousand pounds of dynamite exploded, and the bodies of the victims were hurled hundreds of feet by the concussion and so badly mutilated as to be almost beyond recognition. As darkness was falling a wagon drew up to the engine house loaded with bodies that had been picked up back on the quarry hill. A crowd of grief-stricken relatives gathered around eager to identify the dead, only to turn away at the sickening sight.

Italians with shovels found here and there portions of bodies and brought their gruesome loads in boxes to the engine house which served as a temporary morgue.

JURY FINDS HAINS GUILTY.

Army Officer Convicted of Slaying Annis—Verdict Is for First Degree Manslaughter.

Flushing, L. I.—Capt. Peter C. Hains, U. S. A., charged with the murder of William E. Annis at the Bayside Yacht club on the afternoon of August 15, 1908, was found guilty of manslaughter in the first degree by the jury in the case Tuesday.

The jury had been out two hours and 45 minutes, when the members filed back into the courtroom, crowded with spectators, and rendered the verdict, which was received by some in the nature of a surprise.

Immediately after the jury rendered its findings the captain was remanded to the custody of the sheriff until Monday, when he is to be sentenced by the court.

ARREST IOWA TEACHERS.

Des Moines School Ma'ams Held to Answer Charge of Cruelty to a Boy.

Des Moines, Ia.—Miss Maud Ewing and Miss Ida May Tilden, teachers in the Longfellow school here, were arrested Thursday, charged with having beaten nine-year-old David Kaplain until he was black and blue.

At a trial before Police Judge Stewart behind closed doors the teachers pleaded not guilty.

The teachers accused the little boy of stealing a five-dollar bill from Miss Tilden. When he denied the charge, he says they laid him over a chair and beat him with switches and pinched his cheeks and body.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. C. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

We wonder what ails the famous printer at Erie? Has he grown tired of trying to make himself famous by driving THE SUNBEAM out of business? Come on you old J. T. wreck, you have been picking for trouble for the past two years, now pitch in and enjoy yourself.

Beltrami county are $271,712, in debt. Gee Whize! Now we just come over here to tell you that Red Lake county have not got the worst board of county Commissioners in the northern part of the state, even if Thief River Falls does call part of them rogues, and Red Lake Fall the other part undesirable citizins,

Of six applicants for citizin papers at Crookston, recently three of them were refused admission to citizinship because they did not understand the english language. All questions are asked in the streight U. S. langugage and you are not allowed to have them interpreted, and if you can not understand the questions and answer them you will not get you papers. We will exchange a limited amout of American talk for grubbing and brush cutting If any yong man will grub on our farm during the day we will talk english to him at night.

The petition to divide Red Lake county has been filed with the secretary of state, and there it remains until three months before the next general election, then the governor issues his proclamation ordering it to be voted on at that elecction. Then it is placed on the ballots and it it gets a majority of the votes cast it carries. If there are more noe's then yeses the proposition is defeated, and if it gets more yeses than noes it carries. Then the law suit starts and it goes up to supream court, and they set the whole business aside, the same as they did Columbia county. There can be no special election called to vote on it.

When you receive your notice by registered mail, from the department of the Inteior, regarding the making of payments on your homested on this reservation, we would advise you to pay attention to it, if you do not want to loose your land. Do not take it and show it to every one you meet, until you meet some "smart guy" to tell you that you are all right, and the department of the Inteior don't know what they are talking about We bought the land under contract with the government and we got one year extension of time for making payment under that contract, then we took two more years time, without paying a cent, and now all they ask is payment up to within one year of the time we agreed to pay when we took the land We worked hard to get that first extenson of time, and have at all times tried to get all the favors we could granted to the settlers in geting time extended, of making payments. But now we are "up against it," and we advise you to govern yourselves by the notice you receive from the department of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington, instead of some cracker box orator in a country store, if you want to keep your land.

NEW FORMS AFTER JUNE 30.

Crookston Minn., May 10, 1909.

To all officers before whom Homestead proofs are taken.

The Commissioner of the general land office, with the approvel of the secretary of the Interior has adopted new forms for final and commuted homestead proofs and directed that no other forms will be used after June 30. We have ordered a sufficient number of these new forms to enable us to send some to each officer to start with. The new proofs will be much fuller and more compleat than the old ones.

Other papers are requested to copy this notice.

Carlyle Was a Terror.

The domestic infelicity of the Carlyles is common knowledge, but it is not inappropriate to give Mrs. Carlyle's view of her husband. "If he would only be satisfied!" she used to sometimes complain of Carlyle. "But I have had to learn that when he does not find fault he is pleased, and that has to content me."

On one occasion when Carlyle was away from home Mrs. Carlyle busied herself to get all in perfect order for her husband's arrival, and when all was complete—his dinner ready, his armchair in its usual position, his pipe and tobacco prepared, all looking as comfortable as possible—Mrs. C. sat down at last to rest and to expect him with a quiet mind. He arrived, and "after he had greeted me, what did you think he did? He walked to the window and shook it and asked, 'Where's the wedge of the window?' And until we had found that blessed wedge nothing would content him. He said the window would rattle and spoil all."

A Pessimist.

"Don't be too anxious to get a husband," said the wise matron. "Don't go around hunting for one."

"Think I should just sit down and wait for one, eh?" replied the maiden.

"Yes, for you'll sit up and wait for one often enough after you've got him."

Quite Natural.

Husband—What did you think when you heard the chandelier fall last night? Wife—Why, I thought you had been detained on business again and were getting upstairs as quietly as you could.

Where Snow Falls.

If you are not a lover of snow, go to Malta, which is the nearest spot where you are certain of complete immunity. If you are fond of it, the suburbs of St. Petersburg will furnish all you need to ask, for there you may be sure of it for 170 days in the year. The happy medium is supplied by Copenhagen, with thirty days, while Palermo, Rome and Venice, with one, two and five days respectively, may be recommended to those who merely care for snow as a casual and fleeting guest.—London Chronicle.

Unmasked.

"I was introduced to your wife today, and she glared at me."

"I can't account for that."

"I can. I s'pose I'm your scapegoat, you old fraud."—Kansas City Journal.

Try to be something in the world and you will be something. Aim at excellence and excellence will be attained.—Bolleau.

Not at a Loss.

Miss Azure Hose (from Boston)—Is your doctor's strong point diagnosis? Mrs. Jones (from Plainville)—No, I guess it 'tain't. Leastwise, he don't never prescribe it much.—Baltimore American.

Advancing.

"Is your daughter going to make her debut this season, Mrs. Parvenue?"

"No, indeed! Mme. Pakin attends to all that. We don't have to do our own sewing no more."—Baltimore American.

Raw Animals.

With a heart attuned to "nature study" a little Hungarian girl in the Canadian northwest exclaimed: "Yah, teacher. It's certain beautiful on our prairie, where the birds and the small sheep run about raw."

A Crushing Come Back.

"I started to tell my wife about a woman who made her own gowns."

"Well?"

"She capped my story with one about a man who made a million dollars."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

SINGER ANSWERS.

To late for publication last week.

Editor of The Sunbeam.

W. A. Swanson attempts to answer our plain statements of facts by his usal dodgeing methods, which reminds us of a flea, when you try to put your finger on him he is not there.

Now Mr. Swanson; we take the position that the people of Deer Park are the ones that are in the greatest need of this bridge at a point where they can get to it to cross, and take their grain to market at Thief River Falls. The Town of Higlanding is nearly all on the north side of the river and no one on that side have any occasion to cross the river as the creamery is on the north side and their road to market is on the north side of the river These are facts which you make no attempt to deny, but come out and say the people of Deer Park are "Tom Dick and Harry" that should not be considerd.

We are representing our neighbors the people of Deer Park, and not a few people liveing on the north side of Red Lake river in the town of Highlandirg, and as to your statement about looking people in the face, we are willing to wager a dollar against a doughnut, that if you were to face the people of Deer Park as a candidate for pound master, or dog catcher you could not get five votes in the townshp,

Carrying a Watch.

"After carrying a watch for thirty years I have just learned something new in watch lore," said the city salesman. "I don't know whether this is true or not, but an old watchmaker told me. I bought a watch of him the other day. It was a cheap watch. He said:

"'What pocket are you going to carry your watch in—the right or left?'

"I told him the left.

"'Then,' said he, 'I will regulate it for the left.'

"I asked what difference it made, and he declared that a watch runs faster on the left side than on the right, so to keep it from gaining time he regulates it accordingly. In fine watches the difference is hardly worth considering, but in watches of cheap make like mine it is very noticeable. I asked for a scientific reason for this variation. He could give none; said he only knew it was true, and then, whether he was faking or not, he pretended to regulate my watch for the left pocket."—New York Sun.

Philosopher and Philanthropist.

"Coquelin was very charitable," said a theatrical manager. "He did more for superannuated actors and actresses than any other man in France. I once heard him speak on charity in the French Actors' home, that he did so much for.

"'There are plenty of philanthropists,' said Coquelin. 'There are plenty of philosophers—plenty, I mean, according to the definition that too many of us accept.'

"He smiled grimly.

"'Too many of us,' said Coquelin, 'define a philosopher as one who bears with resignation the cold and hunger from which his neighbor is suffering, and too many of us define a philanthropist as one who gives away other people's money.'"

Odd Punishment.

Bigamists in Hungary get odd punishment. The man silly enough to marry two wives is legally forced to live with both of them in the same house.

Murder in Spain.

Spain has a death penalty, but rarely imposes it, the customary sentence for premeditated homicide being penal servitude in chains for life. A parricide is punished by being imprisoned in chains "in perpetuity until death."

Starboard and Port.

Why do the sailors call the right hand side of the ship "starboard" and the left hand "port?" For the answer it is necessary to go back to the days of the Norsemen and Saxons. In the viking ships the warriors hung the "bords," or shields, on the side of the ship above the places for their oars. The viking himself held the steer oar, which was fastened to the right hand side of the stern. Thus the right hand side of the ship became known as the steer side, and as the bords of the warriors were hung there it was called the "steerbord," or starboard side, while the lower, or lurking side, became the larboard. Bord eventually became corrupted into [illegible]

Condor Individuality.

We had the best chance of studying the colors of the condor head. The bill was horn color, and the red skin of the head extended down, covering it about halfway. The legs were tan, but on each knee was a patch of red. On the breast of each bird the skin was blood red and could be seen occasionally when the breast feathers were spread and the birds were preening. Both had light colored wing bars, and the primaries were well worn. The skin on the throat hung loose, and the lower mandible fitted close under the upper The chin was orange red, and below this on the neck was a strip of greenish yellow merging into the orange about the sides and back of the neck. The top and front of the head were red, but between the eyes was a small patch of black feathers, and these extended down in front of the eye into the orange red of the cheek. The pupil of the eye was black, but the iris was deep and red and conspicuous. The bald and wrinkled pate, the flabby jowls, with the cave-in expression of a toothless old woman—these helped to make up the condor individuality.—William L. Finley in Century.

THE Marlin Model 1894 is a medium light weight repeating rifle, a well proportioned, finely balanced gun with all the advantages and comforts of the Marlin solid-top, [illegible] construction. It is quick and easy of operation, accurate up to 300 yards and a very pleasant gun to carry and to shoot.

For settled districts and farming country where the shooting at woodchucks, badgers, foxes, 'coons, hawks, etc., is at ranges from 100 to 200 yards, the .25-20 and .32-20 rifles with [illegible] and low-pressure smokeless loads cannot be equalled [illegible] safety. The factory ammunition for the Model '94 rifles is cheap and can be reloaded at very small cost.

The up-to-date sportsman needs the "Marlin Book" every day in the year. It contains 136 pages of [illegible] for the man who loves a good gun, and wants to know everything about it. FREE for 3 stamps postage.

Chinaware of the Big Hotels.

The only china used at private dinners at the Knickerbocker in New York is the bleue de sevres, which was made in France especially for this hotel, with blue and gold pattern and the monogram of the hotel on the rim of each piece. There are seventy-two pieces to a set, and each piece cost $6. At the Plaza and Astor the cost of each piece is $4 and $5 respectively, and designs are white and gold and plain white with border of asters. Great care has been taken and large expense incurred in obtaining the choicest china for the Waldorf-Astoria. For select private dinners the "crown" set is used, consisting of specimens from the sets of royalty dating from the time of Napoleon to the present. The pattern is a blue and gold border with a picture in the center of each piece of the king and queen to whom that particular piece belonged. The set could not be duplicated for $1,000,000.—Good Housekeeping.

Fourteenth Century Doctors.

Synge's "Social Life in England" quotes a number of fourteenth century hints to success for physicians:

Suppose you know nothing, say there is an obstruction of the liver. Perhaps the patient will say, "Nay, master, it is my head or legs that trouble me." Repeat that it comes from the liver, and especially use the word "obstruction," for patients do not understand it, which is important.

Never dine with a patient who has not paid you. It will be cheaper to get your dinner at an inn, for such feasts are usually deducted from the surgeon's fee.

When you are treating a wound or accident, the friends of the patient should be excluded, for they may faint and cause a disturbance, but sometimes a higher fee may be got from persons present fainting and breaking their heads against wood and the like than from the principal patient.

With proper knowledge of what is best, each hour of recreation, of enjoyment, of contemplation and of effort may be made to contribute to living aright. QUALIFICATIONS OF BASEBALL CATCHER

FATE OF A GAME LARGELY DEPENDS ON ABILITY AND JUDGMENT OF BACKSTOP.

IS PIVOTAL POINT OF TEAM

Must Be a Good Thrower and Fearless of Spikes of Runners Trying to Score from Third—Manager Chance of World's Champions Tells What Constitutes Good Receiver.

The catcher is the pivotal point of a ball club; on him hangs the fate of the game. He is the man that is expected to outguess the batter and tell the pitcher what to put over in the crisis. He must not only be an ordinarily good receiver, able to hold the speed of the twirler, but he must be game to the core, not afraid to stand up at the plate when a runner is tearing in from third attempting to score, ready to put the ball on the opponent regardless of the danger of getting spiked. He must be a good thrower to bases, and must use judgment in making such throws. He must have the intuition to know which direction a foul ball is going and not afraid to bump into the grand stand, if necessary, to catch that ball after making a long, hard run for it.

"Young catchers would do well to study carefully the way great backstops in the game to-day handle themselves," says Manager Chance of the champion Cubs. "Catchers are, I believe, the hardest men to find when you are going out after a really great player, and more depends on them than any other single cog in the baseball machine. It is easy enough to find mechanical catchers. There are plenty of them, both in and out of the big leagues; the truly great ones can be counted on the fingers of one hand.

"Too many youngsters getting their first tryout in the big league display weaknesses that are almost impossible to overcome. For instance, if a man is so built that he is afraid of getting spiked by a base runner coming in from third, who is making a desperate effort to score, and who is going to jump in hard, feet first, there is no way to overcome the disposition to back up from the plate to take the ball and attempt to tag the runner as he slides by, rather than block him off the rubber and put the ball on him. Many and many a game has been won and lost on exactly this kind of a play, the base-runner succeeding in eluding the catcher, though the latter may have had the ball in plenty of time to put it on him. The demand which is becoming more and more insistent, that the catcher stand directly in the path of the base-runner and block him off from the plate, is what has led to the use of shin guards to protect the backstop from the injury resulting from the spikes of the runner.

"There are many catchers in the business with great throwing arms and still they are not regarded as particularly dangerous; certainly not as great backstops. The chief reason is that they do not use the proper judgment in the use of this ability. Base runners soon come to know how well any catcher throws and what liberties can be taken with him, how big a lead can be taken off any base and whether the catcher is likely to take a chance on nipping him off second at critical moments. Great catchers seldom throw to bases promiscuously. They go after a base runner only when he becomes too bold and gets too far off the bag, making the play practically sure of success. Base runners soon come to fear such a man more than the one who is continually heaving to the infielders. The catcher who is constantly throwing to get base runners stands just that much chance of making bad and costly throws than the one who is conservative.

"The greatest illustration of the value of the conservative throwing catcher was in the fourth game of the world's series played in Detroit last fall between the Cubs and Tigers. The fourth inning of that game was one of the greatest ever played on a ball field. We had a lead of two runs, the Tigers not having scored. That inning O'Leary led off with a base hit over Tinker, and Crawford shot another between short and third. Cobb was up and the situation was dangerous. Every one remembers how Brown forced Cobb to bunt toward third, forcing O'Leary out at that bag. Then came Kling's great throw to Tinker, at second, catching Crawford off that bag and removing the possibility of a run for the American leaguers should Claude Rossman hit safely. Those two plays—Cobb's bunt to Brown and Kling's throw catching Crawford insured the second world's championship for the Cubs.

"Outguessing a batter and knowing in which direction a foul ball is going are two things no catcher can ever be taught. There are certain general rules about how to mix up curves, speed and slow balls to a batter, but they are not absolute, and it is up to the catcher to figure out what it is the man with the stick is looking for, and then cross him. There is where head work counts if it doesn't anywhere else.

"A catcher can be taught the weaknesses of the batsmen, but he must possess this quality as well or he is merely a mechanical player. The ability to know which way to turn to go after a foul ball is intuitive; it cannot be taught to any man."

Counsel Sought from Christian Men.

An evidence of the part which our missionary colleges are to play in the reconstruction of Turkey is found in the appointment of two professors in Euphrates college on a committee to consider educational measures for one of the large interior provinces. One, Prof. N. Tenekijian, several years ago served a term of six months in prison, being falsely accused of disloyalty, and Prof. Nahigian studied for a time under President Angell at Ann Arbor. Both are scholarly and earnest Christian men. The same governor has also asked Dr. H. N. Barnum, the veteran missionary of the American board in eastern Turkey, to suggest what in his judgment will promote popular education and social reform.

Who Said Them?

The golden text was "Suffer the little children to come unto me," and it had been recited to the class by a cherub on the front bench. Later in the afternoon the teacher, in the course of the lessons, had occasion to refer to the text.

"Now, children," she said, "who said those words?" and she repeated them. A hand went up from one of the larger boys on the back bench, and receiving permission to answer, he said, pointing to the cherub: "That little feller down there."

LIGHT BOOZE
Do You Drink It?

A minister's wife had quite a tussle with coffee and her experience is interesting. She says:

"During the two years of my training as a nurse, while on night duty, I became addicted to coffee drinking. Between midnight and four in the morning, when the patients were asleep, there was little to do except make the rounds, and it was quite natural that I should want a good, hot cup of coffee about that time. It stimulated me and I could keep awake better.

"After three or four years of coffee drinking I became a nervous wreck and thought that I simply could not live without my coffee. All this time I was subject to frequent bilious attacks, sometimes so severe as to keep me in bed for several days.

"After being married, Husband begged me to leave off coffee for he feared that it had already hurt me almost beyond repair, so I resolved to make an effort to release myself from the hurtful habit.

"I began taking Postum, and for a few days felt the languid, tired feeling from the lack of the stimulant, but I liked the taste of Postum and that answered for the breakfast beverage all right.

"Finally I began to feel clearer headed and had steadier nerves. After a year's use of Postum I now feel like a new woman—have not had any bilious attacks since I left off coffee."

FEW CARESSES IN HER LIFE

Infinite Pathos in Remark Made by Little Philadelphia Child of the Slums.

Dr. Herman L. During, superintendent of the Philadelphia City mission, has for many years devoted his life to the poor. Dr. During is the inventor of the pretzel test for street beggars. When a street beggar pleads starvation, you buy him a big German pretzel at the nearest stand. If he eats the pretzel, he is honest; if he refuses it, he is a fraud.

Dr. During in his work among the poor has learned many odd, quaint things that he relates superbly, for he is a born story-teller. In an address at Bala, apropos of the hard, rough lives of the children of the poor, he related a dialogue between two little girls in Rum alley.

"Maggie, wuz ye ever kissed?" said the first tot.

"'On'y wunst in me life wot I kin remember,' said the second. 'When I wuz in de Honnyman hospital wid a broken arm one o' de lady nusses kissed me, an' I blushed like a child.'"

Two Little Girls Had Eczema Very Badly—In One Case Child's Hair Came Out and Left Bare Patches.

Cuticura Met with Great Success.

"I have two little girls who have been troubled very badly with eczema. One of them had it on her lower limbs. I did everything that I could hear of for her, but it did not give in until warm weather, when it seemingly subsided. The next winter when it became cold the eczema started again and also in her head where it would take the hair out and leave bare patches. At the same time her arms were sore the whole length of them. I took her to a physician, but the child grew worse all the time. Her sister's arms were also affected. I began using Cuticura Remedies, and by the time the second lot was used their skin was soft and smooth. Mrs. Charles Baker, Albion, Me., Sept. 21, '08."

What Kind of an "Office."

Once upon a time a child who was asked on an examination paper to define a mountain range, replied: "A large-sized cook stove." The same method of reasoning seems to go with older growth. A recent examination paper at the Sheffield Scientific school at Yale contained the question, "What is the office of the gastric juice?" And the answer on one paper read: "The stomach."—Everybody's Magazine.

Answer This Question

When thousands of women say that they have been cured of their ailments by a certain remedy, does this not prove the merit of that remedy?

Thousands of women have written the story of their suffering, and have told how they were freed from it by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—for thirty years these reports have been published all over America.

Without great merit this medicine could never have gained the largest sale of any remedy for woman's ills—never could have become known and prized in nearly every country in the world.

Can any woman let prejudice stand between her and that which will restore her health? If you believe those who have tried it you know this medicine does cure.

Read this letter from a grateful woman, then make up your mind to give Mrs. Pinkham's medicine a chance to cure you.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—"I am a firm believer in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was a great sufferer from organic female troubles for years, and almost despaired of ever being well again. I had bearing-down pains, backache, headache and pains in my abdomen, and tried Mrs. Pinkham's Compound as a last resort. The result was astonishing, and I have used it and advocated it ever since. It is a great boon to expectant mothers. I have often said that I should like to have its merits thrown on the sky with a search-light so that women would read and be convinced that there is a remedy for their sufferings.

"My husband joins me in its praise. He has used it for kidney trouble and been entirely cured."—Mrs. E. A. Bishop, 1915 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

☞ Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

H. H. ROGERS IS DEAD

AMERICAN BUSINESS WORLD LOSES ONE OF ITS GREATEST GENIUSES.

LEAVES $75,000,000 FORTUNE

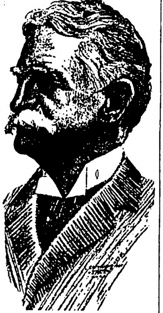
Successor of John D. Rockefeller as Standard Oil's Chief, King of Copper Industry, Victim of Apoplexy—Funeral Services Friday.

New York.—The American business world lost one of its greatest geniuses when Henry Huddleston Rogers, vice-president of the Standard Oil Company, leader in the Amalgamated Copper Company, director in a score of big concerns, builder of railroads and philanthropist, died Wednesday of apoplexy.

Death came a little more than an hour after Mr. Rogers had risen for the day, mentioning to his wife that he was feeling ill. At seven o'clock he lapsed into unconsciousness and before the family physician arrived he was dead. Mr. Rogers was 69 years old.

While Mr. Rogers' death was sudden and unexpected, he had been in indifferent health since he suffered an apoplectic stroke in 1907, and was almost constantly under a physician's care. His end was a great shock to his business associates.

News of the financier's death did not become generally known till about two hours after it occurred. The stock exchange had not opened when the report reached Wall street, but with the opening there was hardly an appreciable effect on the market.



H. H. Rogers.

Henry H. Rogers was a money maker and one of the most successful men of the so-called Standard Oil group. He began life as a poor boy at Fairhaven, Mass., where he was born, and retained his legal residence there until the day of his death. He is variously reported as having commenced life as a newsboy and as a driver of a grocery cart, but whatever his humble start in business he achieved a success attained by only a few men of a generation.

Mr. Rogers was a man of many friends and an enthusiatstic yachtsman. Until recently he had held the reins of the Standard Oil Company following the retirement of John D. Rockefeller, although J. B. Archbold attended to the routine management of the great corporation. Just how much money Mr. Rogers leaves is not known. His fortune is variously estimated at from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000, which will make his son, H. H. Rogers, Jr., one of the richest men in the country. Whether the son or Mr. Broughton, son-in-law of Mr. Rogers, will carry on his affairs is a matter of speculation in the financial district.

The widow he leaves is his second wife, his first wife having died 14 years ago, and he is survived in addition by four children, the son mentioned, and the following daughters: Mrs. W. E. Benjamin, Mrs. Urben H. Broughton and Mrs. William R. Coe.

New York.—The funeral services in this city of Henry H. Rogers, vice-president of the Standard Oil Company, president of the Amalgamated Copper Company, took place in the Church of the Messiah Friday morning. Rev. Dr. Robert Collyer delivered a touching eulogy to the famous financier.

The pall bearers were Messrs. Elbert H. Garry, George W. Perkins, James A. Moffett, John D. Archbold, C. A. Peabody, A. S. Paine, William Rockefeller, E. H. Harriman, Edward T. Bedford, James M. Beck, Melville E. Stone, James Jordan, John D. Ryan, Samuel L. Clemens, Dr. C. C. Rice and Raymond Dupuy.

ACCEPTS TILLMAN'S ADVICE

ALDRICH ADMITS HE DESERVES SENATOR'S CRITICISM.

Complaint That Too Much Time Is Spent in Useless Wrangling Agreed To.

Washington.—The unusual spectacle of Senator Aldrich accepting the advice and admitting he deserved the criticism of Senator Tillman, was presented in the senate Thursday after the finance committee had triumphed on the lead schedule.

Before another paragraph could be taken up, Senator Tillman arose and said he wanted to make a suggestion to the chairman of the committee on finance.

"We have," he said, "just spent the best part of a day in a useless wrangle resulting in the usual victory of a majority of eight or ten votes for the astute manager in control of this bill. I want to suggest that he might get a good many more votes if he would enforce the rule which forbids a senator to speak more than twice on the same subject."

"I am not sure," said Senator Aldrich in reply, "that I do not deserve the suggestion and criticism of the senator from South Carolina. I have been hoping that much of the discussion here which seemed unnecessary would cease."

Senator Aldrich appealed for relevancy in the discussion in the paragraphs of the bill. "I accept," he said, "the criticism of the senator from South Carolina because I think it is deserved."

Senator Tillman, being accused by Senator Bacon of being the chief offender in speaking many times on the same amendment, protested, and his protest was followed by a statement by Senator Aldrich that it was his intention at an early day to satisfy the senator from South Carolina that the tariff bill should be proceeded with "morning, afternoon and night until disposed of."

The lead duty fixed by the committee was originally 2⅞ cents per pound, but Senator Curtis, who is a member of the committee, suggested a reduction of one-eighth of a cent a pound, bringing the figure down to 2¾ cents, and Chairman Aldrich accepted the reduction.

Senators Beveridge, Bristow, Brown, Burkett, Clapp, Cummins, Dolliver, Gamble, La Follette and Nelson voted with the Democrats. Senator Borah voted with the Republicans.

"The trusts are ghosts," declared Senator Heyburn in replying to suggestions that the "lead trust" was interested in the duty on lead.

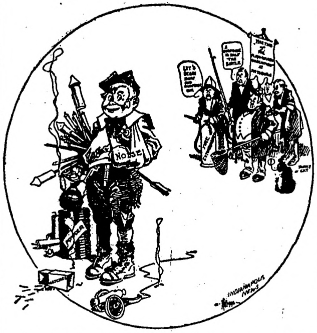
Statue of George Rogers Clark.

The statue, which is nine feet high, is the work of Charles J. Mulligan of the Chicago Art institute, and is pronounced by critics to be one of the best in the middle west. The base of the monument, designed by W. Carbys Zimmerman of Springfield, the state architect, is of gray granite on a cement foundation and is 18 feet high. Mr. Mulligan and Mr. Zimmerman were both present at the unveiling.

Standing on the brow of a hill from which may be seen the expanse of the Mississippi, the statue depicts the American leader in a pose which is thoughtful, gentle and yet heroic. It represents him as clad in the uniform of a continental general, as he was when he captured Kaskaskia in 1778.

AN OUNCE OF EARLY PREVENTION.



KING FORCES AN APOLOGY

EARL OF RONALDSHAY "SORRY" FOR HIS INSULT.

Called Countess Granard a "Dumped American Heiress Fortunate Enough to Secure a Title."

London. — The earl of Ronaldshay's apology to the countess of Granard (who was Miss Beatrice Mills of New York) for publicly calling her "a dumped American heiress who has been fortunate enough to secure a title," has not even the merit of spontaneity. The apology was made in deference to the king's express wish.

Were it not for the American peeress and the American "millionairess" that luxurious circle of English society patronized by the king could not exist a month. So King Edward frowns on anything that might discourage English peers from marrying wealthy American women, or anything likely to render English society distasteful to American women.

Lord Ronaldshay, eldest son and heir of the marquis of Zetland, belongs to an influential family. Ronaldshay is the unionist member of the house of commons for the Hornsey division of Middlesex. Thither went the countess of Granard and opened a bazar organized by Lord Ronaldshay's Liberal opponent. The countess, who has been active on behalf of her husband's party, spent money lavishly at the bazar, and consequently made a deep impression on the voters. Lord Ronaldshay, much irritated, made his insulting remarks about the countess speaking in a North London suburb.

DECISION AGAINST NEGRO.

Black Does Not Suffer Same Humiliation for False Arrest as White, Says Court.

New York. — A negro and a white man do not suffer equal humiliation in the eyes of law for false arrest, according to the appellate division of the supreme court, which sustained an order of Justice Dugro of the supreme court, reducing the amount of damages awarded George Griffin, a Pullman porter, from $2,500 to $300. The negro was arrested in Montreal, charged with stealing a pocketbook, but the charge was not substantiated and he was released. He brought suit against Daniel H. Brady, a New York manufacturer, who caused his arrest.

In his order, Justice Dugro said: "While in some senses the negro under the law is just as good as a man as the president of the United States, it would be a bad argument to say that he is just as good in some respects. The damages in a case of this kind depend on a man's standing and circumstances. If he is colored, that fact should be considered."

KILLS SELF AND BABES.

East Hampton, Conn., Woman Cuts Throats of Children and Herself.

East Hampton, Conn. — Mrs. Louis Carsten cut the throats of her three children and then her own at the Carsten home, a farm about two miles from the center of this village.

Two of the children, Louis, aged ten years, John, seven years old, and a ten-months-old girl, are dead, and Mrs. Carsten is dying.

Mrs. Carsten lived long enough to reply to her husband when he asked the reason for her acts: "I wanted to die, and I wanted to take the children with me. I did not want to leave them."

CONSERVATION WORK URGED.

Joint Committee Proposes a Plan to the Commissions in the Various States.

Washington.—Inventories of the natural resources of every state and territory are proposed in a plan just announced by the joint committee of conservation in this city. The joint committee is national headquarters for the conservation movement, and has offices in the Wyatt building. All of the 48 big national organizations now working with the joint committee through their conservation committees are to be asked to help, each in its own special field.

The plan contemplates the practical application by the states and national organizations of the conservation principles declared by the governors and presidents of the great national organizations in their notable conference at the White House a year ago. Letters explaining the plan have been sent out to the chairmen of the official conservation commissions which the governors of 38 states have appointed, and letters to the national organizations will follow.

The joint committee suggests early meetings of the state conservation commissions to take up, first, the most pressing conservation problems in the respective states. For instance, in Louisiana it is the terrific waste of natural gas which the state conservation commission is already trying to stop. In Oregon a pressing question has been water power, which is also a leading issue just now in Michigan and Wisconsin. In many states it is the forest question. The question of the conservation of water power takes a front rank in a great many states, and it is becoming more and more of a general issue.

ROOSEVELTS SLAY BISON.

Ex-President Bags One Alone and He and Kermit Kill Another Together.

Nairobi, British East Africa.—Theodore Roosevelt and his son Kermit are continuing their hunting excursions from their camp on the Heatley ranch on the Nairobi river. Two bull buffaloes have fallen before their guns. One, the bigger of the two, was brought down by Mr. Roosevelt alone, while the other was bagged by Mr. Roosevelt and Kermit together.

Nairobi, British East Africa. — Theodore Roosevelt has begun his hunting expedition from the Ju Ja ranch of George McMillan, whose guest he is. He went out and bagged a female rhinoceros. The first shot wounded her in the shoulder and the animal fled to the bushes. Mr. Roosevelt followed on horseback and six more shots were required to bring her down. The head and skin weighed 532 pounds.

SHERMAN FOR GOOD ROADS

Vice-President in Address to National Congress Favors Improvement of Public Highways.

Baltimore, Md. — With a speech by Vice-President James S. Sherman, the National Good Roads Congress held its final session.

"I am interested in any meeting," said Mr. Sherman, "which has for its object the promotion of good roads, good streets and good highways in general. It is the ability to transport our goods which makes our country so prosperous.

"We should devote our time and energies to our commercial industries and our internal improvements. Our highways have not been developed. The roads of England, France and Switzerland put our roads to shame."

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Physician Makes Record Run.

Winona.—A record run was made from Rochester to Winona, 50 miles, by a special train on the Northwestern road. The engine and one coach carrying Dr. William Mayo made the trip in the remarkable time of one hour and three minutes, and returned at practically same breakneck speed. The famous Rochester surgeon received word at 1:30 o'clock that he was desired in consultation in the case of John Latsch, Sr., prominent local wholesale grocer and he was requested to come at once at any cost. A special train was made up and hurried to this city. He diagnosed the case in a few minutes and returned in time to keep an urgent appointment at Rochester at 4 o'clock.

Get Reckless Fishers.

St. Paul.—State game wardens are finding more fishermen than usual who have the story about the bass that would take the hook and were landed by mistake. Several arrests have been made already, and Carlos Avery, executive agent, says that May promises to break the record for prosecutions of illegal fishing. There have been thirty-four prosecutions within the last twelve days in various parts of the state for various kinds of illegal fishing, but a number have been for taking bass out of season. The law now permits the taking of any sort of fish except bass, which are not legally caught till May 29.

Petition for a New County.

As the outgrowth of the vigorous county seat fight in Red Lake county, between Red Lake Falls and Thief River Falls, a petition has been filed with the secretary of state for the organization of a new county, to be carved out of Red Lake and to be known as Pennington county, named after President Pennington of the Soo railway. This is a Thief River Falls movement. A short time ago the courthouse was burned at Red Lake Falls and the petition is the first step in a probable effort to restrain by injunction the issuance of bonds to rebuild the courthouse.

City May Buy Phone Lines.

Thief River Falls.—The city council passed a resolution which calls for a special election to be held on July 12 to decide whether the city council may be authorized to purchase or build a local telephone exchange. A straw vote was taken on this proposition at a recent special election and was carried almost unanimously. The city now owns its own electric plant and waterworks and is committed to ownership of public utilities whenever, as in the case of those possessed, they promise to return an income to the taxpayers.

No Gambling at Winona.

Winona.—Winona's new mayor, W. E. Hamilton, has adopted a drastic policy. It was intimated that the saloons were not complying with the state law regulating closing, and on Sunday last he issued orders through the police department calling for strict compliance, and as a result the city experienced the dryest Sabbath in many years. Following closely upon the first order, the police department issued notice that all slot machines and other gambling devices must be removed under penalty of arrest and prosecution.

Property Waits for Russell.

Thomas Russell, 30 years old, said to be somewhere in Minnesota, is being sought by his sister, Miss Elsie Russell. His mother died in New York city a few weeks ago and left considerable property to her only son. He has not been heard from for some time and his relatives are anxious to locate him. He married in Eau Claire two years ago. His mother heard from him a month before she died, but since her death the sister has not had a word from him.

NEWS NOTES.

Montevideo.—The teachers of Lac qui Parle, Chippewa and Yellow Medicine counties, will have a state teachers' training school at Montevideo in June and July.

Waseca.—The council has passed a resolution requiring the saloons to close at 10 p. m. from May 1 to Nov. 1 and at 9 p. m. from Nov. 1 to May 1. The saloon license for the ensuing year has been raised from $500 to $700.

Detroit.—Henry Dalen, who has served as county auditor for several terms, sent in his resignation to the county commissioners. The resignation was accepted and A. C. Knudson, deputy auditor, was appointed to fill the vacancy. Mr. Dalen is interested in a new bank just starting here and resigns to accept the presidency of that institution. Mr. Knudson is probably the youngest county auditor in the state, being only 23 years of age.

AFTER SUFFERING ONE YEAR

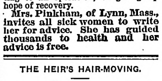
Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Milwaukee, Wis. — "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me a well woman, and I would like to tell the whole world of it. I suffered from female trouble and fearful pains in my back. I had the best doctors and they all decided that I had a tumor in addition to my female trouble, and advised an operation. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman and I have no more backache. I hope I can help others by telling them what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me." — MRS. EMMA IMSE, 833 First St., Milwaukee, Wis.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women after all other means have failed, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health and her advice is free.

THE HEIR'S HAIR-MOVING.



Mr. White—It's no use, my dear, I shall have to have my whiskers off; baby is pulling 'em out by the roots.

Mrs. White—How unfeeling of you. It's the only thing that keeps baby quiet. Now you threaten to take the dear's enjoyment away!

Kicking Kindness Into Him.

The benevolent old gentleman got busy when he saw four boys eight or nine years of age attack one boy of about the same age.

"You mustn't, you mustn't," he said, when he had hauled them off, "attack your little companion this way. What has he done to deserve such harsh treatment?"

The four boys glowered sullenly while the one boy whimpered as he thought what would happen to him when the benevolent gentleman went on his way.

"Well," said one of the four at last, "he won't join the band of kindness our teacher wants to get up at school!"

THINK HARD

It Pays to Think About Food.

The unthinking life some people lead often causes trouble and sickness, illustrated in the experience of a lady in Fond Du Lac, Wis.

"About four years ago I suffered dreadfully from indigestion, always having eaten whatever I liked, not thinking of the digestible qualities. This indigestion caused palpitation of the heart so badly I could not walk up a flight of stairs without sitting down once or twice to regain breath and strength.

"I became alarmed and tried dieting, wore my clothes very loose, and many other remedies, but found no relief.

"Hearing of the virtues of Grape-Nuts and Postum, I commenced using them in place of my usual breakfast of coffee, cakes, or hot biscuit, and in one week's time I was relieved of sour stomach and other ills attending indigestion. In a month's time my heart was performing its functions naturally and I could climb stairs and hills and walk long distances.

"I gained ten pounds in this short time, and my skin became clear and I completely regained my health and strength. I continue to use Grape-Nuts and Postum for I feel that I owe my good health entirely to their use. "There's a Reason."

"I like the delicious flavour of Grape-Nuts and by making Postum according to directions, it tastes similar to mild high grade coffee."

The Red Lake River seems to be going dry. The outlet at the lake must be pluged up.

St. Hilaire have pulled their coats to fight county division, with the rally cry of, "remember the Agricultural school."

It is reported that the Soo line from Thief River Falls to Duluth will follow the north line survey, which is the one that will pass throu this locality.

The town of Kratka will have two free ferrys for patrons of their creamery, which will likely get all the former patrons and share holders of the Highland ing creamer on this side of the river. Then two or three parties at Highlanding can view their noble efforts, with pride, as they have cleand out the people on this side and headed them off from geting any passiable road to the creamery They were so affraid that the state and county might put in a ferry so we could get across to get to the creamery that they pulld their ferry out so they could say they had no ferry and try to get the ferry put in there, so as to head us off from having any way to get out on the [illegible] side of the river.

The Hen's Repartee.

The roosters smiled and the ducks did grin
When the brown hen sat in the old coal bin.
But the brown hen laughed as well as they
And said: "Now listen to my lay:
'The old coal bin is the place for me,
For it's filled with egg coal, don't you see.'"

Corrected.

It was on a street car in the city of Washington. Two colored women in cheaply gorgeous splendor were talking, and one chanced to mention a Mr. Jinks in her conversation.

"Excuse me," said the other woman, "but his name is not Jinks. It is Mr. Jenks."

"Oh, I sees," said the other woman complaisantly—"I sees that you puts de access on de pronoun."—Lippincott's.

The Blushing Bride.

A clergyman, having performed the marriage ceremony for a couple, undertook to write out the usual certificate; but, being in doubt as to the day of the month, he asked, "This is the ninth, is it not?"

"Why, parson," said the blushing bride, "you do all my marrying, and you ought to remember that this is only the third."—Current Literature.

The Bachelor's Will.

There was a jolly bachelor
Who died at eighty-eight,
And by his will the good man left
The whole of his estate
To women who had answered nay
When asked by him to wed.
For he declared he owed to them
The happy life he'd led.

A Substitute.

Where Snow Falls.

If you are not a lover of snow, go to Malta, which is the nearest spot where you are certain of complete immunity. If you are fond of it, the suburbs of St. Petersburg will furnish all you need to ask, for there you may be sure of it for 170 days in the year. The happy medium is supplied by Copenhagen, with thirty days, while Palermo, Rome and Venice, with one, two and five days respectively, may be recommended to those who merely care for snow as a casual and fleeting guest.—London

The Oyster Crab.

Some of the most remarkable crabs in the world live at the expense of other animals. They are crustacean tramps and have no shame in sustaining existence at other animals' cost. One of these marine tramps is a little fellow that makes its home with the living oyster. In fact, it dwells in the oyster's shell and feeds on whatever is left over from the mollusk's dinners. Oddly enough, however, it is only the female that has this habit of "boarding out." The male crab has no permanent home, but spends its time swimming about at the surface of the water. Oyster crabs sometimes are big enough to have an arm stretch of an inch. Epicures consider them very good to eat. Sometimes they are cooked separately, and occasionally they are pickled. Crabs of nearly allied species, somewhat bigger, are found in the shells of mussels and scallops. In this case, again, only the female is a parasite.

Scottish Caution.

Certainly the cautious Scot spirit pervaded the opinions of the Scottish architect who was called upon to erect a building in England upon the long lease system, so common with Anglican proprietors, but quite new to our friend. When he found the proposal was to build upon the tenure of 999 years he quietly suggested: "Could ye no mak' it a thousand? Nine hundred and ninety-nine years 'll be slippin' awa'."

But of all the cautious and careful answers we ever heard of was one given by a carpenter to an old lady in Glasgow, for whom he was working, and the anecdote is well authenticated. She had offered him a dram and asked him whether he would have it then or wait till his work was done. "Indeed, mem," he said, "there's been sic a power o' sudden deaths lately that I'll just tak' it now."—"Reminiscences of Dean Ramsay."

Gallantry.

At a school in Aberdeen a teacher was examining her class on the Bible, the lesson being a part of Genesis. The teacher asked her class, "Why did the serpent tempt Eve instead of Adam?"

For some time there was silence, but at length a little boy held up his hand and replied, "Please, mum, 'cause it's ladies first."—Tit-Bits.

The Real Thing.

"How do youh possum taste, suh?" asked the solicitous waiter.

"Well," responded the patron who had ordered the article, "it tastes pretty good, but it isn't possum."

"No, suh," rejoined the waiter, "an' dat's a sign it's genuine. De genuine possum is a great pretender, suh; yas, suh."—Philadelphia Ledger.

LONG FELT WANT.

A Plea For a Graduated Standard of Misconduct.

What is really wanted at the present time is a standard of misconduct. We are constantly doing things in doubt, as if we hadn't a right to do them.

The confusion caused by people doing things which in their circumstances we had no right to expect is the principal cause of our troubles. It ought to be definitely settled, for example, that any millionaire who has, say, over a hundred millions will thereafter lead an honest life. If he has only fifty millions his life should be semi-honest, and if he has only a paltry ten millions then it ought to be conceded that he can loot a few railroads or so until he gets on his feet.

Up to, say, ten thousand a year no man can afford to be dishonest. He ought to get up in the cars and give his seat to women under thirty-five at least, and of course he will not take the chance of robbing any safe. From ten thousand up to a hundred thousand he can engage in little dishonest fliers by making one of a pool or putting through a land deal or so for variety.

When he gets fifty millions or more together, however, every man ought to ask himself plainly the question whether from now on he ought not to be a philanthropist. Doesn't he owe this to his fellow men?—Life.

HE GOT THE TICKET.

A Simple Little Errand That Made a Lot of Commotion.

One of the most amusing accidents imaginable happened to an old gentleman in one of our large eastern cities. He was asked to buy a ticket to a fireman's ball and good naturedly complied. The next question was what to do with it. He had two servants, either of whom would be glad to use it, but he did not wish to show favoritism.

Then it occurred to him that he might buy another ticket and give both his servants a pleasure. Not knowing where the tickets were sold, he inquired of a policeman, and the officer suggested that he go to the engine house. So the old gentleman went to the engine house that evening, but there was no one in sight. He had never been in such a place before and stood for a moment or so uncertain how to make his presence known.

Presently he saw an electric button on the side of the room, and he put his thumb on it.

The effect was electrical in every sense of the word. Through the ceiling, down the stairs and from every other direction firemen came running and falling, the horses rushed out of their stalls, and, in short, all the machinery of a modern engine house was instantly in motion.

Amid all this uproar stood the innocent old gentleman, who did not suspect that he had touched the fire alarm until the men clamored around him for information as to the locality of the fire.

Then he said mildly, "I should like to buy another ticket for the ball, if you please."

The situation was so ludicrous that there was a general shout of laughter, and the old gentleman bought his ticket, and the engine house resumed its former state of quiet.—Exchange.

CHOOSING A VOCATION.

Follow Common Sense and Conscience and Do Your Best.

It is very certain that no man is fit for everything, but it is almost as certain, too, that there is scarce any one man who is not fit for something, which something nature plainly points out to him by giving him a tendency and propensity to it.

I look upon common sense to be to the mind what conscience is to the heart—the faithful and constant monitor of what is right or wrong. And I am convinced that no man commits either a crime or a folly but against the manifest and sensible representations of the one or the other.

Every man finds in himself, either from nature or education—for they are hard to distinguish—a peculiar bent and disposition to some particular character, and his struggling against it is the fruitless and endless labor of Sisyphus. Let him follow and cultivate that vocation; he will succeed in it and be considerable in one way at least, whereas if he departs from it he will at best be inconsiderable, probably ridiculous.—Lord Chesterfield.

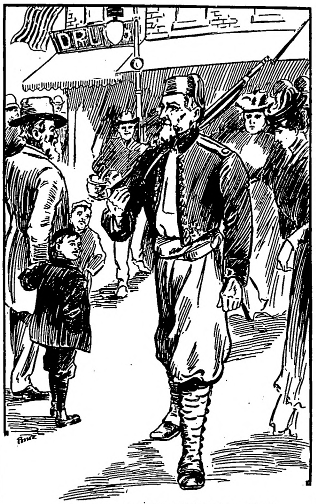
THE FIRE REKINDLED

A MEMORIAL DAY STORY

BY
Claire Wallace Flynn



"There Goes One of Those Grizzly Fighters, Boys."

THE rat-a-tat of the drums and the dauntless voice of the fife began to awaken the quiet streets early in the morning. Adam Roth, brought to his window by the insistent call of the fifes, raised his eyes to the cloudless blue of the spring sky and then let them shift back uneasily to his shabby room.

As the sounds died away, Adam went and stood beside the bed. On it was laid the full uniform of a Zouave, discolored with the smoke of many battles, ragged and worn with the stress of weary marches. Near one shoulder a faded stain spoke of a wound received at Alexandria.

Adam looked long on this uniform, and then, brushing away a mist before his eyes, he whispered the name "Dan!" Dan, the brave brother who had first donned them in '61, who had with unabated love and energy and pride worn them on every Memorial day since the first, had gone to the great "assembly," and only Adam was left.

And Adam! There was no part for him in all these half pleasant, half sad, reunions, these enthusiastic parades through the great city, these glorious awakenings of memories of deeds well done in the past. That was what ate into his soul and blotted out the light in his face. He had been a coward—coward! In those days, when the uniform before him had been a bright red, and the gun, leaning against the foot of the bed, had sparkled and shone, he had failed to answer the bugle call of his country.

The sounds in the street below grew louder, and the sun streamed into the room, sending a sudden riot to Adam's heart. The veins in his temples throbbed like ceaseless threshing machines, separating all the chaff of his long life of failure and cowardice from this strange, burning prayer that sprang up within him, that he might once, only once, go forth in the uniform of the country he loved, to march behind the flag he had failed to protect, to be an American soldier!

He found himself taking off his coat with shaking hands, and, almost before he realized it, he was hurrying into the uniform. He dusted the moth-eaten fez and put it on his head. The worn tassel fell over his ear, and he tossed it back with a new, free fling of his head. The mantle of Dan seemed truly to have fallen upon him, bringing with it the spirit of '61.

A man leading two little boys by the hand pointed him out to the children. "There goes one of those grizzly old fighters, boys. I tell you, they did great work!" The words reached Adam and sent a gleam to his eyes.

With one great throb of his heart Adam stepped into the street and swung into line. The man next to him glanced in his direction, and his face whitened.

Dan Roth! Surely old Dan Roth was dead! The whole post had heard of it nearly a year ago. Who, then, was this silent, mysterious figure, springing suddenly from the crowd and joining them?

"Who are you?" asked the man.

Adam wavered a moment before he answered. The simple query blotted out his cherished dream; perhaps it would make the continuance of his march impossible. But finally he turned and answered:

"Dan Roth's brother."

Suddenly he felt the silent encouragement of a handshake. The veteran meant to be his friend. Then the command of "Forward march!" came to them, and they were off once more, this time flashing warm, triumphant, into Riverside drive. The long march was over.

Beside him stood the color-bearer, holding aloft the tattered glory of the regiment. The words of the orator floated on the quivering air, and the cannon boomed from the gunboat in the river; but all sounds now seemed to come to Adam from a great distance. He was aflame with the spirit of devotion; the darkened lamp of patriotism had been lighted anew in him, and in the whole world there was nothing else.

Presently Adam's kindling eyes fell upon a man among the crowd of spectators, a man whose haggard face and twitching body marked him apart. Rage, wild, unreasoning rage at fate, cried out from all his features. With some fascination Adam noticed that his eyes were fastened upon the flag, or all that was left of it. But what a gaze. His glance was a menace, his look burnt with the hatred of one whose hand is forever set against the insignia of law and royalty.

The ceremonies were drawing to a close. A bugler stepped forward and played the first bar of the "Star Spangled Banner." From his higher place Adam saw the man whom he had been watching push his way to the edge of the crowd, directly facing the flag. The people were singing now.

The man's arm shot out. Something gleamed in the sunshine, something sang in the air above the words "in trimuph shall wave," and an old Zouave stumbled and fell forward upon the white stones.

The commander of the post stooped over the fallen man and lifted his head. The man was a stranger to him. He looked at a Zouave standing near, silently questioning him.

"He pushed in front of Peterson, sir, just as that scoundrel fired. He tried to grasp the flag, sir. I guess he saw what the fellow aimed at."

"Who is he?" asked the officer. "And what is he doing here? He is not one of my men."

"He was Dan Roth's brother. We have all heard of him—he was the boy that wouldn't join in '61. But today—he—he—"

The old man knelt down beside Adam. Just below the dim stain on the shoulder of Dan's jacket, the stain which marked that day at Alexandria, there was a new, fresh one. The heart that lay beneath it was at peace.

Don't Poison Baby.

FORTY YEARS AGO almost every mother thought her child must have PAREGORIC or laudanum to make it sleep. These drugs will produce sleep, and A FEW DROPS TOO MANY will produce the SLEEP FROM WHICH THERE IS NO WAKING. Many are the children who have been killed or whose health has been ruined for life by paregoric, laudanum and morphine, each of which is a narcotic product of opium. Druggists are prohibited from selling either of the narcotics named to children at all, or to anybody without labelling them "poison." The definition of "narcotic" is: "A medicine which relieves pain and produces sleep, but which in poisonous doses produces stupor, coma, convulsions and death." The taste and smell of medicines containing opium are disguised, and sold under the names of "Drops," "Cordials," "Soothing Syrups," etc. You should not permit any medicine to be given to your children without you or your physician know of what it is composed. CASTORIA DOES NOT CONTAIN NARCOTICS, if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

As further inducement to settlement of the wheat-raising lands of Western Canada, the Canadian Government has increased the area that may be taken by a homesteader to 320 acres—160 free and 160 to be purchased at $3.00 per acre. These lands are in the grain-raising area, where mixed farming is also carried on with unqualified success. A railway will shortly be built to Hudson Bay, bringing the world's markets a thousand miles nearer these wheat-fields, where schools and churches are convenient, climate excellent, railways close to all settlements, and local markets good.

TAFT HONORS DEAD

PRESIDENT DELIVERS ORATION ON GETTYSBURG FIELD.

MONUMENT IS. DEDICATED

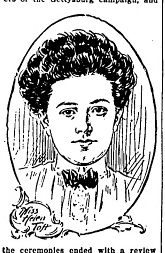
Daughter of the Chief Executive Unveils the Shaft Erected in Memory of Regulars—Lincoln Statue at Hodgenville.

Gettysburg, Pa.—Seldom has the historic Gettysburg battlefield witnessed more impressive Memorial day exercises than those of Monday. The chief feature of the ceremonies was the dedication of the fine monument erected by act of congress to commemorate the services of the regular army of the United States in the Gettysburg campaign of June and July, 1863, and President Taft was the central figure in the day's doings.

The president arrived early in the morning from Pittsburg, and was met by a committee of prominent citizens and an escort of United States regulars. After luncheon a great concourse of people gathered on the battlefield, and the exercises began. Secretary of War Dickinson delivered an address and formally transferred the monument to the Gettysburg National Park commission, the chairman of which, Lieut. Col. John P. Nicholson, made the speech of acceptance.

Unveiled by Miss Taft.

The shaft was then unveiled by Miss Helen Taft, daughter of the president. Laurel wreaths were placed at the base of the monument by the oldest regimental and battery commanders of the Gettysburg campaign, and the ceremonies ended with a review of the troops on the field by President Taft.



The monument is a beautiful shaft 85 feet high surrounded at the base by a broad granite terrace. It stands on Hancock avenue a short distance south of the high-water mark of the battle of Gettysburg. The monument represents all of the 42 cavalry, artillery, infantry and engineer organizations of the regular army that participated in the campaign. In addition there has been erected a small monument seven feet high for each of the commands at the location it occupied during the battle.

Lincoln Statue Dedicated.

Hodgenville, Ky.—For the second time within a few months this little town was Monday the scene of a notable ceremony. This was the unveiling of the Lincoln memorial statue erected at the birthplace of the martyred president.

Henry Watterson, the famous Louisville journalist, was the chief orator, and was followed by E. J. McDermott, also of Louisville. The statue was then unveiled by Mrs. Ben Hardin Helm. Next came addresses of acceptance by former Appellate Court Justice George Du Relle for the Lincoln monument commission, Gov. Augustus E. Willson for Kentucky, and David Highbaugh Smith for LaRue county.

STRIKE GROWS SERIOUS.

Mails Still Held Up and Food Is Getting Scarce Along the Georgia Railroad.

Atlanta, Ga. — The tension in Georgia railway firemen's strike is increasing with every hours' delay is settling the race question involved. United States mails held up since the beginning of the week, a dozen counties facing demoralization of business and the race issue brought continually into unwholesome prominence, were the factors which spurred the negotiations through hours of discussion.

Various towns in the strike district took inventory of the visible supply of food. Madison reported at least 15 days of plenty in prospect. Washington reported a shortage in yeast and prices rising. There are 11 cars of provisions at Lithonia and ice has been supplied to maintain the perishable portion of their contents.

MANY CITIES FEEL QUAKE

TOWNS IN MIDDLE WESTERN STATES TREMBLE.

No Loss of Life Reported, but Several Slightly Injured—Some Property Damage.

Chicago.—Reports continued to come in Thursday of the earthquake which shook the middle west Wednesday. In this city the tremor lasted from two seconds to three minutes and in cities in Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri it was just as severe.

So far no loss of life has been reported, although there has been slight property damage and a great deal of fright. The most severe shocks were felt in Chicago and Dubuque, Ia.

Following is a list of towns where the earthquake was felt: Janesville, Wis.; Cedar Rapids, Ia.; Sterling, Ill.; Rockford, Ill.; Moline, Ill.; Joliet, Ill.; Streator, Ill.; Dixon, Ill.; Dubuque, Ia.; Burlington, Ia.; Galena, Ill.; Bloomington, Ill.; Freeport, Ill.; El Paso, Ill.; Fairbury, Ill.; Springfield, Ill.; Mount Carroll, Ill.; Springfield, Mich.; Peoria, Ill.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Madison, Wis.; Kalamazoo, Mich.; Benton Harbor, Mich.; Aurora, Ill.; Kewanee, Ill.; Hanibal, Mo.; Beloit, Wis.; Michigan City, Ind., and Grand Rapids, Mich.

The last previous earthquake shock recorded in the Chicago weather bureau was on October 31, 1895.

One of the reports at the weather bureau came from Dubuque, Ia., where it was said that the Bank and Insurance building, a seven-story structure, was nearly thrown to the ground by the violence of the shock. Clerks, stenographers and hundreds who were employed in the various offices ran in panic from the building. Two seismic disturbances were reported there.

In Chicago chimneys were thrown down on the West and North sides, and several women were thrown from their feet as a result of the shock. Large flat buildings were shaken and families ran out, fearing the walls would collapse. Many were reminded of the disasters recently in Messina and San Francisco, and were in fear for hours after the shock had passed. Two hundred Italians working on the track elevation in Evanston were terror-stricken by the shock and fell on their knees in prayer.

At the weather bureau Prof. Cox said there were no instruments for recording quake shocks, but that he had noticed the swaying of chandeliers and lamp cords.

LORIMER ELECTED SENATOR.

Chicago Man Selected to Succeed Albert J. Hopkins by Illinois Legislators.

Springfield, Ill. — Congressman William Lorimer of the Sixth congressional district was elected United States senator on the ninety-fifth ballot taken by the joint session of the general assembly. He had 108 votes.

The election of a junior senator to represent Illinois in the upper house at Washington came about through a coalition of Democratic assemblymen and the anti-Hopkins Republicans, breaking the deadlock which had lasted since January 20.

William Lorimer was born at Manchester, England, April 27, 1861. When he was five years of age he came to America with his parents, and in 1870 located in Chicago.

At the age of ten years his father died and he became a sign-painter's apprentice and later worked for the Chicago packing houses and for a street railroad company, being a conductor when he quit that vocation to work for himself.

He entered the real estate business in 1886, and later became a member of the firm of Murphy & Lorimer in the building and brick manufacturing business.

In 1892 he ran for the office of clerk of the superior court, but was defeated. Three years later he became a member of congress and served the Sixth Illinois congressional district and was again elected for the congressional seat last spring. For a decade he has been a leader of the Republican party in Illinois.

Islanders Ask Citizenship.

Washington. — A committee of Porto Ricans has come to Washington, representing the Republican party of Porto Rico, to urge that the United States government grant citizenship to the islanders.

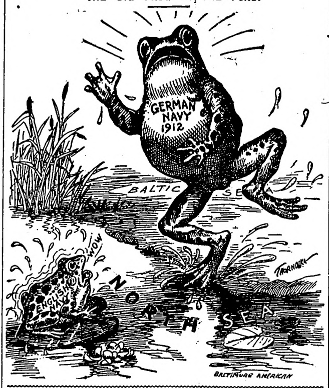
It is their intention to see President Taft and enlist his sympathies, if possible, as well as those of various senators and representatives, and to get congress to take up the Porto Rican citizenship plank contained in the last Republican national platform.

Wisconsin Man Is Slain.

Spokane, Wash.—The body of Patrick Corrigan, a wealthy farmer from Custer, Wis., was dragged from the Spokane river Wednesday.

His pockets had been turned inside out, his gold watch, gold pin and cash had vanished, as well as $4,000 in drafts and $3,000 in mortgages he carried when he disappeared March 13.

THE BIG FROG IN THE POND.



NINE ARE BURNED TO DEATH

FOUR LOSE LIVES IN FLAMES AT ELDON, IOWA.

Children at School Exercises Ablaze on Stage in Sight of Parents and Friends.

Eldon, Ia. — Fire destroyed the home of Mrs. Lola Shaw and burned to death her father, John Carter, and three of her children.

Mrs. Shaw is employed during the night at a restaurant and left the children with their grandfather. The fire was caused by the overturning of a lighted lamp during a storm.

Central City, Ky. — Five children, who took part in the commencement exercises of Mrs. B. C. Boyd's school in this city were burned fatally; the audience was changed from an applauding group, into a fighting mob and several other children were slightly injured.

Panic was averted by the coolness of the men in the audience, who covered the flaming children with their coats.

Four of the children died later. They are: Selma Clay, aged five years; Dorothy Clay, aged seven years; Nell McGeary, five years; Louise Marshall, eight years. Rena May Miller, aged five years, may recover.

Little Dorothy Clay was the unwitting cause of the catastrophe. The little girls had formed in a circle and had drilled back and forth in their white muslin dresses, the audience gathering enthusiasm as the entertainment progressed.

Then the lights were extinguished and an electric candle in the hand of each child flashed out brilliantly. The aunts, mothers, fathers and playmates in the crowd cheered and applauded so enthusiastically that Dorothy grew frightened and dropped her candle. The flame leaped to the white muslin and in a twinkling five dresses were afire.

INDICT HASKELL AGAIN.

Oklahoma Governor and Five Others Accused of Town Lot Frauds by Grand Jury.

Tulsa, Okla.—New indictments charging fraud in the Muskogee town lot cases were returned Thursday by the United States grand jury against Gov. Charles N. Haskell, F. B. Severs, W. T. Hutchins, C. W. Turner, A. Z. English and W. R. Eaton.

The accused men are charged with obtaining titles from the government to town lots in Muskogee by illegal methods. Bond in each case was fixed at $5,000 and was promptly furnished.

"As a result of four government attorneys and an army of secret men surounding the grand jury and limiting the testimony to just what suited them, indictments have been secured against me," said Gov. Haskell.

Fisheries Commission Meets.

Washington. — The International Commission of Fisheries held a meeting at the state department Friday. It was appointed under the convention between the United States and Great Britain to develop uniform and effective measures for the protection and propagation of the food fishes in the waters contiguous to this country and Canada. President David Starr Jordan represents the United States. The commission has prepared regulations governing closed seasons, the apparatus used in fishing and other provisions to protect the fisheries.

ALASKA-YUKON FAIR OPENED

President Taft Presses Key and Starts Wheels—Seattle Is Wild with Joy.

Seattle, Wash.—At exactly 12:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, Seattle time, President Taft in the White House in Washington, pressed a beautiful gold telegraph key, and at the signal that flashed all the way across the country the wheels in every part of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition began to turn and the great fair was opened.

When the auspicious moment arrived every whistle in Seattle was pulled wide open, every other noisemaking contrivance was brought into use, every man, woman and child of the city's inhabitants and of the thousands of visitors already here cheered, and the opening of the exposition was accomplished in the midst of a deafening din and general rejoicings. For two minutes every street car stood still and all business was suspended.

Then came the formal and impressive ceremonies in connection with the opening. The parade and speechmaking were participated in by all the officers of the exposition, the officials of Seattle, and Gov. W. B. Hoggatt of Alaska, Lieut. Gov. James Dunsmuir of British Columbia, Gov. M. E. Hay of Washington, Gov. J. M. Brady of Idaho, Gov. William Spry of Utah, Gov. F. W. Benson of Oregon and Gov. Gillett of California. In addition to the Pacific coast executives, Gov. Fort of New Jersey was represented by his son, Leslie R. Fort.

BAILEY AND SCRIBE FIGHT.

W. S. Manning of New York Times Hits Texan with Umbrella and Is Choked.

Washington.—Senator Bailey of Texas and W. S. Manning, representative of the New York Times in the senate press gallery, exchanged blows Thursday as a result of a conversation they had in reference to an article printed by the New York newspaper questioning the sincerity of the senator in his course on the income tax.

Neither of the participants was injured, as they were separated by Senator Clapp, Porto Rican Commissioner Larrinaga, several senate employes and newspaper correspondents. The versions of Mr. Bailey and Mr. Manning are in substantial agreement as to the cause of the trouble, and differ only as to the number of blows struck by each. When they were separated Bailey had Manning by the throat.

Arkansas Negro Lynched.

Pine Bluff, Ark. — Lovett Davis, a negro, charged with attempting to commit a criminal assault on a 16-year-old white girl here last Friday night, was taken from the jail in this city by an unmasked mob of 300 men, and hanged to a telegraph pole on one of the principal streets.

Just as the negro was being raised high above the street, the rope broke and the body fell to the ground, but he was immediately raised again and left hanging.

Supreme Court Adjourned.

Washington.—Chief Justice Fuller Monday declared the United States supreme court adjourned for the summer, and most of the justices lost little time in getting away for their vacations. The court suspended the docket a month ago and since then has held three sittings to announce decisons and hear motions.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Saloon Raiders Arrestee.

Duluth.—The Bovey saloonkeepers, John Sperk and N. S. Knoblock, have each caused the arrest of Rev. Hill, August Johnson and Capt. Tundquist, the last mentioned a constable of that village, on charges of burglary. The arrests are the outcome of a raid to get evidence of alleged lid tilting in the western Mesabi mining town. The three men arrested constituted the raiding party, and they had search warrants, but the saloonkeepers declare the warrants were issued Sunday and are illegal. They furthermore contend that the raiders by their action in entering the places provided an opportunity for thieves to enter. Knoblock alleges that $200 was stolen from his place in consequence of the raid, and Sperk says he has lost $63 in the same manner. The arrested parties were arraigned before Justice Franti and gave bail for their appearance next Thursday in the sum of $500 each.

St. Paul Woman Speaker.

Waseca.—Fifty delegates of the First District auxiliary of the Minnesota Federation of Women's Clubs met here in the M. E. church. They represented fourteen of the twenty-three clubs in this district. Mrs. C. G. Higbee of St. Paul, president of the Minnesota federation, delivered the principal address and spoke of the laudable work of women's clubs, declaring that at least thirteen laws passed by the recent legislature were due to the efforts of the clubs. Mrs. Towne of Albert Lea was nominated as the next district vice president and next year's meeting will be held at that place.

Reveals Winter Tragedy.

Duluth.—The remains of an unknown man was found in a shack a short distance from the Northland Country club. The man had been frozen to death some time during the winter. The shack had been built out of pieces of wood and was lined with tar paper. This was all the protection the man had from the fierce winter weather. A shaving mug and some other trinkets were found in the hut. The body was badly decomposed, showing that death had occurred two or three months ago.

Two Professors Quit Normal.

Winona. — The Winona Normal school will this season lose two of its professors, both having been called to university work. A short time ago Dr. G. O. Virtue, who has had social science, history and civics, accepted a call to a similar chair in the University of Nebraska at Lincoln, Neb. Now Dr John A. Thackston of the mathematics department has accepted a call to a similar position in the University of Florida at Gainesville, Fla.

Ninety Complete Courses.

St. Peter.—Dr. P. A. Mattson, president of Gustavus Adolphus college, delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the members of the several graduating classes yesterday morning. Tonight the seniors had their class exercises, and commencement week will close with the alumni banquet Thursday evening. Ninety students, the largest number ever graduated by the institution, complete their courses this spring.

More Sewers for Waseca.

Waseca.—The city council has accepted a bid for the construtcion of a complete sewerage system for the north side. This will include a sanitary septic tank and 4,000 feet of sewer mains. There will also be extensions of the system in the main residential section, aggregating several thousand feet. The property owners on two of the principal streets have signed petitions for paving those streets with brick.

Help Towns Fight Rates.

Bismarck. — The Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth and West Superior chambers of commerce will have representatives at La Moure during the hearing before the state railway commission, June 15. Towns south of the main line of the Northern Pacific are charged at present 2 cents above the rates charged from towns north of the line to grain terminals at the Twin Cities and Head of Lakes.

I. O. O. F. to Picnic at Austin.

Austin.—The State Line association of the Odd Fellows order will hold its annual picnic in Austin on June 3. The association includes the lodges from LeRoy, Little Cedar, Deer Creek, Osage, Spring Valley and Austin and numbers nearly a thousand members. The event will take place in Lafayette park, and extensive preparations are being made for it.

NEWS NOTES.

Hawley.—In the special election held here to vote for bonds for electric lights and a waterworks plant both propositions were carried by large majorities, the former by 117 votes to 19 and the latter by 84 votes to 36.

HE PUZZLED THE BRITISHER

Evidently Doorkeeper Had Never Heard of the Lord That American Minister Served.

Judge George F. Lawton of the Middlesex probate court told me a story the other day of an American minister who was spending his sabbatical year traveling abroad. Arriving in London, he made every effort to get an intimate view of the two branches of parliament in session. Of course no stranger is allowed on the floor of the house of lords, but the minister not knowing this, and with the usual amount of American push, tried to make his way in. There is a rule, however, that servants of the various lords may be admitted to speak to their ministers. Seeing the minister walking boldly in, the doorkeeper asked:

"What lord do you serve?"

"What lord?" repeated the astonished American, "the lord Jehovah!"

For a moment the doorkeeper hesitated and then admitted him. Turning to an assistant standing near, he said:

"He must mean one of those poor Scotch lairds."—Boston Record.

Home-Made Names.

"That little girl," remarked the druggist to the doctor, "was just in for ten cents worth of tincture of benzine. But I've had it before and gave her benzoin."

"That was easy," answered the doctor. "This morning on a diphtheria case the woman wanted to know if I administered antitoxin with an epidemic syringe."

Iron Ore Fields in Finland.

Though Finland has been regarded up to the present time as being extremely poor in iron ores, recent research has proved the existence of ore fields in South Finland (Nyland), and above all in the Ladoga lake district, which seem to be worth the expense of mining. For research purposes a company has been formed.

OVER THE FENCE
Neighbor Says Something.

The front yard fence is a famous council place on pleasant days. Maybe to chat with some one along the street, or for friendly gossip with next door neighbor. Sometimes it is only small talk but other times neighbor has something really good to offer.

An old resident of Baird, Texas, got some mighty good advice this way once.

He says:

"Drinking coffee left me nearly dead with dyspepsia, kidney disease and bowel trouble, with constant pains in my stomach, back and side, and so weak I could scarcely walk.

"One day I was chatting with one of my neighbors about my trouble and told her I believed coffee hurt me. Neighbor said she knew lots of people to whom coffee was poison and she pleaded with me to quit it and give Postum a trial. I did not take her advice right away but tried a change of climate, which did not do me any good. Then I dropped coffee and took up Postum.

"My improvement began immediately and I got better every day I used Postum.

"My bowels became regular in two weeks, all my pains were gone. Now I am well and strong and can eat anything I want to without distress. All of this is due to my having quit coffee, and to the use of Postum regularly.

"My son who was troubled with indigestion thought that if Postum helped me so, it might help him. It did, too, and he is now well and strong again.

"We like Postum as well as we ever liked the coffee and use it altogether in my family in place of coffee and all keep well." "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in Pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. C. HUNT.

Entered as Second class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

All pull together for a special session of the legislature to re district the state.

Lost; somewhere in the courts of the twin cities. Our state legislature "pork barrel." If you see it when you are down that way, kick the head in and send up a chunk big enough to build a bridge across the Red Lake River in the eastern part of this county.

The government Agricultural Department are charged with a shortage of fifty million bushels in their estimate of the 1908, wheat crop. Of course it was not discovered until about all the wheat had passed out of the farmers hends, then up went the price. That's a nice pot gang to be running arround the country estimating crops at the expense of the government.

The movement started by H. E Ives, of St Hilaire to circulate a monstor petition asking Gov. Johnson to call an extra session the legislatur to consider the matter of re districting the state is meeting with favor in all parts of Northern Minneseta. Unless an extra session is called it will be six years before the legislature takes any action.—Thief River Falls News.

The county division promoters do not need to make any campaign in this part of the county, if there is no re districting of the county. There is a large precentage of the people up this way that are opposed to any removel or fighting over the county seat, but they want a fair representation on that board of County Commissioners, and they are going to try and get it, either one way or the other

The Plummer Pioneer takes exceptions to our statement that the contract had been let to build the new Red Lake county court house. Well we may be a little behind our city breathern in getting the latest and corect news as our tell the next fellow line somtimes gets things mixed up. It might have been that John Duffy had contracted to have his kitchen enlarged, when the story left Red Lake Falls, and grew to a thirty five thousand dollar court house by the time it reached Sunbeam.

W.B Douglas former attorney general will bring a suit to prevent the carrying out of the provisions of what is called the "pork barrel law." The last legislature passed a law providing for the distribution of $600,000 during the next two years for the repair of roads and bridges in different counties of the state. The appropriations for the first year was to have been available on and after July 31, 1909, but a restraining order will be served on Secretary of State Julius A. Schmahl in time to prevent any of the money from being drawn from the state treasury until the law is tested in the courts.

How Ledgers Got Their Name.

On the authority of the best lexicographers "ledger" is an adaptation of a once common word, "ligger," signifying any large book suited better for lying on a desk than for carrying about. Sometimes this was applied to a large account book, cartulary, or the like, frequently a great breviary for use in church, as distinct from a "portas," or small one, carried by a "book legere priest." "Coucher" is another old synonym for "ligger," the foregoer of the now general "ledger."

Where Snow Falls.

If you are not a lover of snow, go to Malta, which is the nearest spot where you are certain of complete immunity. If you are fond of it, the suburbs of St. Petersburg will furnish all you need to ask, for there you may be sure of it for 170 days in the year. The happy medium is supplied by Copenhagen, with thirty days, while Palermo, Rome and Venice, with one, two and five days respectively, may be recommended to those who merely care for snow as a casual and fleeting guest.—London Chronicle.

Crookston is going to have one of the bigest 4th, of July cellebrations that was ever held in the North West. The Northern Minnesota Firemans tournament is to be held thare at that time, and the show will last for three days and nights.

A peculiar accident happened to P.C.Wold, on his way home from Thief River Falls on Sunday last. He was sitting on the top of a high load of shingles driving his team, when the front wheel of the wagon dropped into a deep rut hole, and threw him in front of the wheels behind the horses, who sprang foward, when one of the tugs broke and the wagon stayed in the rut, which saved the wheels from passing over Mr. Wold, who escaped without any searious injury.

Gunder Asbjornson made his last trip by this way to the High Landing creamery on Monday. He said he was well satisfied with the treatment he had received at our creamery, but he was not going to run the risk of losing his horses in that swamp between here and Highlanding on this side of the river, to go to it. He starts to hawl his cream to Kratka to day, which means the loss of a good patron for our creamery, which will be the gain of the Kratka creamer, but we might get Swanson for a patron and he could travel the certified road, for the cream would be strong enough to get through any swamp.

The Alternative.

"If the window had been eight feet from the ground," pouted the young wife, "instead of eight stories, I'd have thrown myself out when you quarreled with me. Then you'd have had to be sweet to me when you picked me up. A lot of wives attempt suicide, they say, just to be petted when they come to."

"Yes," said he, "but sometimes they don't come to, remember."—New York Press.

"Ah, no, I cannot pardon you,"
She bitterly replied.

HE GOT THE TICKET.

A Simple Little Errand That Made a Lot of Commotion.

One of the most amusing accidents imaginable happened to an old gentleman in one of our large eastern cities. He was asked to buy a ticket to a fireman's ball and good naturedly complied. The next question was what to do with it. He had two servants, either of whom would be glad to use it, but he did not wish to show favoritism.

Then it occurred to him that he might buy another ticket and give both his servants a pleasure. Not knowing where the tickets were sold, he inquired of a policeman, and the officer suggested that he go to the engine house. So the old gentleman went to the engine house that evening, but there was no one in sight. He had never been in such a place before and stood for a moment or so uncertain how to make his presence known.

Presently he saw an electric button on the side of the room, and he put his thumb on it.

The effect was electrical in every sense of the word. Through the ceiling, down the stairs and from every other direction firemen came running and falling, the horses rushed out of their stalls, and, in short, all the machinery of a modern engine house was instantly in motion.

Amid all this uproar stood the innocent old gentleman, who did not suspect that he had touched the fire alarm until the men clamored around him for information as to the locality of the fire.

Then he said mildly, "I should like to buy another ticket for the ball, if you please."

The situation was so ludicrous that there was a general shout of laughter, and the old gentleman bought his ticket, and the engine house resumed its former state of quiet.—Exchange.

Love's Excuse.

Pet Boars.

The nicest pet the French forest affords is the marcassin or baby wild boar. It is almost human in its cleverness, delights in funny pranks, has an evident sense of humor, makes friends of children and dogs and even lends itself to mimic hunts, playing the part of the hunted animal. Its antics are varied and original. The only creature to which the marcassin objects is its distant relative, the pig. Directly it sees that animal its back is up and its growing tusk is bared. In babyhood it has a lovely sleek coat of very dark brown and tan. When the silky hair is shed and bristles take its place the temper grows uneven. If marital and paternal cares come on, the wild boar puts away its childish ways and wants to take its family to the forest to feed there on acorns and beech mast. OPERATION HER ONLY CHANCE

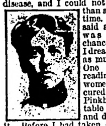
Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Adrian, Ga.—"I suffered untold misery from a female weakness and disease, and I could not stand more than a minute at a time. My doctor said an operation was the only chance I had, and I dreaded it almost as much as death. One day I was reading how other women had been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and decided to try it. Before I had taken one bottle I was better, and now I am completely cured."—LENA V. HENRY, Route No. 3, Adrian, Ga.



Why will women take chances with an operation or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion, and nervous prostration.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be absolutely confidential, and the advice free.

NOT A MATTER OF LOYALTY.

Simple But Insuperable Reason Why Subject Could Not Kneel Before His King.

One fancies that few types of men, can, from time to time, have afforded royalty more amusement of a quiet sort than provincial mayors of England. "From the Foreland to Penzance," by Clive Holland, contains the story of a mayor of Weymouth who, during one of the visits of King George to the town, was destined to afford "comic relief" to a ceremony of some importance.

The occasion was the presentation of an address of welcome to the king, and we are told that the mayor, on approaching to present it, to the astonishment and dismay of all, instead of kneeling, as he had been told to do, seized the queen's hand to shake it as he might that of any other lady.

Col. Gwynne, the master of the ceremonies, hurriedly told him of the faux pas, saying: "You should have kneefed, sir."

"Sir, I cannot," was the reply.

"Everybody does, sir," hotly asserted the colonel.

The mayor grew red, and evidently much upset, exclaimed: "Confound it, sir, but I've got a wooden leg!"

History records that "a smile suffused the face of her majesty, and the king laughed outright."—Youth's Companion.

WESTON, Ocean-to-Ocean Walker, Said recently: "When you feel down and out, feel there is no use living, just take your bad thoughts with you and walk them off. Before you have walked a mile things will look rosier. Just try it." Have you noticed the increase in walking of late in every community? Many attribute it to the comfort which Allen's Foot-Ease, the antiseptic powder to be shaken into the shoes, gives to the millions now using it. As Weston has said, "It has real merit." Is Tired of Praying.

A little girl in St. Louis the other evening was going through the usual form of prayer: "God bless mamma, and papa and make me a good girl," and so on, when all at once she semed to come to a decision. "Now that is the last time I am going to say that prayer," she said, very gravely, looking at her mother. "You are older than I am and it is your place to ask for all those things and I don't see any use in two people's asking the same thing." Since then she has firmly refused to pray, insisting that it is her mother's place to ask God for blessings.

Quite True.

Marian, a little three-year-old, is very stubborn. One day, when she was fretful, her mother, wishing to engage her mind, attracted her attention to a cow in a vacant lot and asked what it was.

Marian replied, "hoss" (horse) and stubbornly refused to give in. Her mother, wishing to get a correct answer without scolding, asked: "What eats grass besides a horse?" "More hoss," was the quick response.—Delineator.

Exclusive.

"Where do the Hottentots live, Mary?" a public-school teacher asked one of her pupils. "I don't know, 'm," said Mary, primly. "Ma won't let me visit any of the people in this neighborhood."—Youth's Companion.

ONE THING THAT WAS CERTAIN

No Doubt in the Baggageman's Mind as to Contents of What Looked Like Coffin.

In an emergency the manufacturer of Limburger cheese was forced to use strategy with a shipment. Ordinarily his product went in special cars, but in this instance no car was available and the order must be filled. Two hundred pounds of the fragrant comestible was put in a rough, oblong box, and taken to the railroad baggageroom. Then the manufacturer bought a ticket for himself and the box, and entered the train. At the first stop he went ahead to the baggage car to see that there was no trouble. He stood by the box in a disconsolate attitude and shaded his eyes with his hand. The baggageman was sympathetic. "A relative?" he asked. "Yes," answered the manufacturer, "it is my brother." "Well," said the railroad man, philosophically, 'you have one consolation. He's dead, all right."—San Francisco Argonaut.

TORE HIS SKIN OFF

In Shreds—Itching Was Intense—Sleep Was Often Impossible.

Cured by Cuticura in Three Weeks.

"At first an eruption of small pustules commenced on my hands. These spread later to other parts of my body, and the itching at times was intense, so much so that I literally tore the skin off in shreds in seeking relief. The awful itching interfered with my work considerably, and also kept me awake nights. I tried several doctors and used a number of different ointments and lotions but received practically no benefit. Finally I settled down to the use of Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Pills, with the result that in a few days all itching had ceased and in about three weeks' time all traces of my eruption had disappeared. I have had no trouble of this kind since. H. A. Krutskoff, 5714 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., November 18 and 28, 1907."

ODD ANGLES TO WALSH'S RECORD

CHAMPIONS AND TAILENDERS ARE TWO TEAMS HIS SLANTS DID NOT BOTHER.

TIGERS HIT HIM FAIRLY WELL

Premier Twirler of American League Usually Beaten Out by Detroit Last Season—Boston and New York Proved Soft for Him—How Other Teams Fared.

Little wonder that Chicago folks call Ed. Walsh of the White Sox, who recently signed again for the season, the premier pitcher of the American league. This fellow Walsh is a marvel among pitchers. He allowed but 339 hits during the season, and as 1,675 players were charged with "at bats" while they were securing that number of bingles Walsh held the American league batters to a .202 average.

Exceptionally effective was Walsh against both Boston and New York, the former batting only .165 and the latter .178. The Boston batters were at bat 273 times, and secured but 45 hits. George Winter, the spitball pitcher, who became a Tiger late in the season, headed the Red Sox in batting against Walsh. However, he only faced him three times, securing two hits, an average of .667.

Gessler was the real nifty hosiery against Walsh. In the nine games in which he faced Walsh he hit safely in seven, securing two hits in two of the seven sessions.

The lowly Highlanders made 54 hits in 303 times at bat, Laporte topping the list with an average of .333, securing one safety in three trials. Harry Niles and Jack Kleinow were the mighty wallopers among those who played in several games, each having an average of .308. The former made eight in 26 times at bat, while Kleinow's hits and at bats were just one-half those of Niles.

The hard-hitting Athletics and Naps were almost as helpless before Walsh as were the Red Sox and Highlanders, the former securing 56 hits in 274 times at bat, an average of .204 and the lateer making 50 safeties in 244 trials, a mark of .205.

Although Big Chief Bender is credited with the best average among the Athletics against Walsh, still he was only at bat twice, securing one hit, a .500 mark, while to Danny Murphy the real crown belongs. Murphy was not only the classiest of the Athletics, but also was the leading batter of the American league when opposed to Walsh. Danny was at bat 27 times and walloped the horsehide for 12 safeties, a .444 mark. Eddie Collins also traveled at a merry clip against the great spitter, having seven hits in 21 visits to the plate, a .333 average.

Charley Hickman of the Naps had the unique distinction of facing Walsh just one time, being sent to bat in a pinch, and succeeded in connecting safely, giving him a perfect average. Dusty Rhoades followed with a .333 mark, making two hits in six times up.

Walsh was used repeatedly in the games against Boston, New York and Philadelphia, while Cleveland drew him a fair number of times. On the other hand, Manager Jones was a little gingery about working him against Washington and Detroit, as the big fellow never was any too successful against either team. The breaks of the game always appeared to be against Walsh when opposing the Tigers and Nationals. However, he managed to hold the latter to a .214 mark and Cobb, Crawford & Co. to .223.

Jesse Tannehill of the Nationals shared with Charley Hickman of the Naps, the honor of having a perfect average against the spitball artist. George McBride was the real National leader, however, and if he could clout the sphere against all pitchers as he did against Walsh, he would surely lead the league. In 15 times up he made seven hits for an average of .467.

Of the Tiger crowd, Davy Jones, Perry and O'Leary each batted .500, the two first named each making two hits in four times up, while O'Leary's figures were just one-half those of the pair. Bill Coughlin proved that he was not down and out when facing Walsh, making three hits in eight attempts. Schmidt was classy to the extent of five hits in 14 times up, a .357 mark, while Cobb made seven hits in 21 visits to the rubber, a .333 mark.

Although he was called to work in more games against the Browns than any other team, being called to the relief of his teammate twirlers on several occasions, Walsh managed to pull out with a debit mark of .243, McAleer's men batting him harder than any other team. They made 65 hits in 266 times at bat. Joe Yeager and Sid Smith each made one hit in two times up, a .500 mark, but the real leaders were two outfielders, George Stone and Danny Hoffman, whom rumor has placed on the market.

Stone made 11 hits in 33 times at bat and Hoffman seven in 21 times, a .333 average. Pitchers Graham and Bailey had the same average. Big Dode Criss hit .286 against Walsh, making both his bingles when sent to bat in the pinch.

All in all Walsh did very well against all of the teams. The high-water batting mark of .243 to the Browns' credit might win a pennant now and then, but it would have to be backed up by a number of other things.

Mutual Surprise.

A mission worker in New Orleans was visiting a reformatory near that city not long ago when she observed among the inmates an old acquaintance, a negro lad long thought to be a model of integrity. "Jim!" exclaimed the mission worker. "Is it possible I find you here?" "Yassum," blithely responded the backslider. "I's charged with stealin' a barrel o' sweet pertaters." The visitor sighed. "You, Jim!" she repeated. "I am surprised!" "Yassum," said Jim. "So was I or I wouldn't be here!"

Continual Doubt.

"How many children have you?" said the tourist, affably.

"I dunno exactly," answered the tired-looking woman.

"You don't know?"

"Not for certain. Willie's gone fishin', Tommy's breakin' in a colt, Georgie's borrowed his father's shotgun to go hunting' an' Esmeralda Ann is thinkin' of elopin'. I never know how many I've got till supper time comes, so's I can count 'em."

The Young Dream.

The light was soft in the conservatory.

"But," said the young girl, nervously plucking to pieces a mauve orchid, "but there are microbes in kisses."

The plashing of the fountain mingled with the low, deep voice of the youth.

"My microbes," he murmured, passionately, "are so lonely!"

Women to Fight Tuberculosis.

One million women, representing cities, towns, villages and isolated rural settlements in every section of the country, are to-day enlisted in a campaign against tuberculosis, according to a statement issued by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. In legislatures, in congress at Washington, in society gatherings, in churches and clubs, through speaking and writing—in every possible way, the women of the country are persistently fighting consumption.

With an organization established in every state of the country, under the direction of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and with associated clubs in Alaska, the Hawaiian islands, Porto Rico and the canal zone, the women of the country have entered a systematic crusade to carry the message of the prevention and cure of tuberculosis into every American home.

Logical Reasoning.

A certain young man's friends thought he was dead, but he was only in a state of coma. When, in ample time to avoid being buried, he showed signs of life, he was asked how it seemed to be dead.

"Dead?" he exclaimed. "I wasn't dead. I knew all that was going on. And I knew I wasn't dead, too, because my feet were cold and I was hungry."

"But how did that fact make you think you were still alive?" asked one of the curious.

"Well, this way: I knew that if I were in heaven I wouldn't be hungry. And if I was in the other place my feet wouldn't be cold."

Household Hint.

"Do you know how to use a chafing dish?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Sirius Barker. "I have some novel ideas on the subject."

"What are they?"

"The best way I know of to use a chafing dish is to punch a hole in the bottom of it, paint it green and plant flowers in it."—Washington Star.

Farmers Want Drainage.

Thief River Falls.—A largely attended meeting of the settlers living in what is known as the Mud and Thief Lake basins in eastern Marshall and northwestern Beltrami counties, was held at Grygla. Farmers, whose lands are at times more or less injured by water overflow, met to secure concerted action in order to promote various drainage projects. In this case the counties, towns and even the state will cooperate to construct large ditches and laterals on the plan outlined by the United States Geological survey of this section, which was completed one year ago. This will call for the expenditure of some $250,000, which will be divided according to benefits. It is the opinion of State Engineer Ralph that these projected ditches will drain all this great and rich section. All the dirt removed from the ditch will be thrown to one side and graded for a highway.

Grad. Days at Shattuck.

Faribault.—The forty-second annual commencement of Shattuck school will open on Sunday, June 6, with the commencement sermon by Rev. Samuel Newell Watson, a member of the class of '79, and rector of St. Paul's church at Akron, Ohio. On Tuesday, June 8, will be held the competitive drill and sham battle; at 8 p. m., the senior play, "Malvolio Scenes from Twelfth Night."

Wednesday, June 9, will be alumni day, with commencement exercises at 10:30 a. m.; the address to be delivered by Prof. Fred Scheetz Jones, class of '79, dean of Yale college, followed by a dress parade. At 8 p. m. the rector's reception will be held.

Big "Fourth" Is Planned.

Crookston.—Great preparations are being made here for a monster celebration of the Fourth of July, on Monday, July 5. The day will open the three days' program of the Northwestern Minnesota Firemen's tournament, when most of the departments from different cities and towns in the section will be present in Crookston. Prizes aggregating many hundreds of dollars will be offered by the citizens of Crookston. In addition to the tournament, an excursion of the Winnipeg aerie of Eagles will reach the city on the morning of July 5. An effort also will be made to secure Governor Johnson for an address.

Postmaster's Annual Meeting.

St. Paul.—Minnesota postmasters will hold their annual meeting in St. Paul, June 16, 17 and 18, in the United States postoffice building, and there will be three days of important work in line with the improvement of the service. The meeting comes a week later than the meeting of assistant postmasters scheduled for Minneapolis.

Rochester Now Has 8,023.

Rochester.—A new city directory that has just made its appearance in this city shows that Rochester has a population of about 8,023. The state hospital being in the city limits with 1,200 inmates and a large number of employes, added to this would make the population about 9,500. The population of the county will figure about 24,533.

Duluth.—Adam Morrow of Duluth was instantly killed and Newton Ensign, also of Duluth, was injured by a gravel train in the Northern Pacific pit two miles west of Carlton. Both were at work under a train at car repairing, and the train started unexpectedly. Morrow's head was severed.

Crookston.—At a special meeting of the city council it was decided that additional park property should be purchased by the issuance of bonds to carry out the plans formulated by the women's clubs of the city for more adequate park facilities. A portion of the property suggested will be acquired by the city at once.

Moorhead.—The state normal school at its twentieth commencement will graduate a class of nearly 150. The events of commencement season begin Sunday evening, May 30, when Dr. Alexander Milne of Duluth will preach the annual sermon to the graduates, his theme being "The Heavenly Vision."

Janesville.—"Get busy with us" is the slogan adopted by the Janesville Commercial club. A cash prize of $5 was offered for the best motto, the contest open only to pupils of the Janesville public school. "Get busy with us" was suggested by Master Luke Converse and selected as best expressing the sentiment of the Commercial club and Janesville as a whole.

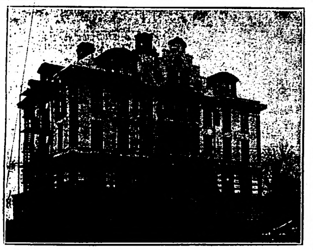
Zumbrota.—The quarterly inspection of Company D, Third regiment, Minnesota National Guard, was held at the armory by Maj. F. W. Mattson, After the inspection an election was held in which Second Lieut. M. H. Powers was advanced to captain; Sergeant J. W. Logan to first lieutenant and Sergeant Chris. Nessaeth to second lieutenant.

Minneapolis.—Judge John W. Arctander's new book, "The Apostle of Alaska," a history of William Duncan, the missionary of Metlakahtla, Alaska, is creating a sensation among church people. Judge Arctander first visited the lonely settlement several years ago and has made annual visits since, gathering material for an exceedingly interesting book.

Lake Benton.—Theodore H. Lampe, a former resident of this place and part owner of a flour mill here, was arrested at Sanborn, Minn., and brought here charged with placing a large quantity of dynamite near a building belonging to Hans Lavesson on the night of May 8 and was held to the grand jury on $2,000 bonds.

Winona.—Fred Sieboldt, aged 45, a somnambulist, was found lying dead between the rails in the Northwestern yards. His arm had been cut off. The victim apparently bled to death. Sieboldt had been known to walk in his sleep and the theory is given credence that he walked from his home to the railroad yards and there laid down with his arm across the rail.

Bemidji.—The board of county commissioners adopted a resolution rescinding the action of the board, taken at the meeting May 4, rejecting the application of Samuel Tribbey to have the 1908 taxes of the Pine Tree Lumber company abated from an assessed valuation of $540,557 to $459,473, a difference in valuation of $81,084. The matter is left open for further consideration by the board.



The new Lutheran hospital at Faribault is situated on the bluffs overlooking the city, 200 feet above the noise and smoke and a mile from the business center of the city. The location is ideal, the view magnificent, and coupled with every advantage modern science has provided, is to be had in greatest abundance, "nature's best remedy"—pure Minnesota air.

St. Lucas hospital was erected by the members of the German Evangelical Synod of North America. The site was donated by the late Mrs. Hudson Wilson and the city of Faribault donated liberally to the cause.

The cost of the building is $65,000; and with furnishings $80,000.

ROCKEFELLER A GOLFER NOW

GAME MORE INTERESTING THAN FINANCE HE SAYS.

Declares He's Out of Stock Market—Glad There Is More Work for Unemployed.

New York.—John D. Rockefeller, looking unusually fit and wearing a deep coat of tan and a flossy looking golf cap, returned Friday to New York from Hot Springs, Va., where he took Mrs. Rockefeller some time ago for her health. The oil king was accompanied by his wife, his sister-in-law and granddaughter.

"I have had a splendid time," said Mr. Rockefeller, "and we are greatly improved in health and spirits. I have golfed and golfed and golfed."

"What do you think of the financial situation and bull markets?" he was asked.

"Do you know," replied the 70-year-old billionaire, "that they have one of the best golf courses in the world down there where we've been? It's a lot more interesting than finance and the stock market. You know I'm out of that sort of thing. I'm a golfer now. Ask me something about golf. I'm way up in the game. See what a tan I've got?

"But I am really glad to get back. I've been away five months, and it seems good to see New York again."

Mr. Rockefeller said the death of H. H. Rogers had been a great blow to him. "It was sad, very sad," he said.

He was curious to know if there was more work for the unemployed than there had been. When told that there was apparently more work than formerly, he said:

"That's fine. I'm awfully glad to hear it."

STREAM POLLUTION PERILS

Epidemic Caused and Waters Made Unfit for Use, Declares Report of Committee.

Washington.—The committee on the "Pollution of Streams," appointed last year, of which Alec H. Seymour, secretary of the New York state department of health is chairman, Friday presented its report to the meeting of the state and provincial boards of health of North America. The other members of the committee are Dr. Charles O. Probst, secretary of the Ohio state board of health, and Dr. H. D. Holton, secretary of the Vermont state board of health.

Studies of conditions all over the United States and reports of state health departments show that there have been many epidemics of typhoid fever directly due to this practice; that in many case public nuisances have been caused, and that many of the waters of the various states are rendered unfit for domestic and manufacturing purposes. Fish life has been destroyed and the waters ruined for boating, bathing and fishing and rendered objectionable and obnoxious in other ways.

The report shows that during the past few years many laws have been passed dealing with this subject, but that the legislative activity has not kept pace with the needs.

CRIME FIGHTERS IN SESSION.

National Conference on Criminal Law and Criminology Draws Many Experts to Chicago.

Chicago.—Leaders in the war on crime from all parts of the country have been attracted to this city by the national conference on criminal law and criminology which opened Friday in the Northwestern University School of Law. The meeting is in a way a celebration of the school's fiftieth anniversary, and scores of lawyers, penologists, prosecuting officers, physicians, wardens, and others were invited to take part in the discussions. There will be no set speeches.

The wide range of the conference is shown by the topics that are being discussed. Some of them are:

The unnecessary multiplication of criminal laws as a cause of disrespect of, and disregard for, the law.

Needed reforms in the use of medical expert testimony, and the feasibility of establishing state commissions of specialists for expert testimony.

The problem of the jury system.

The problem of the simplification of judicial procedure by eliminating certain of the cumbersome and antiquated forms of the common law.

Limitations and restrictions on the right of appeal. To what extent should reversals for errors be permitted?

Measures for the supervision of suspects, especially in such matters as the "Black Hand" crimes.

Is irresponsibility co-extensive with insanity?

The mixed high school as a factor in adolescent criminality.

Whether all technicalities in pleading and practice which do not affect the substantial rights of the accused should be disregarded.

GIRL'S SLAYER TO HANG.

Jury Convicts Negro Who Killed Ottumwa Choir Singer and Barely Escaped Lynching.

Centerville, Ia.—Quickly following the jury's verdict of guilty in the case of John Junkin, a negro who murdered Miss Clara Rosen, a choir singer of Ottumwa, Judge M. A. Roberts sentenced the prisoner to be hanged.

The jury returned its verdict after a deliberation of less than four hours. There was an immense crowd awaiting the result of the trial and as the last words were read by the clerk a shout went up which was taken up by the crowd in the courthouse square.

Attorneys for the defense waived their customary right of three days before sentence of death is passed and agreed that Judge Roberts pass sentence immediately, which the court did. Junkin will hang the last Friday in July, 1910. He was taken to Fort Madison for safe keeping till the day of his execution.

Adj. Gen. Guy Logan of Des Moines was in the court room when the sentence was pronounced. He stated that there would be no need of militia to guard the prisoner as the verdict met with popular favor.

Junkin's crime was one of the most atrocious in Iowa. He confessed killing Clara Rosen with a stone while she was returning from the home of her sister. Later he dragged the girl into an excavation and assaulted her. Her dead body was found by a searching party the next morning.

THAW LOSES APPEAL

MUST REMAIN IN MATTEAWAN ASYLUM, DECLARES COURT.

PATRICK LIKEWISE FAILS

Slayers of Stanford White and William Marsh Rice Legally In Custody, Says Supreme Tribunal of New York.

New York.—Harry K. Thaw, fighting incarceration at Matteawan Asylum for the Criminal Insane, and Albert T. Patrick, serving a life imprisonment at Sing Sing, both lost their appeals by adverse decisions of the appellate division of the supreme court Friday.

The appellate division held that Thaw accepted the alternative of confinement as insane when he pleaded insanity as a defense to the crime of slaying Stanford White.

Patrick, the court held, was legally in custody, as there was no doubt of the power of the governor to commute his sentence of death. Both defendants sued out writs of habeas corpus and the proceedings were upon appeals against decisions dismissing the writs.

Opinion in Patrick Case.

The Patrick opinion, which was written by Justice Jenks, and concurred in by the other members of the court, was in part:

"The judgment, as commuted, was attacked. I have no doubt that the governor has the power of commutation in this case. I find no force to the contention that there cannot be a commutation of the punishment of death to that of life imprisonment because commutation implies a less punishment, and life imprisonment is a greater punishment than death. The degree of punishment is not determined by the individual preference of the convict.

Harry Kendall Thaw.

"The relator argued that he had never accepted the commutation, but he states in his printed points that commutation does not require his acceptance. Such, I think, is the law. In this the commutation differs from pardon, either absolute or conditional.

Case to Be Carried Up.

"The whole proposition in effect is that the governor's act, ineffective to change the punishment, nevertheless remitted it. It is hard to see why the exercise of that power that cannot change a punishment in effect remits or abolishes it."

After the decision was rendered William L. McDonald, Patrick's counsel, said:

"We shall promptly take all the legal steps to bring Patrick's case into tho higher courts. We have not an appeal by right from the appellate division, but that court can grant us an appeal if so disposed. If this is not done we shall get a writ of error and carry the case to the United States supreme court."

BANK LOOT IS $137,000.

Lewiston, Idaho, Insitution Is Systematically Robbed for Five Years—Defalcation Made Good.

Lewiston, Idaho.—That the Lewiston National bank has been robbed of $137,000 is the startling statement made by National Bank Examiner Claude Gatch, who has just completed an investigation.

Beyond the fact that the stockholders have made the alleged shortage good, Mr. Gatch declines to discuss the situation. The embezzlement has, it is stated, extended over a period of the last five years, and it was made possible, it is understood, by manipulation of the adding machine used in computing the daily balances.

Immediately after the condition became known to the bank officials, a meeting of the stockholders was called and the entire defalcation made good by them.

WOMAN DYES HAIR; LOSES IT

NOW WANTS $20,000 DAMAGES FOR HER MISSING TRESSES.

Milwaukee Judge Considers Loss of Locks Sufficient Ground for Suit and Overrules Demurrer.

Milwaukee.—Hear ye women of America! You have a right to go into court and sue for damages if you buy a cosmetic or hair dye and it spoils your beauty. Judge Quarles of this city has said so in refusing to throw out a $20,000 suit filed by a woman who lost her tresses.

A woman has a perfectly good cause for complaint in an action for damages if she loses her hair by reason of the application of chemicals, particularly so if the solution is advertised as being a hair restorer.

Judge Quarles on Friday overruled the demurrer of a company of Fond du Lac to the complaint of Mrs. M. L. Bowman to the effect that her complaint does not state a sufficient cause of action. He gave the defendants time to file their answer.

Mrs. Bowman, a traveling woman, sued the drug company and a St. Louis manufacturer of hair dye for $20,000 damages for the loss of her hair. She alleges its loss was caused by the application of hair stain purchased of the drug company and manufactured by the St. Louis company. The defendants demurred on the ground that the complaint failed to state a sufficient cause of action.

"Her hair is woman's chief beauty," said the attorney for Mrs. Bowman, while arguing the case. "To paraphrase a well-known quotation, 'He who steals her pocketbook steals trash—usually—but he who filches her hair takes that which cannot enrich him and leaves her poor indeed.' A woman's hair is one of her chief assets. That has come to be so well acknowledged that women nowadays are not content with nature's gifts, but purchase large quantities of bogus capillary vegetation in order to increase their assets."

BREWERS AGAINST DIVES.

National Association Members Speak for War on the Low Class Saloons.

Atlantic City, N. J.—Proper regulations of the liquor traffic and a strict enforcement of the laws governing saloons were strongly recommended by speakers at the final session of the annual convention of the United States Brewers' association Thursday.

Percy Andreas of the Ohio State Brewers' association, said the low dives were largely responsible for the agitation against the liquor business and he urged the members of the association to pledge themselves to assist the authorities in wiping them out. William C. Manchester of the Michigan State Brewers' association took the same stand.

The new president of the association, Carl J. Hoster of Columbus, O., pledged himself to devote his efforts as the head of the organization to obtaining the proper regulation of saloons the enforcement of the laws and a separation of the liquor business from vices which have crept into it.

TRAIN BANDITS ARE HELD.

Omaha Prisoners Are Bound Over to Grand Jury Under Bonds of $25,000.

Omaha, Neb.—G. W. Woods, Fred Torgensen and James Gordon were bound over to the next grand jury and held under $25,000 bond each to answer the charge of holding up and robbing the Overland limited mail car on the Union Pacific railroad on the night of May 22, by Judge W. H. Monger in the United States district court.

Twenty-two witnesses were called to identify the prisoners and all were more or less sure that the men in the prisoners' dock were identical with those who committed the robbery. Six small boys, running from eight to eleven years were interesting witnesses and each told of seeing one or more of the men in the vicinity of Brown park before and after the robbery occurred. They found the revolvers and other paraphernalia which led to the arrests of three men charged with the robbery.

Party Leaders to Testify.

Indianapolis, Ind.—At the request of the United State's Attorneys Stuart McNamara of the department of justice at Washington, and Charles W. Miller of this district, Judge Anderson continued the Indianapolis News libel case until October 11.

This action was taken to permit the prosecution to introduce as witnesses Frank H. Hitchcock, former chairman of the Republican national committee; Norman E. Mack, chairman of the Democratic national committee; George B. Cortelyou, certain members of the office staff of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., and certain officials of various departments of the government at Washington.

County Treasurer O.T. Tandberg died in a Minneapolis hospital on last Friday morning. The remains were brought to Red Lake Falls for interment Mr. Tandberg was serving his second term as treasorer of this county, and was a man highly respected by all who knew him.

The Oyster Crab.

Some of the most remarkable crabs in the world live at the expense of other animals. They are crustacean tramps and have no shame in sustaining existence at other animals' cost. One of these marine tramps is a little fellow that makes its home with the living oyster. In fact, it dwells in the oyster's shell and feeds on whatever is left over from the mollusk's dinners. Oddly enough, however, it is only the female that has this habit of "boarding out." The male crab has no permanent home, but spends its time swimming about at the surface of the water. Oyster crabs sometimes are big enough to have an arm stretch of an inch. Epicures consider them very good to eat. Sometimes they are cooked separately, and occasionally they are pickled. Crabs of nearly allied species, somewhat bigger, are found in the shells of mussels and scallops. In this case, again, only the female is a parasite.

Scottish Caution.

Certainly the cautious Scot spirit pervaded the opinions of the Scottish architect who was called upon to erect a building in England upon the long lease system, so common with Anglican proprietors, but quite new to our friend. When he found the proposal was to build upon the tenure of 999 years he quietly suggested: "Could ye no mak' it a thousand? Nine hundred and ninety-nine years 'll be slippin' awa'."

But of all the cautious and careful answers we ever heard of was one given by a carpenter to an old lady in Glasgow, for whom he was working, and the anecdote is well authenticated. She had offered him a dram and asked him whether he would have it then or wait till his work was done. "Indeed, mem," he said, "there's been ale a power o' sudden deaths lately that I'll just tak' it now."—Reminiscences of Dean Ramsay."

Gallantry.

At a school in Aberdeen a teacher was examining her class on the Bible, the lesson being a part of Genesis. The teacher asked her class, "Why did the serpent tempt Eve instead of Adam?"

For some time there was silence, but at length a little boy held up his hand and replied, "Please, mum, 'cause it's ladies first."—Tit-Bits.

The Real Thing.

"How do youh possum taste, suh?" asked the solicitous waiter.

"Well," responded the patron who had ordered the article, "it tastes pretty good, but it isn't possum."

"No, suh," rejoined the waiter, "an' dat's a sign it's genuine. De genuine possum is a great pretender, suh; yas, suh."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Mr. George Gunderson, the Plummer horse dentist was up this way Tuesday, and done us some tooth work on our horse, which was badly needed. He is expert at the business.

To tell the truth we have been just a little bit crowded with legal work this week, not so bad that we could not handle just a little more, but enough to keep us from getting lazy.

If you get hungry going down to Thief River Falls, stop at The Soo Cafe, near the Soo depot, and get a lunch, or a square meal at a reasonable price.

George Jarman, Proprietor

The Kratka people are going to celebrate the 4th, of July in grand style. Commenceing with a bowery dance on the afternoon of the 3rd, with a grand display of fire works in the evening. Picnic in the grove on Sunday.

Henry Aradt was a pleasant caller at this office Wednesday evening. He called to notify us that he would not make final proof at this time, but would hold down the old homestead for two years more, under the extension of time granted to actual residents, and you bet Hank is one of them, with a big crop of grain growing and the family living on the land.

Mrs. Erma Bruckmann has been appointed as post master at Radney, in place of John Radtecki, resigned. The office will be moved about two miles east of its present location and will be supplied with mail on the Rudell route, and the mail on this route will come by way of Rhoda from Lillo to Sunbeam. This will be a big improvement to the service.

The bill for a two years extension of time for making payment on these lands only mentions the actual residents, that is the men that are liveing on the land and farming it. No relief is asked for the fellow that only visits his claim once in six months, to see how tall the weeds have grown, then skips out again, for fear he may have to work a pole tax to help improve the country, and then not make his payments to the government. That class of settlers have had to much relief on making their payments, while their land has been laying idle and them waiting for their neighbors to improve the country and raise the price of it.

A Medal of Blood.

Garibaldi was once presented with a medal made of his own blood. The giver was Dr. Manini of Naples, who was well known as a petrifier and preserver of the human body. Dr. Manini in offering his gift to Garibaldi said that whenever the general looked at it it would brace him up for the last fight, and across the medal were engraved the words, "The Blood of Garibaldi Is Forever Red." The strange medal is preserved by the general's descendants.

Carrying a Watch.

"After carrying a watch for thirty years I have just learned something new in watch lore," said the city salesman. "I don't know whether this is true or not, but an old watchmaker told me. I bought a watch of him the other day. It was a cheap watch. He said:

"'What pocket are you going to carry your watch in—the right or left?'

"I told him the left.

"'Then,' said he, 'I will regulate it for the left.'

"I asked what difference it made, and he declared that a watch runs faster on the left side than on the right, so to keep it from gaining time he regulates it accordingly. In fine watches the difference is hardly worth considering, but in watches of cheap make like mine it is very noticeable. I asked for a scientific reason for this variation. He could give none; said he only knew it was true, and then, whether he was faking or not, he pretended to regulate my watch for the left pocket."—New York Sun.

BURDENS LIFTED

From Bent Backs.

A bad back is a heavy handicap to those of us who have to work every day. Nine times out of ten, backache tells of kidney weakness. The only way to find relief is to cure the kidneys. Doan's Kidney Pills have given sound strong backs to thousands of men and women. Mrs. Wesley Clemens, 311 Marion St., Manchester, Ia., says: "Constant work at a sewing machine seemed to bring on kidney trouble. The kidney action was irregular and the pains in my back and loins so severe I could hardly endure it. Doan's Kidney Pills made me feel better in a short time, and I took them until entirely free from my trouble."

MOTHERS WHO HAVE DAUGHTERS

Find Help in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Winchester, Ind.—"Four doctors told me that they could never make me regular, and that I would eventually have dropsy. I would bloat, and suffer from bearing-down pains, cramps and chills, and I could not sleep nights. My mother wrote to Mrs. Pinkham for advice, and I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking one and one-half bottles of the Compound, I am all right again, and I recommend it to every suffering woman."—MRS. MAY DEAL, Winchester, Ind.

Hundreds of such letters from girls and mothers expressing their gratitude for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished for them have been received by The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass.

Girls who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, backache, headache, dragging-down sensations, fainting spells or indigestion, should take immediate action to ward off the serious consequences and be restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Thousands have been restored to health by its use.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

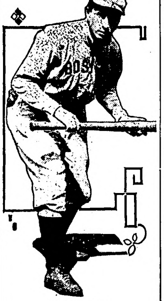
YOUNG BOSTON AMERICAN FIELDER HAS FINE RECORD

Harry Hooper Led California League in Fielding Last Year and Hit at .344 Clip.

Among the several "finds" produced in the ranks of the California state league last year was Harry Hooper of the Sacramento club, who is "making good" with the Boston Americans this season. This young player, who has just reached his majority, was without doubt the fastest outfielder in the California league, and besides this he wielded the bat at a .344 clip for the season.

"Hoop," as he is familiarly known, was born in Capitola, in the Santa Clara valley, California. He received his baseball as well as educational schooling in St. Mary's college, where Hal Chase and Joe Nealon first shone as baseball stars. His fleetness of foot—for Hooper can easily make the 100 yards in 11 seconds—earned him a position in the outfield of the second team, and a year later in the regular Phoenix nine.



Harry Hooper.

It was while playing in his senior year that he had made his debut in the State league with the Oakland club in 1906. Manager Curtin of the Sacramento club was impressed with Hooper's speed when he first saw him, and a deal was made whereby Hooper was bought for Sacramento for the paltry sum of $25.

Hooper's first year with the Sacramento club, then known as the Cordovas, found him hitting the ball at .297 when the season ended. But it was during the season of 1908 that he really showed class.

When the season was half over he was hitting for only .220, but when he struck his gait he crept right up the hit column and passed everyone except Nealon and Hooper's hitting for the last half season was close onto .450.

Being a left-hander with the stick, Hooper continually beats out infield chances, turning them into singles. His record shows that out of 77 games and 294 times at bat he made 47 runs, 101 base hits and stole 41 bases. His fielding average shows only four errors and 17 assists, more assists than any other outfielder in the league made.

HOW WASHINGTON PITCHER BROKE INTO FAST COMPANY

Called Out of Bleachers by Armour, Placed in Box, and Beat Waddell With Ease.

Charley Smith, the lanky Washington twirler, broke into fast company in a very peculiar manner. Charley pitched for semi-professional teams in and around Cleveland seven or eight years ago and had made quite a record. One day Bill Armour, who was managing the Cleveland club at that time, found himself so short of pitching talent that the situation was really alarming. He wired frantically for help, but his efforts were of no avail. He had been working a couple of his pitchers almost to death, and on the day in question did not feel like sending either of them into the box. "I would give almost anything for a man who could go in and pitch a creditable game for me to-day," Bill confided to a friend. "Would you give a youngster a chance?" queried the friend. "I certainly would, if he showed me anything that looked like the goods," answered Bill. "Well, I know your man," said the friend. "You have somebody take a stroll through the left field bleachers and find Charley Smith. He's got the nerve to face any team, and I am pretty sure he will jump at the chance." So Armour hurried a man to the bleachers in left field. Smith was found without much trouble and declared he was willing to go into the box. The Athletics were playing the Naps that day, and were cutting some ice in the race that year. But Smith didn't care. He was conducted to the clubhouse and rigged out in a Cleveland uniform. Smith made monkeys of the Athletics that afternoon and the Naps won from Waddell with ease. Armour, however, decided that Charley was not ripe for fast company and, after pitching him in a couple of games, in all of which he performed nicely, he was sent to New Orleans. Washington got him from the Pelicans.

DIAMOND GOSSIP

Roy Thomas, now coaching the Pennsylvania varsity team, will rejoin Pittsburg after the college season.

Billy Keeler made his debut as a professional player for the Binghamton team as a third baseman.

Single-handed triple plays have been made by Paul Hines in '78, Harry O'Hagan in 1902, Larry Schlaffy in 1904 and Sim Murach in 1906.

Malachi Kittridge is having a hard time keeping his Wilkesbarre club out of last place in the New York State league race.

Bill Couglin, the old Detroit third baseman is managing the Williamsport club in the Tri-State league. Bill is fielding like a barn afire, but is still shy with the stick.

Griffith, it is said, has told the Atlanta club that he would like to have pitcher Roy Castleton at once. Ballplayers speak of this twirler as one who has as much as any pitcher in the game.

The major leagues are not as religious now as they used to be. Why so? Well, only a few years ago Bishop, Abbott and Abbey were all in the fast company, and now they are all gone.

HARD QUESTION TO ANSWER

Simple Interrogation That Put Accusing Professor in Rather a Tight Place.

The following story which leaked out of a Yale faculty meeting is also typical of "Waterloo" Wheeler. The case of a fast student was before the faculty. Though the Yale principle is to meddle as little as possible with the life and morals of the student, insisting merely on the rule, keep a good scholarship stand and be regular in attendance, still flagrant cases of misconduct are summarily disposed of. The student in question had been seen in the company of a woman of rather poor reputation and there was a question of dismissal. Lest he be wrongfully sentenced the cautious Prof. Ladd, the philosopher, had inquired, "Was the young man positively identified?" Oh, yes, the professor knew the man well; there could be no mistake about it. Then Prof. Wheeler looked up quizzically, tapped his spectacles against the fingers of his left hand, a characteristic gesture, and inquired: "And can the professor also positively identify the other party?"—Bohemian Magazine.

SKIN ROUGH AS BARK.

Baby Boy Had Intense Itching Humor—Scratched Till Blood Ran.

Found a Cure in Cuticura.

"Our son, two years old, was afflicted with a rash. After he suffered with the trouble several weeks I took him to the doctor but it got worse. The rash ran together and made large blisters. The little fellow didn't want to do anything but scratch and we had to wrap his hands up to keep him from tearing the flesh open till the blood would run. The itching was intense. The skin on his back became hard and rough like the bark of a tree. He suffered intensely for about three months. But I found a remedy in Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. The result was almost magical. That was more than two years ago and there has not been the slightest symptom of it since he was cured. J. W. Lauck, Yukon, Okla., Aug. 28 and Sept. 17, 1908."

Prominent Women Aid Good Cause.

A large number of women occupying prominent positions in society, or on the stage, are taking an active interest in the anti-tuberculosis campaign. Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt has recently given $1,000,000 for sanitary homes for consumptives. Mrs. Keith Spalding of Chicago has erected a sanitarium for the Chicago Tuberculosis institute at a cost of about $50,000; Mrs. Collis P. Huntington and Mrs. Borden Harriman have given largely to the consumption fight. In Porto Rico, Mrs. Albert Norton Wood, wife of a prominent army officer stationed at San Juan, has stirred the entire island through the anti-tuberculosis crusade she inaugurated. Mme. Emma Calve is a most enthusiastic worker, and has given largely of her talent and money for the relief of tuberculosis sufferers, and Miss Olga Nethersole has even lectured before the public on tuberculosis.

MAKING SUNSHINE

It Is Often Found in Pure Food.

The improper selection of food drives many a healthy person into the depths of despairing illness. Indeed, much sickness comes from wrong food and just so surely as that is the case right food will make the sun shine once more.

An old veteran of Newburyport, Mass., says: "In October, I was taken sick and went to bed, losing 47 pounds in about 60 days. I had doctor after doctor, food hurt me and I had to live almost entirely on magnesia and soda. All solid food distressed me so that water would run out of my mouth in little streams.

"I had terrible night sweats, and my doctor finally said I had consumption and must die. My good wife gave up all hope. We were at Old Orchard, Me., at that time and my wife saw Grape-Nuts in a grocery there. She bought some and persuaded me to try it.

"I had no faith in it, but took it to please her. To my surprise it did not distress me as all other food had done and before I had taken the fifth package I was well on the mend. The pains left my head, my mind became clearer and I gained weight rapidly.

"I went back to my work again and now after six weeks' use of the food I am better and stronger than ever before in my life. Grape-Nuts surely saved my life and made me a strong hearty man, 15 pounds heavier than before I was taken ill.

"Both my good wife and I are willing to make affidavit to the truth of this."

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

VOL. IX. SUNBEAM, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, JUNE 18, 1909. NO. 12.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Danish Folk Observe Grundlov.

St. Paul.—To celebrate the anniversary of the promulgation of the Danish constitution, or "grundlov," Danish residents of the Twin Cities organized a number of picnics to the beauty spots of the Twin Cities last Sunday.

From St. Paul the Danish Young People's society mustered a large crowd at Neilsen's farm, below the Lake street bridge, where they were joined by the Danish Young People's society of Minneapolis of 1905. The threatening appearance of the afternoon interfered somewhat with the day's program, but not sufficiently to spoil the day's festivities.

The singing of the Dania society of St. Paul was a feature of the outing.

About eighty young people of St. Peter's Danish Lutheran church spent their national holiday at Minnehaha, where "stunts" of all kinds were gotten up. An address by A. C. Sorensen, editor of the "Ugebladt," was one of the features of the afternoon.

Explosion May Be Fatal.

Duluth.—While trying to light a fire with kerosene in his home, David Patten, an expressman, was horribly burned and will probably die. He tried to light a fire in the kitchen range. The wood was wet and would not catch, and Patten picked up a can of kerosene and poured some of it on the smoldering wood. There was a flash and an explosion, and instantly Patten's oil-soaked clothes were ablaze. Patten and his wife finally succeeded in extinguishing the flames, but not until he had been terribly scorched. His clothes were burned almost entirely off and on parts of his body the flesh was hanging in shreds.

Gibbons to Present Claims.

Bemidji.—John F. Gibbons of this city has gone to Washington as the legal representative of the Chippewa Indians of Red Lake Indian agency. He will look after matters involving the carrying out of the provisions of the treaties between the Indians and the government and the settlement of claims aggregating many thousands of dollars.

Mr. Gibbons was unanimously chosen at a council of the tribe held recently at the agency.

Duluth.—W. G. Saunders, aged 70, died in a hospital. He was once a wealthy logger in the Duluth district, but of late years his riches vanished and he died dependent.

Bridegroom Is a Suicide.

Duluth.—Carrying a can of gasoline and a rifle, Alma Valimaa, a settler who lived eighteen miles north of Virginia, entered the house where his bride of three weeks was sitting and expressed his intention of setting fire to the house and killing her and himself.

The woman fled screaming from the house before he could carry out his purpose, and ran to the home of a neighbor. As she left the house she heard a shot, and, returning later with assistance, found the body of Valimaa on the floor with a bullet hole through his head. Valimaa was 34 years of age and his wife 45.

St. Paul Pioneer Is Dead.

After an illness covering several months, John S. Grode, president of the St. Paul board of public works, died at his home. Death was not unexpected, inasmuch as Mr. Grode had been in a critical condition for several days, following a general decline which set in last fall.

For many years Mr. Grode had been in public life, during which time he was prominently identified with democratic politics. He had been an active worker in the party practically since removing to St. Paul, more than thirty-six years ago. He was 63 years old.

Augustana Synod to Meet.

Red Wing.—The Augustana synod will begin its session in this city Thursday evening. This very influential body will be represented by several hundred pastors and delegates from eight different conferences. They will be in session about ten days. The executive committee of the synod began its work Friday in preparation for the coming session.

Indian Accused of Murder.

Brainerd.—John Kegg, a Chippewa Indian, is in jail here, accused of killing Sam Pete, another Indian, near Deerwood. The coroner's jury returned findings against Kegg, who asserts that Pete was killed by a third Indian, who escaped. Three other Indians are held on suspicion of being implicated in the crime.

Iron Merger Halted.

Duluth.—On the request of M. J. McKeefry of Letonia, O., a minority stockholder in the Pittsburg Iron Ore company, Judge Dibell issued a temporary injunction restraining the Pittsburg Iron Ore company from taking over the property of the United States Iron & Steel company of Pennsylvania and issuing $5,000,000 worth of bonds to pay for it.

MURDER REVEALED BY A DOG

CANINE GIVES GOTHAM POLICE A MYSTERY TO SOLVE.

Fox Terrier Smells Package Given to Boy and Barks Warning—Jealousy May Be Motive.

New York.—The keen scent of a dog led to the discovery of a murder Friday the mystery of which the police are thus far baffled in solving. The victim, Samuel Bersin, a decorator, had been cut to pieces and his head was not found until after canine instinct pointed the way to the discovery of the dismembered body.

Robbery, jealousy or revenge, the latter two suggested motives involving a woman and a love affair, are being worked upon, but only with the usual police formality of investigating all sides of a crime.

An autopsy performed on the victim's dismembered body showed that Bersin had been partly asphyxiated before his throat was slashed and the body mutilated in a manner similar to the famous Guldensuppe case of years ago.

The dismembered body, wrapped in oil cloth, was left by a stranger in the care of a boy in Catherine street. Subsequently the man's head, which was missing, was found lying on a pile of refuse under the Brooklyn bridge.

Not since the Guldensuppe case of a decade ago has a murder so mystified the police. For two hours the boy stood in front of a public school building in Monroe street waiting for the return of the man who had given him two bundles containing the dismembered body. A fox terrier smelled the blood in the packages and barked at them so vigorously and persistently that his owner called a policeman and the discovery resulted.

On the wrapper of each parcel, one of which contained the torso and the other the legs and arms, was boldly written the words, "Black Hand."

Detectives couple this with the recent activity of the secret service among "Black Hand" operators in the middle west and declare that the murdered man was the victim of an Italian blackmailing society.

Bersin had been wearing two handsome diamond rings and these with what ever money he carried were missing when the body was found.

Mrs. Mollie Isaacson, the murdered man's sister, informed the police that Bersin had been greatly depressed for the last month because a young woman with whom he was in love had forbidden him to call upon her. Mrs. Isaacson said that Bersin had a jealous rival for the girl's affection and stood much in fear of the other man.

Stem Torrent in Canal.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. — After a night of hard work the employes of the Canadian ship canal here succeeded in partially shutting off the torrent of water which has been roaring through the canal since the lock gates were torn out by the steamer Perry G. Walker. The pressure against the dam is now so great that the forcing of those four remaining wickets down.

The steamer Assinaboia put into Detour and spent the night. The Perry G. Walker was not so badly injured as first reported.

Flee Flames on a Train.

Smyrna Mills, Me.—The flaming forests of northern Aroostook overwhelmed the little village of Hillman, a new hamlet on the Ashland branch of the Bangor & Aroostook railroad, seven miles north of Smyrna Mills, Friday, and destroyed every building in the settlement.

The population, consisting of 50 persons, was saved from death by the timely arrival of a special train.

MINNESOTA BANKERS MEET.

Eminent Financiers Address the Annual Convention of Their Association at Lake Minnetonka.

Lake Minnetonka, Minn. — Tonka Bay hotel fairly swarmed with men of money Monday, for the Minnesota Bankers' association is holding its twentieth annual convention there, and members and their families have come from nearly every city and town in the state.

The opening session was held Monday morning and after a prayer by Rev. C. J. Swain of Excelsior President Joseph Chapman, Jr., vice-president of the Northwestern National bank of Minneapolis delivered his annual address. The other speakers of the morning and their topic were: William J. Olcott, Duluth, "The development of the mining and transportation of iron ores of the Lake Superior district;" William B. Joyce, New York, "Bonds and Burglary Insurance;" Congressman Frank N. Nye, "The Tariff," and L. O. Thorpe, Willmar, "Recent Bank Legislation."

In the afternoon the bankers enjoyed addresses by two eminent financiers. George E. Roberts, president of the Commercial National bank of Chicago, spoke on "Postal Savings Banks," and Col. Fred F. Farnsworth, secretary of the American Bankers' association, discussed the problems of that organization. Then the bankers and their wives boarded boats for Big Island park, where they were entertained all the evening.

"BLACK HAND" LIKE MAFIA.

Ohio Organization Governed Like the Old Society—Many Branches Are Found.

Cincinnati.—Revelations in the extortion, plotting and murder by the "Black Hand" as uncovered by the post-office inspectors from the Cincinnati office show conclusively that the band in Columbus, Marion, Dennison and Bellefontaine and other Ohio towns, was organized along the same lines as the old Mafia, but, if any thing with a much better system for concealing its movements.

It is now known that the Ohio "Black Hand" or the "Society of the Banana," as its members style themselves, had a branch in Pittsburg, Pa. and one in Chicago, and a line that extended to South Dakota. Regular meetings were held and the money obtained sent to Italy.

MEAT PROBE ORDERED.

Secretary Wilson Sends Inspectors to East St. Louis to Investigate Harms' Charges.

Washington.—The department of agriculture promptly accepted the challenge of J. F. Harms, a government meat inspector at East St. Louis, Ill., who, in tendering his resignation to Secretary Wilson, makes serious charges against the meat inspection system at the National stock yards and demands an investigation relative to his allegations.

An immediate and thorough investigation into Harms' charges concerning the East St. Louis packing houses was ordered and two inspectors have gone to East St. Louis.

Diphtheria Closes School.

Watertown, Conn.—Taft school was closed for the school year owing to the reappearance of diphtheria, which was epidemic recently. Knight Crowles of Chicago has been taken ill with the malady.

Charles Taft, son of President Taft, and a student at the school, has not been exposed to the disease, it was stated. The seniors will remain here for their college entrance examinations, but all other students will leave for home immediately.

BLOW TO WATERWAY

ENGINEERS DECLARE 14-FOOT CHANNEL WOULD BE TOO COSTLY.

PUT PRICE AT $128,000,000

Board Reports to Congress That Yearly Amount Necessary for Maintenance Would Be $6,000,000—Plan Nine-Foot Project.

Washington.—The proposed 14-foot deep waterway project from St. Louis to the gulf received a blow when the board of engineers reported to congress that such a waterway is not desirable. The waterway would cost $128,000,000 for construction and $6,000,000 annually for maintenance, the engineers say.

The report was based on a survey of the Mississippi river by a special board of engineers, created by act of congress. The conclusions reached by both the special board and the regular board of engineers are practically the same.

In considering the commercial phases of the question, the special board reported that although it had sought to obtain from commercial organizations facts as to the prospective commerce which requires a 14-foot channel, it has received very little definite information. It added that no actual large future developments of commerce are yet in sight.

The position was taken that ocean and lake vessels, such as would require a 14-foot instead of a nine-foot channel, would not be an economic means of transporting products on the river. Due to the necessity of building an ocean vessel of sufficient strength to resist storms, its cost in the United States, was estimated at about $71 for each ton of freight carried. On the great lakes the cost was estimated at $41.50. The Mississippi river steamboats and barges, capable of transporting 10,000 tons of freight on an 8½-foot draft, can be built for about $12 per ton of freight carried, it was estimated. Furthermore the board pointed out, a modern lake freighter is poorly constructed for navigating a tortuous river with a swift current. When a new type of vessel has been designed, the board suggested, there will be an immediate demand for a channel of greater depth than 14 feet.

The report of the regular board that it is not desidable to construct a navigable channel 14 feet deep from St. Louis or from Cricago to the mouth of the Mississippi was based on the conclusion of the special board that only commerce originating from sources that do not at present ship by river would justify the great cost of a 14-foot waterway.

It is claimed that the present demands of commerce between St. Louis and the gulf will be adequately met by an eight-foot channel from St. Louis to the mouth of the Ohio, and a channel of not less than nine feet in depth below the mouth of the Ohio. The board's belief is that an eight-foot channel from Chicago to St. Louis corresponding with the present eight-foot project from St. Louis to Cairo, is the least that would adequately meet the demands of commerce.

It adds that such a waterway would be desirable provided its cost is reasonable. Present and prospective demands of commerce between Chicago and the gulf would be adequately served, the board reports, by a through nine-foot channel to the gulf. Estimates for these channels have not been completed, but are promised to congress by next December.

WAR ON INCOME TAX.

Taft Plan Fails to Bring Republicans Peace—Would Assess the Corporations.

Washington.—After a conference at the White House between President Taft and Senator Aldrich it was stated that the finance committee of the senate would consent to placing in the tariff bill a two per cent. tax upon the net earnings of corporations if the supporters of the income tax amendments would accept it and withdraw their proposition. This suggestion, it is declared, came from President Taft and was designed to prevent a split in the Republican party over the income tax feature.

Senator Aldrich communicated the plan to Senators Cummins and Borah, who are the leaders of the progressive Republicans who have favored the Cummins income tax amendment. These senators consulted with their colleagues and, as a result, the plan was repudiated by them.

Woman Dies at Convention.

Fort Dodge, Ia.—At the state encampment of the G. A. R. Tuesday night, Mrs. Alice Newman of Des Moines, wife of Adjt. Gen. Newman, died of apoplexy.

She was stricken in the convention hall. The first session of the encampment was held with 2,000 persons in attendance.

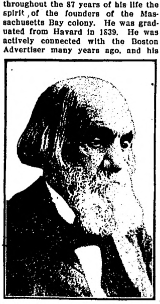
EDWARD EVERETT HALE DEAD

CHAPLAIN OF UNITED STATES SENATE PASSES AWAY.

Whole Country Joins in Mourning Loss of Noted Divine, Philanthropist and Author.

Boston.—The funeral of Dr. Edward Everett Hale, chaplain of the United States senate, Unitarian divine, philanthropist, author, journalist and lover of peace, who died Thursday in his home in Roxbury, Took place Sunday in the South Congregational church. A delegation of senators attended the funeral.

Dr. Hale was born in this city in April, 1822, and by training, education and tradition he represented throughout the 87 years of his life the spirit of the founders of the Massachusetts Bay colony. He was graduated from Havard in 1839. He was actively connected with the Boston Advertiser many years ago, and his first charge as a clergyman was a church in Worcester. He was a prolific writer and had for years been allied with the principal philanthropic movements of the city, state and nation.



Rev. Dr. Edward Hale.

Dr. Hale had been chaplain of the United States senate since 1903. His selection at that time to fill a vacancy was generally regarded as a high tribute to his accomplishments and intellectual ability.

It seems as if the whole country joined in mourning the loss of Dr. Hale. Messages expressing sorrow and esteem poured into the Hale household, one of the first being from President and Mrs. Taft.

As an author, Dr. Hale's fame rests on his short stories, such as "The Man Without a Country;" as an instigator of the social uplift, the work of the two great organizations, the Lend-A-Hand clubs, and the King's Daughters, will always add to his renown; as a minister and pastor, his half century in the pulpit of the South Congregational church and his preaching in many other churches were prolific of wise spiritual inspiration; while as a historian his writings have become authorities.

CENTENARY OF A UNIVERSITY.

Miami Celebrating Its Hundredth Birthday—Oxford (O.) Institution Has Splendid Record.

Oxford, O.—Miami university Saturday began the celebration of its hundredth birthday, in connection with the annual commencement exercises. The institution, though small, having only 1,806 alumni, is growing rather fast, and now has 1,100 students. But it is not its size that Miami boasts of, for in the hundred years of its existence it has given to the country a remarkable list of distinguished men.

Miami has given to the country one president, Benjamin Harrison; eight governors of states, three cabinet officers, six foreign ambassadors, seven United States senators, 23 United States representatives, 53 federal and state judges, 30 college presidents and a host of other distinguished men. Gen. Robert Cumming Schenck of the class of 1827 was one of the greatest speakers the house of representatives ever had. Oliver P. Morton, the famous war governor of Indiana; Calvin S. Brice, United States senator and capitalist, and Stanley Matthews, chief justice of the United States, were Miami graduates. David Swing, the famous Chicago preacher, was graduated from Miami and for 12 years was principal of the university's preparatory school.

Quake Felt in France.

Marseilles.—Two earthquake shocks were felt throughout the Riviera between 9 and 11 o'clock Friday night. While the damage done here was not great, reports from smaller cities show that the effects of the second shock were serious.

At Lambeso, a town of 2,500 inhabitants, 12 miles northwest of Ax, several houses collapsed and eight persons are reported to have been killed.

The Exceptional Equipment

of the California Fig Syrup Co. and the scientific attainments of its chemists have rendered possible the production of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, in all of its excellence, by obtaining the pure medicinal principles of plants known to act most beneficially and combining them most skillfully, in the right proportions, with its wholesome and refreshing Syrup of California Figs.

As there is only one genuine Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna and as the genuine is manufactured by an original method known to the California Fig Syrup Co. only, it is always necessary to buy the genuine to get its beneficial effects.

Oil Lamps Brighter Than Electric Light.

Probably one of the most wonderful as well as useful of modern inventions is that of a New York scientist who has just secured from the Government protection on a lamp burner, which by converting the oil into hydro-carbon gas, burning on a mantle, gives an eighty candle power light with less oil consumption and without carbonizing the mantle or overheating the lamp. It can be fitted to any lamp and the wick lasts a lifetime. There is absolutely no danger, no odor and no smoke. The Union Light Co., of New York City, have acquired the selling rights of this burner, which is called the "Herzog," after the inventor, and, we understand, are making a special discount to introduce it into each township with a view of securing a local representative.

Ate a Chick with Big Eyes.

A trainman is telling an incident that occurred on a Mohawk & Malone train up in the woods the other day. The train was standing on a siding waiting the arrival and passing of another train when an Italian walked through the coach, his hands crossed on his stomach and his head wagging from side to side in a doleful manner.

"What's the matter, John?" some one inquired.

"Oh, me sick—me sick as dev," replied the man, rolling his head still more distressingly and continuing the rubbing of his stomach.

"Sick? Well, what you been eating?" asked the sympathetic passenger.

"Eata de chick with the big eyes," responded John, as his groans increased.

John had killed an owl the night before and it didn't agree with him.—Utica Observer.

PRESSED HARD
Coffee's Weight on Old Age.

When prominent men realize the injurious effects of coffee and the change in health that Postum can bring, they are glad to lend their testimony for the benefit of others.

A superintendent of public schools in one of the southern states says:

"My mother, since her early childhood, was on inveterate coffee drinker, had been troubled with her heart for a number of years and complained of that 'weak all over' feeling and sick stomach.

"Some time ago I was making an official visit to a distant part of the country and took dinner with one of the merchants of the place. I noticed a somewhat peculiar flavour of the coffee, and asked him concerning it. He replied that it was Postum.

"I was so pleased with it, that after the meal was over, I bought a package to carry home with me, and had wife prepare some for the next meal. The whole family were so well pleased with it, that we discontinued coffee and used Postum entirely.

"I had really been at times very anxious concerning my mother's condition, but we noticed that after using Postum for a short time, she felt so much better than she did prior to its use, and had little trouble with her heart and no sick stomach; that the headaches were not so frequent, and her general condition much improved. This continued until she was as well and hearty as the rest of us.

"I know Postum has benefited myself and the other members of the family, but not in so marked a degree as in the case of my mother, as she was a victim of long standing." Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

The $600,000 appropriation for Roads and Bridges is declared unconstitutional by Judge Hascal R. Brill. The defendants are granted 20 days in which to answer. It is not unconstitutional to grant $200,000 for to build a grand stand at the State Fair for the "Big Bugs" to sit in for 15 or 20 minutes six days out of 365 days annually, but it is unconstitutional to grant a few dollars which would benefit the people and taxpayers of Minnesota closer and more direct than all the other legislation done at St. Paul last winter combine. Don't mention it.--Olberg Joural.

The action was brought under Section 9, of Article IX of the Constitutinon of thestate of Minnesota, which reads:

> "No money shall ever be paid out of the treasury of this state except in pursuance of an appropriation made by law."

There you have it! The members of the Legislature would not give one of their Constituants a pleasant look, if they asked them to pass a law for an appropriation last winter. Now we are of the opinion that Judge Brill is right, and the next Campaign will see the members of the last legislature with the facts staring them in the face, that they got nothing for the roads and bridges in their District's, and absolutely refused to allow any bill asking for any appropriation to come out of the committee on Roads and Bridges, but stuck all their eggs into one basket, the combine "pork barrel."

It was right and proper to grant the appropriation for the State Fair grand stand, and the Cities had representatives there who attended to getting the law passed for the Cash.

The big "pork barrel" break was made by the entire legislature, and when the people get on to the fact of how they got did up in the transaction, the next legislature will be so full of strange faces, that they will need a committee of introduction.

Walter McAndress lost a valuable horse on last Saturday night. He had been sick for some time and after his death he was opened, to see what disease he died of. His lungs and liver seemed to have been affected, but as there was no regular veterinary to examine him, it would be difficult to say just what caused his death. This is the second valuable horse that Mr. McAndress has lost in the past year and the loss fails pretty heavily on him. He always takes the best care of his horses and keeps them in first class condition, so it can not be said that they died from neglect or want of proper care.

Killed By A Bull.

By the instantious death of Ole Svendsen last sunday evening a pall of gloom and sadness is cast over a happy family and the entire community.

On sunday evening last Mr. Svendsen, who is a well known farmer liveing three miles north of Garnes, went into his barn yard to change the cattle from one yard to another, when he was attacked and almost instantly killed by an ugly bull. His daughter came to his assistanc and drove the animal away, and Dr. Clark was called from Plummer but of course could do nothing as his neck and one arm was broken by the first charge of infuriated beast.

Funeral services were held at the family residence on Wednesday, and was attended by a large number of neighbors and friends, who turned out to tender their sincere sympathy to the bereaved family.

Bonheur's Humor.

Mlle. Rosa Bonheur (Rosa stood for Rosalie) was not without a sense of humor, so it is told of her that when presiding over a school of design in Paris, the pupils being girls, the artist was disgusted with the class because, imitative of their teacher, the young women had cut their hair short. "Goodness," cried Rosa Bonheur, "how horrid you all look! This is not a class of boys. You silly creatures, let your hair alone and do your best so as to retain all the advantages of your sex."

Easy Cure.

"There is a man who is always looking for trouble."

"Well, it's easy enough to cure him of that habit."

"How?"

YOUR BACKACHE WILL YIELD

To Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Rockland, Maine.—"I was troubled for a long time with pains in my back and side, and was miserable in every way. I doctored until I was discouraged, and thought I should never get well. I read a testimonial about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and thought I would try it. After taking three bottles I was cured, and never felt so well in all my life. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all my friends."—Mrs. WILL YOUNG, 6 Columbia Avenue, Rockland, Me.

Backache is a symptom of female weakness or derangement. If you have backache, don't neglect it. To get permanent relief you must reach the root of the trouble. Nothing we know of will do this so safely and surely as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Cure the cause of these distressing aches and pains and you will become well and strong.

The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has restored health to thousands of women.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge.

WOMAN'S WORTH.

Interrupted the Wedding.

The other day, at the Shawnee county Court House, Probate Judge Schoch was about to marry a young couple. He pronounced the preliminary words and told them to join hands, and started on the ceremony.

"Hey, there! Hold up a minute! Wait, I say!" This series of startling exclamations came from the door.

The groom was horrified—the bride badly scared.

"Just a minute. I want to give you each an apple before you are married." said the man who had made the noise. And in he calmly walked and handed each of them a Grimes Golden.

It was one man's idea of a joke.—Kansas City Journal.

A Friendly Pointer.

"What," asked Arizona Al, when the new editor had taken charge of The Daily Rattlesnake, "is goin' to be your policy?"

"My policy, my friend, is going to be to tell the truth according to my lights, and let the chips fall where they may."

"Stranger, that's a good policy, but be sure before you go to press that you've got your lights adjusted to suit all parties. This is a bad place for people that gits the wrong focus."

LAJOIE NOT DISCOURAGED OVER SHOWING OF CLEVELAND TEAM

Manager Lajoie is not discouraged over the recent poor showing of his Cleveland team. He simply blames it on a slump that usually comes to every team at different times. Mons. Napoleon believes, though, that the slump is not going to remain forever and his outfit will soon begin to climb.

"A big fuss has been kicked up all over the country about our poor showing," said Lajoie. "That's because of the fickle baseball public. When a team's losing the 'fans' get the old hammer out. They don't stop to consider conditions. We are right now riding on one large juicy slump.

"The public never stops to figure out the different inside points. Take that Boston team for instance. When it played us it went like a house afire. It put up championship baseball. Then it hit St. Louis and looked like a team of dubs, judging from the games it lost to the Browns. That Washington team, too, made us look foolish. Then the Browns turned in and lammed it all over the lot.

"But that's baseball, and we have to take what's coming. My players are in fair shape. That is, I have only two members on the hospital list Dode Birmingham had an operation on a bump on his elbow. Denny Sullivan is still sick in the hospital.

"Until the eastern clubs came west everybody and his brother out this way was chirping that the east would not stick in the 'Fat Four.' But some of them are still there. No, you can't get your Uncle Larry to make any predictions as to whether they are going to remain up there. Baseball is such a funny game that they might, and then you look like a sucker after making a foolish guess."

ROSSMAN NOT FOR SALE; QUITS FIRST BASE JOB

President Navin of Detroit Says He Will Not Let Player Go for Waiver Price of $1,500.

Detroit has no intention of selling Claude Rossman at the waiver price.

"Our request for waivers was more of a suggestion to the other managers than for a deal to get rid of Claude," said President Navin the other day.

"Nobody seems to have anything to offer in the way of trade. We will not let Rossman go to anybody for $1,500. It looks now as if we would hold him, pending the time when somebody makes up his mind he needs him worse than at present. In the meantime he may come in handy, in case we need a pinch hitter or if somebody is hurt."

Claude Rossman.

No first base after this in Claude Rossman's, if you please, and this goes whether he remains on the roster of the Tigers, goes to some other American or National league club, or even has to take a trip into the minors. Claude regards the initial station as one for which he is not fitted on account of his failure to throw accurately in the quick, decisive manner necessary at times.

"I've had two years experience in the outfield in the minor leagues and only accident made me a first baseman, anyhow," said Big Claude. "I want to go back there. Far be it from me to suggest to Jennings that he might try me out in center and give Crawford a chance at the bag. Hughie knows his business too well to need any suggestions.

"But I think all the same that if I were placed on some team that could give me a little assistance on balls hit off to my flanks I could bat well enough to make good. I know I'd hit a lot better in the outfield."

Faster Baseball Promised.

President B. B. Johnson of the American league has devised a scheme whereby the national game will be made faster. He has obtained a baseball which is springier and faster than the one now used and will distribute it to the various clubs in the league. The teams will try out the ball in their practice and if it is found satisfactory it will be used in all championship games. The ball is much the same as that employed when Ed. Delehanty used to whack out ten or twelve home runs during a game. In those times such a brief hit as a double was scorned. It had to be a triple or a home run; nothing else went. If the ball stands the test the patrons of the national game will see an increase in batting.

Poor Hitting by Good Men.

There are some dozen American league batters who are batting way below their usual stride. George Davis is batting only .077, while Strunk, the young Athletic who batted hard last fall, has hit only .100, or three points below Barr, another of Connie Mack's youngsters. "Rube" Oldring, still another Athletic, has batted .107 while "Hippo" Spencer, the hard hitting catcher of the Red Sox, has been able to hit but .114. Bill Bradley's average is only .130, while here are some other marks: Atz, .151; Parent, .155; Street, .162; Clymer, .184; McConnell, .198; Hemphill, .189; Wagner, .180. Groom and Vickers have not made a hit yet.

GOT TO THE CAUSE

And Then All Symptoms of Kidney Trouble Vanished.

C. J. Hammonds, 517 S. Hill St., Fort Scott, Kansas, says: "I was operated on for stone in the kidney but not cured and some time after was feeling so bad that I knew there must be another stone that would have to be cut out. I decided to try Doan's Kidney Pills and the kidney action improved right away. Large quantities of sediment and stony particles passed from me, and finally the stone itself, part dissolved, but still as big as a pea. With it disappeared all symptoms of dizziness, rheumatism and headaches. I have gained about 50 pounds since and feel well and hearty."

AGONIZING ITCHING.

Eczema for a Year—Got No Relief Even at Skin Hospital—In Despair

Until Cuticura Cured Him.

"I was troubled with a severe itching and dry, scurfy skin on my ankles, feet, arms and scalp. Scratching made it worse. Thousands of small red pimples formed and these caused intense itching. I was advised to go to the hospital for diseases of the skin. I did so, the chief surgeon saying: "I never saw such a bad case of eczema." But I got little or no relief. Then I tried many so-called remedies, but I became so bad that I almost gave up in despair. After suffering agonies for twelve months, I was relieved of the almost unbearable itching after two or three applications of Cuticura Ointment. I continued its use, combined with Cuticura Soap and Pills, and I was completely cured. Henry Searle, Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 8 and 10, 1907."

Dodging Responsibility.

"Why should a man pay rent when he can own his own home?" said the thrifty citizen.

"I don't know," answered Mr. Meekton, "unless it's because you'd rather have your wife speak her mind to the landlord than to you when the place gets run down."

Good Stroke of Business.

The £1 note is not the smallest issued by the bank of England. By mistake a note of the value of one penny was made and issued in 1828. It was in circulation for many years, a source of annoyance to the cashiers in making up their accounts. At length the holder of it brought it to the bank and after considerable argument persuaded the authorities to give him £5 for it.

A Rare Good Thing.

"Am using ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE, and can truly say I would not have been without it so long, had I known the relief it would give my aching feet. I think it a rare good thing for anyone having sore or tired feet.—Mrs. Matilda Holtwert, Providence, R. I." Sold by all Druggists, 25c. Ask to-day.

G. A. R. Reunion.

St. Paul.—The forty-third annual reunion of the Minnesota G. A. R. was held at St. Paul last week. An important event was the unanimous indorsement of former Governor Van Sant for national commander at the next national encampment at Salt Lake City, Aug. 9.

The officers elected are: Judge L. W. Collins, Minneapolis, commander; Dr. O. S. Pine, St. Paul, senior vice commander, and J. A. Towne, Washington, junior vice commander.

The delegates are:

At Large—Hugh Wilson, Minneapolis; F. C. Meade, Alexandria.

First District—C. A. Warren, Brownsdale.

Second District—A. H. Pickle, Sleepy Eye.

Third District—A. H. Westlake, Northfield.

Fourth District—James H. Davidson, St. Paul.

Fifth District—S. H. Franklin, Minneapolis.

Sixth District—John Kaufman, St. Cloud.

Seventh District—H. H. Gokey, Bird Island.

Eighth District—S. F. White, Duluth.

Ninth District—W. G. Hunt, Fergus Falls.

Alternates—

At Large—E. C. Patterson, White Bear; C. W. Doop, Mapleton.

First District—Henry G. Bilbie, Owatonna.

Second District—Thomas Hodson, Mankato.

Third District—Lewis Horst.

Fourth District—E. F. Kenrick, St. Paul.

Fifth District—W. W. Gilbert, Minneapolis.

Sixth District—J. F. Locke, Long Prairie.

Seventh District—J. T. Wilkinson, Appleton.

Eighth District—Edwin B. Force, Duluth.

Ninth District—Peter Czizek, Moorhead.

The Woman's Relief Corps closed its annual meeting here yesterday after electing the following delegates to the national reunion at Salt Lake City in August: Delegate at large, Eugenie Bennett; delegates, Ella Mason, First district; Lulu Palmer, second district; Winifred Nelson, third district; Anna M. Harley, fourth district; Mrs. Oreton, fifth district; Carrie Kenrick, sixth district, and Kate Huntington, seventh district. The following were elected officers: Mrs. Emma Colfield, Annandale, president; Mrs. Amanda Wickerski, senior vice president; Mrs. Susie Marshall, Plainview, junior vice president; Sara E. Matthews, Annandale, secretary, and Mrs. Ida Baker, Minneapolis, treasurer.

Horse Thief in Toils.

Bemidji.—As the result of a clever piece of detective work Sheriff A. B. Hazen of this city has arrested George Washington Martin, wanted in Douglas county since 1904 on a charge of horse stealing. Sheriff Hazen some time ago received a photograph postal card with a description of Martin and a picture of him as he appeared four years ago. In spite of the changed appearance of the fugitive, the sheriff recognized Martin here in a saloon Saturday night, took him into custody and placed him in the county jail. He wired J. E. Lundgren, sheriff of Douglas county, who has arrived here and declares the prisoner is the man wanted. Martin is charged with having taken a horse and buggy from a man named Stone for whom he was working near Osakis, Aug. 15, 1909, making his escape. The rig has not been recovered.

Girl Burned in Explosion.

Hibbing.—Esther Carlson, aged 20, daughter of a section foreman for the Duluth, Missabe and Northern at Barber, several miles east of here, died of injuries sustained in an explosion about 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Miss Carlson was trying to light a fire in a stove at her home by pouring kerosene on the kindling, and an explosion followed. The woman was terribly burned and efforts to save her life were futile.

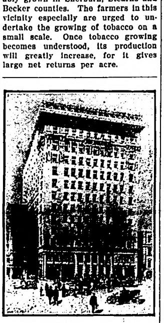
Red Wing Y. M. C. A. Site Chosen.

Red Wing.—The Phelps property, corner Broadway and Main street, in the heart of the city of Red Wing, is the site chosen for E. C. Erb, acting under instructions from James Lawther, for the new $50,000 Y. M. C. A. building which the latter will donate to the city of Red Wing. Plans for the building are now being prepared and the work will be commenced within a few weeks.

Tobacco Plants for Culture in Minnesota.

The Minnesota legislature appropriated a small sum of money for tobacco investigations. The experiment station at St. Anthony Park, Minn., has prepared itself for the occasion by providing a large number of plants for free distribution among the farmers. Any farmer in the state who desires to attempt the production of tobacco may apply to the experiment station for plants enough for an acre or less. Six thousand plants are considered enough for an acre. The station has grown these plants in the eastern part of Sherburn county, and anyone in that part of the state can easily call for the plants. If the plants are to be shipped to an address they will have to be expressed and express charges must be paid by the one receiving the plants.

The tobacco culture is in its infancy in Minnesota, but it is stated that it has been and can be, profitably grown in Sherburn, Stearns and Becker counties. The farmers in this vicinity especially are urged to undertake the growing of tobacco on a small scale. Once tobacco growing becomes understood, its production will greatly increase, for it gives large net returns per acre.



Hotel Radisson.

The Minneapolis Commercial club is to have its new home in the Hotel Radisson, expending $100,000 in furnishing the eleventh and twelfth floors of the building.

The hotel is of the highest type of concrete construction, perfectly fire proof and will cost when furnished complete $1,500,000. It will have three hundred and twenty-five guest chambers and will be thoroughly modern in all its appointments.

Big Crowd To Attend Pythian Fete.

Minneapolis.—The greatest demonstration in the history of the order of the Knights of Pythias will be seen in Minneapolis on July 1, when the Twin City Pythian festival will hold the boards at the Auditorium. The fete will be given under the auspices of the combined Pythian lodges of the Twin Cities, and delegations from several states will attend. A special train will bring delegates from the "Black Hills" country of South Dakota, who come to take part in the ceremonies. Word has been received by the executive committee that delegates will be present from almost every subordinate lodge in that state.

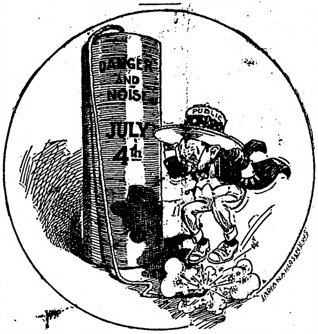
25 Trains for Endeavorers.

St. Paul.—Local railroad officials report that fully 25 special trains will be needed to carry to St. Paul the delegates of the Christian Endeavor convention, which opens July 5. Twelve trains have already been arranged for and the request for many others are now being handled by the various companies. From St. Louis a special steamer carrying several thousand Endeavorers will come up the river, stopping at many points. On the Nebraska special will come William Jennings Bryan and Rev. J. H. Salisbury, who has offered to marry on the train free of charge any couples coming as delegates to the convention.

Two Killed in Hibbing Mine.

Duluth.—Martin and George Slarcevich, aged twenty and eighteen years respectively, were killed by an explosion of gunpowder in the Hull open pit mine at Hibbing. They were engaged in blasting ahead of steam shovels to loosen the ore. The unfortunate men were two of six brothers employed in this mine.

BEFORE IT'S TOO LATE.



KILLS ILLINOIS PRIMARY LAW

SUPREME COURT DECLARES THE ACT IS INVALID.

Registration Feature Chief Cause for Adverse Decision by State's Highest Tribunal.

Springfield, Ill. — The new primary election law of Illinois is unconstitutional according to an opinion of the supreme court. The decision is made in the case of the People on the relation of Phillips against Sheriff Strassheim of Cook county, in which Phillips was indicted on the charge of making false affidavits at a primary election and obtains a writ of habeas corpus in the state's highest tribunal.

~~The Supreme court holds that the~~ primary law is unconstitutional because it requires in section 44 that no person except persons registered at the last previous election can vote at a primary election, yet makes no provision for the registration of voters, and because section 11 provides that the senatorial committees may by resolution decide how many candidates each party may nominate for the legislature and that only that number of candidates may be voted for thus depriving the voters of their constitutional right under the election law to vote for as many candidates as there are offices to be filled and to cumulate their votes. For these reasons the entire act is declared unconstitutional.

In the case of Peabody against Treasurer Thompson of Cook county, in which case the lower court sustained the demurrer to the petition of Peabody for a mandamus to restrain Thompson from paying the officers of the primary election, the Supreme court reverses the judgment of the Circuit court of Cook county and remands the case.

STRANGE CULT IN KANSAS.

Band of Fanatics Subject Themselves to Bites of Snakes as Religious Test.

Hitchinson, Kan.—Practicing rites, more weird than those of the most fanatical Moslem sects, and cruelty more revolting than the most savage of the religious tests of the early Indians, a cult has sprung up near Hutchinson that is being closely watched by the authorities.

The law is powerless to interfere until some member of the sect dies a victim to its barbaric practices. It has been found out that just as the ancient Indians plunged their arms into buckets of boiling pitch to ascertain whether they were immune to pain so it is claimed that Snake Worshipers subject themselves to the bites of poisonous reptiles as a supreme test of grace.

MEAT PROBE IS BEGUN.

Government Board Sifts Former Inspector's Charges Against East St. Louis Packing Houses.

East St. Louis.—Secretary of Agriculture Wilson's board of inquiry appointed to investigate the charges of J. F. Harms, a former inspector, that the government's inspection system in the packing houses here is faulty, held a closed session Thursday. Harms, after being denied an open investigation, withdrew from the room.

The board is composed of Dr. A. B. Melvin, chief of the bureau of animal industry; George P. McCabe, solicitor for the department of agriculture; Dr. E. A. Behnke, an assistant inspector of the bureau; Dr. R. P. Stedden, chief of the inspection division of the bureau, and George Ditwig, traveling inspector.

GIRL SLAIN BY CHINESE.

Granddaughter of Gen. Franz Sigel Probable Victim in New York Murder Mystery.

New York.—Elizabeth Sigel, daughter of Paul Sigel of this city and granddaughter of the illustrious Franz Sigel, the German warrior, who enlisted his services with the union army during the civil war, is, according to all indication the victim of one of the most sordid murders in the history of New York.

If she is not the victim, the police are confronted with a remarkable series of coincidental facts. Taken from a trunk in a room of a Chinaman above a chop suey restaurant in the Tenderloin, the body, in a state of decomposition, which makes identifica~~tion difficult, lies in the morgue while~~ detectives are collecting the threads of a tangled story involving the girl and her associations with Chinese. An envelope addressed to the girl found in the room where the body lay, a locket bearing her initials, her disappearance on June 10 and a note found in the room, signed "Elsie" all seem to indicate that Franz Sigel's granddaughter was murdered. The body was partially stripped of its clothing, tied with ropes, wrapped in a faded blue blanket and crammed into a dilapidated old trunk.

HOG TUBERCULOSIS GROWS.

Two Per Cent. of Those Slaughtered Have the Disease Say Government Reports.

Washington. — Tuberculosis among hogs is on the increase and is causing heavier loss to raisers and packers than any other disease, say reports gathered from the various meat packing centers of the country by the department of agriculture.

A year ago there were more than 56,000,000 hogs in this country, valued at more than $339,000,000. Federal inspection of the abattoirs show two per cent. of the hogs slaughtered to be affected with tuberculosis, while reports from Europe show a far more widespread infection, running as high as 5.5 to 7.5 per cent.

It has been found that hogs contract the disease principally through feeding. Samples of raw skimmed milk fed to hogs from creameries in one of the leading dairy states were injected into guinea pigs and in one instance virulent bacilli were recovered. Hogs from Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas are remarkably free from tuberculosis, due to the fact that they are fed from birth to maturity on alfalfa, oats, corn, rape and peanuts.

INSTITUTE OF HOMEOPATHY

National Organization Is Holding Its Sixty-Fifth Annual Meeting in Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—The sixty-fifth annual meeting of the American Institute of Homeopathy opened here Monday evening with a great general session that was full of interest. The big Y. M. C. A. auditorium was thronged with medical men from every state in the union when Dr. D. A. MacLachlan, chairman of the local committee of arrangements, rapped for order. Music and prayer were followed by addresses of welcome by Gov. Fred M. Warner, Mayor P. H. Breitmeyer and Dr. MacLachlan, to which response was made by Second Vice-President Joseph Hensley, M. D. Dr. William Davis Foster of Kansas City, the president, then delivered his annual address.

In the afternoon much preliminary work was disposed of and memorial exercises for deceased members were held.

HEAR GOULD VALET

MAN WHO WAS HER PRIVATE SERVANT TELLS OF DRINKING.

CALLS CHAUFFEUR "DEARIE"

Mistakes Auto Driver for Dustin Farnum and Then Apologizes—Witnesses Say the Actor Was Often with the Millionaire's Wife.

New York. — That Mrs. Howard Gould was often with Dustin New York, June 19.—That Mrs. Howard Gould was often with Dustin Farnum, an actor, despite her testimony to the contrary, was shown by witnesses for the defense in the suit for separation and $250,000 alimony of the millionaire's wife.

There was also iteration by servants and personal attendants that Mrs. Gould was repeatedly seen under the influence of liquor by them, and that when she had been drinking, as they alleged on the stand, she changed from a charming, affable woman to a woman of whims and caprices, ill-tempered, not nice in her choice of language, overbearing and quarrelsome.

Her "Valet" on Stand.

Mrs. Gould's one-time personal "valet," Harry J. Veitch of Des Moines, Ia., swore that at one time he served his mistress with two quarts of Manhattan cocktails in as many days, besides the wines and liquors which he said she drank at table. On cross-examining these witnesses, Clarence J. Shearn for Mrs. Gould, strove always to prove either that they had a personal grudge against her or that they were under obligation to Mr. Gould. Endearing epithets twice marked the testimony.

John H. Kimball, an oil and paint dealer, who said he had known Mr. Gould for 18 years, testified that he went to a performance of "The Virginian" in August, 1906, with Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Sells and the Goulds, at the Academy of Music in this city, and that Dustin Farnum, the star in ~~the play, joined the party outside the~~ playhouse after the performance and spoke to Mrs. Gould. She smiled, the witness testified, and said to the witness: "This is my new beau."

John Flynn, who said he was employed by Mrs. Gould as a chauffeur, and that he often drove her to meet Farnum after the play, testified that once when Mrs. Gould was waiting in the automobile for Farnum at the Hotel Somerset, two men turned to the actor as he came out at the hotel door and asked him whose automobile was waiting.

"Oh," said Farnum, laughing, Flynn testified, "that is my new one."

Called Chauffeur "Dearie."

Another time, Flynn swore, when he rapped on Mrs. Gould's chamber door at the St. Regis, she called out: "All right, dearie," and then, when she saw who it was, excused herself with: "I thought it was Mr. Farnum."

Mary Elizabeth Harrison, a fresh cheeked, good looking girl, who said she was a floor clerk in the Bellevue-Stratford hotel in Philadelphia, prefaced her testimony with the explanation that it was her first appearance in court. She had been impelled by her conscience, she said, to tell what she saw at the hotel. Finally she wrote a letter to Mr. Gould.

"I said in the letter," she testified, "'In obedience to the Golden Rule, I write to you to help you if you are in trouble,' or something like that."

Mrs. Gould occupied apartments on the floor where she was stationed in September, 1906, the witness went on, and one morning about 7:30 o'clock she said, she saw a man come out of Mrs. Gould's rooms and take the elevator. She noticed that he was the only passenger in the car, and that the dial registered fourteenth floor when the car stopped. She described the man as tall, with dark, bushy hair and wearing a soft hat and a long coat.

The defense contends that Dustin Farnum was staying on the fourteenth floor of the hotel at that time.

Big Turnfest at Cincinnati.

Cincinnati.—Some 5,000 Turners from all parts of the country went into camp here Saturday for the annual turnfest of their national organization, which will last ten days. The Turners must live and sleep in tents while here and the people of Cincinnati have erected a large tent city that accords with the rules and regulations of the United States army. It includes 50 shower baths and ample kitchen accommodations.

Faft Favors Trust Tax.

Washington.—If the recommendations embodied in a message sent to congress Wednesday by President Taft are carried out a tax of two per cent. on the undistributed net earnings of trusts and other corporations will be provided for in an amendment to the tariff bill and the income tax question will be left to the states for settlement. It is believed the senate will adopt the president's plan.

WERE BOTH OF MIXED BLOOD

Points of Resemblance Between Englishman and Cowboy, as the Latter Understood It.

"The countess de Pourtales was a New York Lorillard," said a New York tobacconist. "So on both sides, of course, she has blue blood. Yet she is without false pride.

"At a recent tobacco men's convention a director told me of a remark the countess made in Biarritz to an arrogant Englishman.

"This fellow boasted of his ancestry. The countess said that sort of talk wouldn't be understood in the wild west. She said an Englishman said to a Texas cowboy once:

"'I have Tudor blood in my veins on the maternal side and through my father's family I am a Plantaganet.'

"'Is that so?' said the cowboy, brightening with keen interest. 'My blood's a leetle mixed, too. My grandfather was a Jersey tenderfoot and my grandmother a Digger Indian squaw. We're both half-breeds, stranger. Come and liquor up!'"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

SORE EYES CURED.

Eye-Balls and Lids Became Terribly Inflamed—Was Unable to Go About —All Other Treatments Failed, But Cuticura Proved Successful.

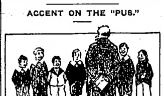
"About two years ago my eyes got in such a condition that I was unable to go about. They were terribly inflamed, both the balls and lids. I tried home remedies without relief. Then I decided to go to our family physician, but he didn't help them. Then I tried two more of our most prominent physicians, but my eyes grew continually worse. At this time a friend of mine advised me to try Cuticura Ointment, and after using it about one week my eyes were considerably improved, and in two weeks they were almost well. They have never given me any trouble since and I am now sixty-five years old. I shall always praise Cuticura. G. B. Halsey, Mouth of Wilson, Va., Apr. 4, 1908." Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston.

ACCENT ON THE "PUS."



Teacher—Now, Jimmy Green, can you tell me what an octopus is?

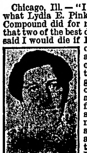
Jimmy Green—Yes, sir; it's an eight-sided cat.

I have always thought that to make, to bring order and meaning and use out of nothing, must be the most delightful sensation in the world.—Oliphant.

THIRD OPERATION PREVENTED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Chicago, Ill. — "I want to tell you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. I was so sick that two of the best doctors in Chicago said I would die if I did not have an operation. I had already had two operations, and they wanted me to go through a third one. I suffered day and night from inflammation and a small tumor, and never thought of seeing a well day again. A friend told me how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had helped her, and I tried it, and after the third bottle was cured."—Mrs. ALVENA SPERLING, 11 Langdon Street, Chicago, Ill.



If you are ill do not drag along at home or in your place of employment until an operation is necessary, but build up the feminine system, and remove the cause of those distressing aches and pains by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs.

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

The movement of organizing farmers' clubs is one of the best movements that has been started since the days of the alliance among the farmers.

The injunction, brought by Thief River Falls to prevent the County Commissioners from bonding the county, was set aside by Judge Watts. This was only an endorsement of the Supreme Court decision in the Koochiching County case. The longer the law suit is continued on this question the more money, the lawyers will get out of it.

The recent order in regard to asking payments on these lands has stirred up a good deal of sentiment among the actual settlers to have an investigation made by the government to try to settle the vacant lands on the eleven townships. The actual residents and farmers who are living on and cultivating their lands, are going to take interest in trying to get the speculators closed out and their valuable lands settled by actual residents and farmers. It is not pleasant for a man that is living here, when asked by a stranger traveling through the country where his neighbor who owns the land ajoining him is, to have to answer. He lives in some other part of the state or Dakota. Petitions will soon be gotten up and circulated among the actual resident and farmers asking Congressman Steenerson to have a full investigation made by the Department of the Interior and have the vacant lands on this reservation opened for settlement by actual residents.

THEY TEAR DOWN.

We regret to state that there are a few men in this part of the Eleven Towns who are a positive detriment to the upbuilding of a new country. No matter what the occasion is or for what purpose there is a public gathering you will observe these men around peddling Socialist literature and talking about how old John D. robbed the people, and how the common people are being oppressed by the Plutocrats.

The trouble is that there is occasionally a well to do farmer who will listen to them; sell off his stock, move into town and prepare to live a life of ease and luxury. In a few months his money is gone and he is stranded with a family to support by common labor, and then he does not think of the Socialist party, but of the home and stock he has lost and will never be able to regain.

The Socialist party, as a party, may be all right, but it will soon begin to loose ground and sink into oblivion, if they continue to preach the "Gospel of Discontent" among the farmers and middle classes. We have noticed that every farmer who has listened to them enough, to sell out his stock and move to town has there degenerated from a man of independence to a hireling and in some cases to a pauper We write this from our own observation of what the Socialist movement has done in this part of the country. Had no Socialist speakers come here to preach discontent and anarchy, there would be a larger number of farmers living in comfortable circumstances here, who are now living in town in rented houses and working out by the day as common laborers.

We paid a visit to the Kratka Creamery on last Sunday, and was pleased to note that it is in a prosperous condition. Butter Maker Henry Swenson is entitled to much credit for the neatness and clean appearance of the creamery, which will unboudtly prosper under such good mannagement.

The farmers up here who are patrons of the newer built creameries should not get discouraged because they fear that some of the creameries in the older parts of the county are paying a little more for cream they are getting. Remember that those older creameries had to start the way yours are now starting, and in the future you will reap the benefit. Stay by your home creamery!

Making Mistakes.

Princeton Union: Many of the exchanges received at this office contain one or more notices of farmers' auction sales which means that farmers are selling off their live stock, household furniture and farming implements preparatory to moving elsewhere. It is a bad sign. It indicates that numerous farmers are dissatisfied with their lot in Minnesota. A farmer who is comfortably fixed in this state mistakes in thinking he can better his condition elsewhere. Of course there are instances where a change of climate may prove beneficial to health but on the whole there is no more healthful climate anywhere than here in Minneiota.

"First Minnesoa"

Guests of Honor.

An unusual and impressive feature of the first prentation of the big spectacular production, "Minnesota at Gettysburg," at the Minnesota State Fair on the evening of September 6th, will be the presence in the grand stand of many of the surviving members of the First Minnesota who actively took part in that portion of the battle of Gettysburg which is to be reproduced on the fair grounds each evening of the coming fair

Thereare comparatively few of the original 262 men who made the gallant charge which changed the tide of the battle on July 2nd, 1862, who are now among the living and who are residents in the Northwest. Of the 262 who made that desperate charge all but forty-seven men who started from the wheat field down the hill to the Confederate line, were killed or wounded and while many were wounded recovered, death has harvested in the ranks since Lee made his march on Washington.

Harold Chose the Easier Way.

Maynard had been naughty, and his father, after showing him his fault, had sent him up to his room to ask God to forgive him for being a bad boy. Three-year-old Harold was present, but seemed to take no notice of the conversation. It was his turn, however, before many days to receive punishment, and his father took him across his knee. "Oh, don't, papa," he said. "I would rather go upstairs and pray."—Delineator.

The Farmers Picnic.

The Farmers' Club Picnic held at Kratka on Sunday was well attended by the farmers and their families A very pleasent and sociable time was enjoyed by all. E. L. Quist and C. L. Hansen drove out from Thief River Falls to attenb the meeting. Mr. Quist gave a very interesting talk to the farmers, which was one of the most practical speeches that we have had the pleasure of listening to for some time He did not attempt to tell the farmers just how much richer Jim Hill was than they were, but explained to them how much better they were situated than a large number of other people in America, as owners of their homes and the makers and upbuilders of a rich and prosperous country. The Club will hold another picnic a the Grove of James O'Brien on Sunday, July 25th.

WOMEN SUFFER NEEDLESSLY

Many Mysterious Aches and Pains Are Easily Cured.

Backache, pain through the hips, dizzy spells, headaches, nervousness, bloating, etc., are troubles that commonly come from sick kidneys. Don't mistake the cause—Doan's Kidney Pills have cured thousands of women afflicted in this way—by curing the kidneys. Mrs. C. R. Foresman, 113 S. Eighth St., Canon City, Colo., says: "Three years I suffered with rheumatism, dropsy and kidney complaint, and became utterly helpless. I found relief after using two or three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills and kept on until cured. Doan's Kidney Pills have been a blessing to me."

Sold by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

KNOWN THE WORLD OVER

THE WONDERFUL CAREER OF PITCHER CHRISTY MATHEWSON

Pitcher Christy Mathewson has had an interesting career. Some years ago Cincinnati reached out languidly, gathered him in, delayed a try-out and finally traded him to New York for a second-hand belt, or something of that sort. The rangey novice was sent into two games in the fall of 1900 and came out plastered with defeat each time. He managed to hold over, however, and in the spring of 1901 handed the annual opener to Yale by a slump in the ninth inning. Then the curtain rose on the regular league season and, without warning, a great transformation scene was sprung upon the public. The crude proposition heeled the slab and walloped the big clubs, one after the other. The heaviest sluggers were like infants in his hands. He had the speed of a Rusie, the control of a Young, the endurance of a Nichols and curves that were beyond any other pitcher. His decisive victories, his perfect style and the romance of his career fastened the attention of the entire sporting world on New York's representative in the old National league.

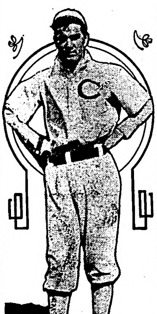
That ancient body was facing, perhaps, what threatened to be the gloomiest season in its history, but the exploits of the handsome college boy lightened the sky for the time being and put an end to all worry concerning the loyalty of the "fans" of the metroplis.

It will be recalled that New York finished in seventh place in 1901, after a grand start. The following season was still more dismal, the luckless Giants bringing up in the extreme rear without a struggle. Mathewson held up his end, but internal affairs were so rotten that real endeavor found no reward. With things at their worst McGraw and Brush came to the rescue. The air was disinfected; the dead wood replaced with sound timber. In 1903 the New Yorks jumped seven notches into second place and Mathewson began his climb to the highest pinnacle of pitching fame. He had, to begin with, that serenity of temperament which is so often cater-cousin to the trained mind.

It occurred to him early that he was not making the most of his immense resources. He gave an ear to the astute McGraw and the wily McGinnity. He learned one thing and invented something else. The value of restraint, as our actor friends would say, was duly recognized and his repertoire was enriched to that extent. During the campaign of 1904 McGinnity was the nominal leader, but none knew better than the "Iron Man" himself that a far greater force than he was gradually and surely lifting the New York club to the proudest station in the domain of professional sport. So much has been written about the world's series of 1905 that further reference simply amounts to a waste of ink. Every one concedes, therefore, that Mathewson, in that desperate clash, hung up a mark for the pitchers of the future to shy at. Indeed, so unique was his triumph that the grizzled spokesman of the opposition was stirred into uncorking the most flattering and comprehensive tribute ever paid by a writer to a player. Strange to say, the two seasons that followed revealed the tremendous scene of Mathewson's powers. It was a term of convalescence for him. Thin, drawn, fleshless, he was covering the tedious route that leads from anti-toxin to normal health. And yet, so profound was his knowledge of the science of pitching, so accurate his enfeebled arm that he managed to lead the Giants' twirling staff, as usual, and stand well up in the general list, each year.

Last year found Mathewson once more sound and ready. It was one of the best years of his amazing career; in fact, it was the very best, allowing that he was not backed by a standard team. Credit him with that fairly-earned win over the great Cubs, later declared a tie, and he again topped the pitchers of America. He averaged less than a single base on balls per game. His total of strikeouts far excelled that of any other pitcher in either league. And it may be added that some of his most brilliant performances are recorded in the lost column, chiefly because the long arm of fate guided a number of his oponents' puny splashes into safe territory at critical moments.

WHITE SOX SOUTHPAW.



"Doc" White has been the left-handed standby of the White Sox for several years. He is considered one of the best pitchers in the league and his work so far this season has been excellent.

DIAMOND GOSSIP

Wheeling has released Abe Lezotte and suspended Dick Nebinger.

Boston is planning a field day for major and minor league ball players.

Kansas City has released Hugo Mill, at one time a Cleveland player, to Mobile.

Ray Demmitt is doing some hitting for the Highlanders since he took Keeler's place in right field.

President John I. Taylor has closed terms with Pitcher Ray W. Collins, a University of Vermont pitcher, and he will join the Boston team soon.

Kid Gleason has succeeded Eugene McCann as manager of the Jersey City club of the Eastern league. Gleason was with Jersey City for a short time in 1907.

The archaic Jake Beckley is batting .390 in the American association and is a better first baseman now than some to be found in the big leagues.

Hicks of Harvard is hiding his light under a bushel on a college nine. Two no-hit games in one season is likely to make him a target for the eyes of professional managers.

Aside from their batting ability, Wagner and Cobb surpass all their rivals in stolen bases. Wagner has 16 to his credit in 40 games, while Cobb has purloined 24 in 29 battles.

Pitcher Chappelle, who was purchased from the Boston Nationals ten days ago by the Reds, was sold to the Rochester Eastern leaguers. Chappelle is the man Joe Kelley had such trouble in landing while he was in the Southern league last year.

WHY HE LIKED TIGHT SHOES

Little Remark That Threw Great Light on the Home Conditions of Amos Dore.

"We always wondered a little how Amos Dore and his wife got along—really," "Aunt Em" Macomber said, frankly. "Some in the neighborhood said they'd never overheard a single loud or cross word on either side, but Lije Daniels always stuck to it that Amos was as mis'able at home as a man could be.

"He never spoke right out till Amos died and Mis' Dore went back up-country to her folks. Then he let out."

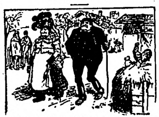
"What?" queried Aunt Em's visitor.

"Well, Amos worked logging alongside of Lije every winter, and summers they hayed together most always, and it seems," said Aunt Em, impressively, "that Amos complained of his shoes hurting him about all the time. Finally Lije asked why he wore tight shoes.

"'Why don't you get a pair big enough?' says Lije, one day.

"'Well, I'll tell you,' Amos says. 'When I wear tight shoes I forget all my other troubles.'"—Youth's Companion.

A PROUD PAIR.



"What makes that peasant so proud to-day?"

"Oh, he has the biggest rooster in town—and his wife the biggest hat." —Fliegende Blaetter.

Tuberculosis Afflicts Japanese.

Consumption among Japanese laborers is increasing to such a degree that the figures are becoming a source of anxiety to Japanese merchants and officials. A large percentage of laborers who are sent back to Japan by the Japanese charity associations are consumptives. It is claimed by the Japanese newspapers comenting on this matter that through the lack of hospital accommodations in the Japanese labor camps tuberculosis increases at an alarming rate. They suggest that a new system be employed in dealing with the sick in these camps, as the Japanese are quite ignorant of even the most simple health safeguards.

Not Lacking in Dignity.

There was once upon a time a country lawyer who was noted for his sedate manners and his judicial bearing. In the course of time he was elevated to the bench, where he conducted himself and the court with becoming demeanor, and where he won a reputation for sagacity based nearly altogether upon his solemn accents and his corrugated brow.

One who knew him well was asked by a stranger who saw the judge pass upon the street whether he was really an efficient arbiter.

"Well," said the acquaintance slowly, "I think I may say that John presides with more dignity and less ability than anyone else I ever knew."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Flies.

God bless the man who first invented screens, and God pity the man who is too indolent or indifferent to place them between his family and the spreaders of deadly disease. There is absolutely no excuse for the man or woman whose place of habitation swarms with flies and whines with the voices of mosquitoes. They can be kept out, and 25 cents spent in keeping them out is equivalent to keeping out a doctor who would cost $25, or possibly to keeping out a much less welcome visitor.

WON'T MIX

Bad Food and Good Health Won't Mix.

The human stomach stands much abuse but it won't return good health if you give it bad food.

If you feed right you will feel right, for proper food and a good mind is the sure road to health.

"A year ago I became much alarmed about my health for I began to suffer after each meal no matter how little I ate," says a Denver woman.

"I lost my appetite and the very thought of food grew distasteful, with the result that I was not nourished and got weak and thin.

"My home cares were very heavy, for besides a large family of my own I have also to look out for my aged mother. There was no one to shoulder my household burdens, and come what might, I must bear them, and this thought nearly drove me frantic when I realized that my health was breaking down.

"I read an article in the paper about some one with trouble just like mine being cured on Grape-Nuts food and acting on this suggestion I gave Grape-Nuts a trial. The first dish of this delicious food proved that I had struck the right thing.

"My uncomfortable feelings in stomach and brain disappeared as if by magic and in an incredibly short space of time I was myself again. Since then I have gained 12 pounds in weight through a summer of hard work and realize I am a very different woman, all due to the splendid food, Grape-Nuts."

"There's a Reason." Trial will prove. Read the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

THE SUNBEAM.

VOL. IX. SUNBEAM, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, JULY 2, 1909. NO. 14.

POLICIES MUST NOW BE ALL ALIKE

LAW RELATING TO ACCIDENT INSURANCE POLICIES BECOMES EFFECTIVE JULY 1.

WILL PREVENT MANY ABUSES

Commissioner of Insurance Hartigan Busy Examining New Blanks for Standard Form of Policy.

St. Paul.—Insurance Commissioner Hartigan has been busy for several days with forms of policies to be used when the new accident insurance law goes into effect, July 1. The new law is intended to provide for standard forms of accident policies, and to stop the abuses which some companies have been guilty of.

Rules Are Stricter.

The new law requires the companies to allow twenty days for filing notice of accident, and if conditions make it impossible to give notice in that time, more time must be allowed.

The acceptance of a premium reinstates the policy under the new law. Formerly some companies would collect premiums late, and when an accident happened they would refuse to pay, claiming the policy had lapsed. Others, again, paid no sick benefits within thirty days after a premium past due was paid and accepted.

The new law prevents the deduction of advance premiums from the benefits, as some companies have been doing, and it provides for the payment of benefits for disability when there has been a change of occupation. Sometimes if the insured went into a more hazardous occupation, and was injured, he received nothing, but now the benefits will be as large as the premium would buy in the new occupation, if it is more hazardous than the old.

Riders Must Be Uniform.

Commissioner Hartigan has recently sent out the forms for the riders, which may be used on fire insurance policies. The law relating to riders on fire insurance policies was amended by the last legislature and the department will insist upon uniform blanks being used by the companies. Heretofore each company has formulated its own riders, the law prescribing only general restrictions, and it is said that a few companies have been attaching riders that were not in conformity with the law.

UP TO THE SUPREME COURT.

Suit to Test Validity of Prison Certificates Reaches Highest Tribunal.

St. Paul.—The question of the validity of state prison certificates, authorized by the last legislature to the extent of $2,250,000, is now in the hands of the state supreme court. A friendly suit to establish the validity of this issue was brought at the instance of the Capitol National Bank of St. Paul, which purchased the first instalment of $560,000. It was decided in favor of the state board of control, defendant, by Judge O. B. Lewis. The appeal was argued by M. V. Seymour, of St. Paul, for the plaintiff, Wilson C. Brown for the state by Lyndon A. Smith, assistant attorney general.

Mr. Seymour urged the constitutional prohibition against a public debt, and said that if this issue was approved it meant no limit to the indebtedness of the state in the future. The state claims that the point has been settled by the decision in the state capitol case, and that it is not technically a debt, since a tax is levied to pay off the issue within a few years' time.

STATE FARM AT CLOQUET.

Board of Regents Accept Site Offered by Government.

Cloquet.—The state board of regents visited the proposed sale for a state experimental and reforestry station here, and accepted it. The tract lies two miles southeast of this city, and contains 2,700 acres, heavily timbered in parts by white and Norway pine. The lumber was secured by special act of congress since the land is a part of the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, and made an offer of it to the state on condition that the legislature appropriate a sum sufficient for the maintenance of the station, which was done.

Moose Are Plentiful.

Moose are plentiful in the new Superior game preserve, according to a report received by Game Warden Carlos Avery from Deputy James Beatty, who says that in five days spent in the preserve he counted fifty-seven moose. This preserve, which was lately established, is located between Lake Vermillion and Hunters' Island.

Zumbrota.—Mrs. I. C. Stearns, aged 73, who was a resident of this village for the past 45 years, is dead.

BELTRAMI INQUIRY ON.

Governor Johnson Names Brainerd Man to Take Testimony.

St. Paul.—M. E. Ryan, of Brainerd, has been appointed by Governor John A. Johnson as commissioner to take evidence in the proceedings for removal of four Beltrami county officials. Mr. Ryan is a democratic attorney. He will begin hearing testimony at Bemidji, July 7. J. J. Cameron, of Bemidji, will be official stenographer. M. F. Kain, deputy public examiner, author of the official report on which the charges were based, will be present as the principal witness. Lyndon A. Smith, assistant attorney general, will attend the hearings as legal adviser.

The proceedings are against the county auditor, John Wilmann, and three county commissioners, Wes Wright, F. O. Sibley and A. W. Danaher. They will all be represented by attorneys.

It is understood that the case made by the Kain report as to Commissioners Sibley and Danaher is weak, as it rests upon the allowance of illegal claims by the county board. There is no record of the votes on these claims, and unless more evidence is brought out there will be difficulty in securing their removal. Many illegal acts are charged against the auditor, but the main accusation is incompetence. Wright is charged with being interested in a contract which he helped to let.

The Beltrami county bonds are still waiting acceptance by the Security Trust Company, of St. Paul. The state investment board has decided that it cannot invest the state school fund in Beltrami county at this time, for the reason that other counties, cities and school districts have applications already pending, amounting to about $500,000, and waiting till the funds are available to be loaned.

JUDGE WILLISTON IS DEAD.

Suddenly Stricken While Addressing Settlers at Goodhue.

Judge W. C. Williston, of Red Wing, died suddenly while addressing a meeting of the Old Settlers' Association at Goodhue.

About fifty people from Red Wing went to Goodhue to attend an Old Settlers' Association annual meeting Judge Williston was among the number in the hall. They had gathered after dinner to tell of the early days when many of those present helped to lay the foundations of Goodhue county's present greatness.

Among those called upon was Judge Williston. He had risen from his chair to respond, and had spoken several sentences when he hesitated, faltered and sank to the floor. Those about his quickly carried him to one of the side rooms of the hall, where shortly afterwards he died.

News of Judge Williston's death was received with a deep sense of personal loss by Red Wing as a community. For over half a century Mr. Williston has been one of the most conspicuous figures in that city. Eminent as a jurist, active in the social and religious life of the city and state, his sphere of usefulness and influence was great. While for several years past it has been recognized that he had grown feeble and that the end of his career was drawing near, yet his sudden death came as a blow. Mr. Williston, one of the most eminent of Minnesota's jurists, had been one of the bench of the district court of the First judicial district since 1891.

WHITE PLAGUE HITS TEACHERS

Show Greater Percentage of Deaths From Tuberculosis Than any Other Calling.

School teachers show as large a proportion of deaths from tuberculosis as any other profession in the state, according to statistics just compiled by Christopher Easton, tuberculosis expert of the state board of health.

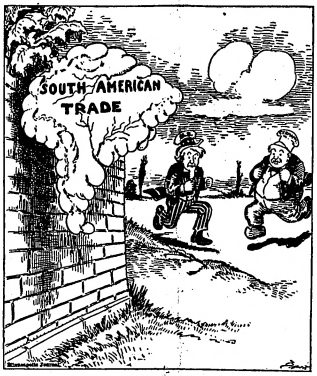
The average number of deaths from tuberculosis for each 100,000 people in the state last year was 95, but the rate among school teachers was as high as 147.

Lack of ventilation in the school rooms is given as one cause. In many of the rural schools there is no scientific ventilation and in some of the city schools, where there is ventilating apparatus, these are put out of business a large part of the year for the sake of saving coal, Mr. Easton says. The large number of persons in the school room for so many hours at a time makes the air unusually bad. In addition to this the nerve-racking work has a tendency to weaken the systems of the instructors and make them subject to the disease.

The same rate, 147 per 100,000, is given for skilled laborers, but this includes several occupations, such as stone cutting, plastering and the like, in which the amount of dust injures the lungs so as to help in bringing on the disease.

Liquor dealers and bartenders come next with 126, farmers and laborers next with 125, persons in mercantile and clerical employments with 110 and railway employes with 105.

CAN WE "BEAT THE DUTCH?"



MRS. GOULD WINS HER SUIT

GETS SEPARATION AND $36,000 A YEAR.

Woman Is Happy Over Court Vindication—Says She Cares Little for Money.

New York. — Justice Dowling in the supreme court decided that the charges of intoxication and improper conduct against Mrs. Howard Gould had not been proved and granted the legal separation for which she sued the multi-millionaire son of Jay Gould.

With the exception of alimony, her victory was complete, but in this phase of the case the court decided that $36,000 a year was sufficient, although in her suit Mrs. Gould asked for $250,000. She has been receiving $25,000 a year from Mr. Gould, so that the amount fixed by the court is but a slight increase compared with the amount sued for. If Mrs. Gould returns to the stage the amount may be reduced.

Immediately after the decision, De Lancey Nicoll, for Mr. Gould, asked for a 60-day stay of judgment and Clarence J. Shearn, for the plaintiff, asked for an immediate judgment. Justice Dowling compromised by making the stay 30 days.

Howard Gould hurried from the room as soon as the decision was given and declined to discuss the case. Mrs. Gould left the court with Mr. Shearn and drove away in an automobile.

Mr. Shearn, jubilant at the decision, was eager to discuss it.

"Judge Dowling's decision," he said, "is a sweeping and complete vindication of Mrs. Gould. That has been the object of all this bitter litigation. Mrs. Gould could have compromised for a fortune at any time but would never consider for a moment anything but the opportunity of clearing her name in an open, public trial."

Mrs. Gould issued the following statement:

"I am the happiest woman living because I have been so completely vindicated before the entire world of all these horrible charges. Not one little pang shot through my heart at the smallness of the allowance—only supreme joy and the deepest gratitude. I send a thousand loving thanks to all who have helped me."

NINE TOURISTS DROWNED.

Five Americans and Four English Perish in Killarney Lake—Two Boatmen Lose Lives.

Killarney, Ireland. — A large rowboat carrying five American and four English tourists and four Irish boatmen, was swamped in a gale while crossing Lower Killarney lake Wednesday afternoon. All of the tourists and two of the boatmen were drowned.

The victims were: Mrs. A. A. Hilton and son of Tacoma, Wash.; Mr. and Mrs. Loughead of Boston, Miss M. H. Catum of Massachusetts, (town not known); Rev. B. Barton and sister of London and Miss Florence Wilkinson and cousin of Brentwood, Essex; Boatmen Con Tooney and Con Gleeson.

EXPLOSION KILLS SEVENTEEN

Sixteen Others Are Badly Injured in Pennsylvania Mine Crash—Shaft Non-Gaseous.

Wehrum, Pa.—Further search for bodies was made Thursday in mine No. 4 of the Lackawanna Coal & Coke Company where 17 men were killed and 16 injured Wednesday by the explosion of gas. It was believed that all the bodies had been taken out and that first reports of 65 being entombed were exaggerated. Only one American was killed.

Inspector Joseph Williams of Altoona with a party entered the mine shortly after eight o'clock at night to ascertain whether anyone was yet entombed.

All but two rooms of the mine were thoroughly searched and it was announced that it was thought no more bodies were in the mine. Coroner Hammers has not yet set the date of an investigation of the explosion.

Superintendent A. M. Johnson said that while the mine has always been regarded as non-gaseous, the explosion was due to the ignition of a pocket of gas by the open lamp of a miner.

The mine has only been operating two days each week, Tuesday and Friday. Those in the mine had entered the shaft for their daily allowance of coal for family use.

Grouped about the slope entrance of the mine just below the explosion were several Italians. When the terrific subterranean upheaval of rock and deadly gas spouted skyward these Italians were caught. Terribly burned and maimed, they rushed about the settlement crying for aid. The cries and sound of hissing mine gas at the entrance of the mine brought the entire town to the scene.

Superintendent W. N. Johnson, backed by the office force of the company, stood at the mine entrance and held back the frantic women whose relatives were entombed.

NEGROES FIRE A TOWN.

Feud Caused by Election of Gov. Hughes Blamed for Goshen (N. Y.) Blaze.

New York.—A fire of incendiary origin, believed to have been started by negroes as the result of a race feud growing out of the election of Gov. Hughes last fall, nearly destroyed the town of Goshen, the summer home of E. H. Harriman, Thursday.

Arthur Coates, president of the Coates Automobile Company, rode through the town in his touring car and with a megaphone gave the alarm to every household. The Presbyterian church, the Sayer Lumber Company yard, and an eight-story tenement house and several private dwellings were destroyed and the Millar Cart Company and Coates Automobile Company were partly burned. The loss is more than $100,000.

HORSE HAULS DEAD MASTER.

Faithful Animal Takes Body of Man Who Was Struck by Lightning Into Town.

Des Moines, Ia.—During a violent thunderstorm at Perry Thursday night Fred K. Mell, former chief of the fire department and wealthy resident, was struck and killed by lightning as he was riding to his home in a buggy.

His faithful horse carried the body to the post office, where Postmaster F. M. Hoey found it. Lightning also struck the Christian church, demolishing the tower.

SENATE HAS TAX IDEA

TWO PER CENT. ASSESSMENT FOR EVERY CORPORATION PROVIDED IN TAFT PLAN.

CONCERNS GET EXEMPTION

Will Be Benefited by $5,000 Provision Which Is to Be In Force Until Act Becomes Effective—President Is Author.

Washington. — President Taft's much heralded corporation tax plan was presented to the senate by Senator Aldrich, chairman of the finance committee and was ordered printed as a committee amendment to the tariff bill.

Briefly stated, the plan imposes a tax of two per cent. upon the net earnings of every corporation, joint stock company or association, organized for profit and having a capital stock represented by shares, and every insurance company, organizer under the laws of the United States or of any state, territory, or district, or organized under the laws of any foreign country and engaged in business within the United States.

Every latitude is given to concerns subject to the tax for the exemption of expenses, cost of maintenance, the depreciation of property, debts and the interest thereon, other forms of taxation and all expenditures usually taken from earnings' accounts. Every corporation is also given an exemption of $5,000 of earnings before the tax shall apply.

Commissioner to Collect.

All of the machinery relating to the collection, remission and refund of internal revenue taxes is made applicable to the corporation tax and the responsibility for the enforcement of the proposed law rests with the commissioner of internal revenue in the same manner as other internal taxes.

While the corporations are required to supply information of a most intimate character relating to their business, provision is made to safeguard them against wrongful use of data obtained for the purpose of assessing the tax. Penalties are provided in cases of false or fraudulent returns.

Practically every character of incorporated institution organized for profit is brought within the provisions of the corporation tax.

Defines Taxable Concerns.

The provision defining the concerns from which the tax will be collected is as folows:

"That every corporation, joint stock company or association, organized for profit and having a capital stock represented by shares, and every insurance company, now or hereafter organized under the laws of the United States or of any state or territory of the United States, or under the acts of congress applicable to Alaska or the District of Columbia, or organized under the laws of any foreign country and engaged in business in any state or territory of the United States or in Alaska or in the District of Columbia, shall be subject to pay anually a special excise tax with respect to the carrying on or doing business by such corporation, joint stock company or association, or insurance company, equivalent to two percentum upon the entire net income, over and above $5,000, received by it from all sources during such year.

"This is exclusive of amounts received by it as dividends upon stock of other corporations, joint stock companies or associations, or insurance companies subject to the tax hereby imposed, or if organized under the laws of any foreign country, upon the amount of net income, over and above $5,000, received by it from business transacted and capital invested within the United States and its territories, Alaska and the District of Columbia, during such year, exclusive, of amounts so received by it as dividends upon stock of other corporations, joint stock companies or associations or insurance companies, subject to the tax hereby imposed.

"Such net income shall be ascertained by deducting from the gross amount of the income of such corporation, joint stock company or association, or insurance company from all sources."

EARTHQUAKE SHAKES WEST.

District, Supposedly Out of Zone of Seismic Disturbances, Feels Terrific Tremor of Ground.

Grass Valley, Cal. — An earthquake, the most severe shock experienced here in several years, occurred in this vicinity. A second and lighter shock came at 11:49 p. m.

Reports from Marysville, Nevada City, Chico and Colfax say that those towns were also shaken.

Reno, N. M. — An earthquake shock was felt here. While it was one of the heaviest experienced here, no damage was done. This section of the country has heretofore been considered as being out of the earthquake zone.

WOODILL SLAYER A SUICIDE

BROKER EASTMAN TAKES OWN LIFE AFTER CRIME.

Woman's Career Shrouded in Mystery—Was Attractive and Posed as Lyman Gage's Ward.

St. Michaels, Md.—Famished for food and water, surrounded by armed and determined men and his last chance to escape gone, the man who killed the beautiful May Edith Thompson Woodill fired a bullet into his own heart, thus ending the final chapter of a crime that is unparalleled in the history of this section of the country. The finale of the tragic story was written in the early summer's dawn, as the murderer, at bay, stood in the skiff in which he had made a desperate but futile effort to escape and took his life to escape a sure penalty of death for the slaying of a young woman rarely excelled for beauty.

Taking his fate into his own hands and blotting out untold the story of the death of a girl who had moved in the highest social circles of Baltimore, Washington and Los Angeles—a beautiful, talented girl who had been a protege of Lyman J. Gage, and of former Gov. Frank Brown of this state—the man known here as Emmet E. Roberts, but who in reality was Robert Emmet Eastman, a failed broker of the Consolidated Stock exchange of New York, passed beyond the reach of the law, and with his going there vanished the hope of clearing up the motive and the baffling details of this strange tragedy.

Hemmed in on all sides, Eastman tried to steal out through one of the many branches of the creek but the slight noise of his oars was detected, and the eagle-eyed watchers saw the dark form of his boat over the water. There was a sharp command to halt, which was unheeded; then another command. Then Eastman fired, whether at the posse or at himself is unknown.

A letter found upon Eastman's body, addressed to his wife, an actress, known as Vinnie Bradcome, in New York, gave Eastman's ill-sustained excuse for the crime. It was a rambling account of how he had been out in a launch with a party of men and women, all of whom had been drinking to excess with the exception of himself and Mrs. Woodill; of how one of the women in a fit of jealous frenzy had attacked Mrs. Woodill with a wine bottle and killed her, leaving him to dispose of the body.

Mrs. Woodill, the wife of Gilbert Woodill, an automobile dealer in Los Angeles, though twice married, was but a slip of a girl, vivacious, petite and immensely fond of pretty clothes, always immaculately dressed and weighed only about 100 pounds. Where the girl sprang from and who her father was, are clothed with much of the same deep mystery which surround the details of her death. She was adopted by Col. Charles H. Thompson, a well-to-do farmer of the eastern shore of Maryland, 19 years ago, when she was a tot of three. The baby was in the custody of a Minneapolis street car conductor and his wife, who said they knew nothing of her parents.

BARE FRENCH NAVY SCANDAL.

Fleet Costing $700,000,000 Would Be Without Coal in Six Hours, Says Report.

Paris. — The report of the parliamentary commission which investigated the naval scandals in France has been turned in. It is a scathing condemnation of the naval administration for the last ten years, and it makes an astounding exposure of the deplorable condition of the fleet for which France has spent $700,000,000 since 1899.

The 350 pages of the report are filled with details of the inefficiency resulting from confusion and red tape, conditions that make French naval construction cost 25 per cent. more than English or German.

Perhaps the gravest feature of the exposure is the lack of reserve coal and ammunition supplies at the various ports and arsenals. One officer testified before the commission that at the end of a naval battle of six hours the ships would find it impossible to replenish and would be virtually out of commission.

ILLINOISAN LONDON BRIDE.

Miss Edith Dodds, Daughter of Pharmacy Board Secretary, Now Mrs. R. L. McClure.

London.—Robert L. S. McClure, son of S. S. McClure, the magazine publisher, was married Friday at St. George's, Hanover square, by special license, to Miss Edith Dodds of Springfield, Ill., daughter of the secretary of the state board of pharmacy.

The bride and bridegroom were classmates at Knox college in Galesburg, Ill., graduating in 1908, since when Mr. McClure has been attending Berlin university whither he will return after their honeymoon trip to the continent and home, to resume his study.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 29, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam' Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

Commence to get ready for the fairs, that is to decide and prepare the exhibits you intend to take to the County Fair. When you have selected what you want to take, if grain or vegetable, fertilize the land and cultivate carefully: if live stock or poultry, give the best of care and attention. It will pay you even if you don't win a prize. Finer animals and better crops will be ample compensation.

Beltrami County is $300,000 in debt and has nothing with which to pay this large debt. The auditor and three commissioners are indicted by the grand jury of malfeasance. Gov. Johnson concluded not to suspend these officials from office as it would tie up the county affairs, pending an investigation of the charges brought against them. If found guilty they will be removed.

The Final Route.

The general route of this new line, and its length has not been definitely understood heretofore on account of the uncertainty of the final survey. That point now being settled, the Pioneer Press, with information direct from Soo headquarters, gives out the following interesting details:

The Soo railroad has placed in the hands of Foley Bros., general contractors, St. Paul, a contract for 220 miles of railway to be constructed between Moose Lake on the company's Duluth line and Thief River Falls, on the company's Winnipeg line.

The line as laid out will run from Moose Lake to Tamarack on the Northren Pacific's Duluth line, thence to Bena at the foot of the Winnibigoshish Lake on the Crookston-Duluth line of the Great Northern, thence run across the Minnesota & International near Tenstrike, going a little north of due west along the Creat Northern line till past Bemidji, then going northwest to Thief River Falls.

The work has been in the hands of the general contractors for several days and has not yet been let out to subcontractors. It is understood, however, that the contractors will have their apparatus bound for different points along the line within a few days.

LATER:—Developments yester day revealed some progress in the matter of grading on this line. J.F.Thorreen, of Stillwater, a contractor of long experience, has secured the contract to grade the first six miles of the road, which marks the connection of Moose Lake with Kettle River. Mr. Thorreen is here and his working paraphernalia is on the way from Stillwater. He will be ready to begin work Monday or Tuesday With the installation of this work, Moose Lake must press to her throbbing bosom a colony of the famous, illustrious sons of lovely Italy; for the first camp outside the limits will be composed of dagoes. This six mile contract will be completed in short order, comparatively speaking, as it is known to railroad men as quick work. The route is practically level, and will require but little grading. Nearly all of the labor will be done by the old and reliable combination of man, pick and shovel. No steam shovel will be used on this contract.—Moose Lake Star Gazette.

The above taken entire from the OLIVIA JOURNAL gives the first authentic news of the proposed Thief River Falls-Duluth line. According to that it will strike the Eleven Towns somewhere near Lillo or Garnes, and the road might go between Red Lake and Clearwater Rivers Any way it will cross the Eleven Towns and we have closer to railroad station. It will enhance the value of these lands greatly and improve the country.

Will Be Biggest Ever Attempted.

THE "MINNESOTA AT GETTYSBURG" Spectacle, Stellar Attraction at the Coming State Fair, Will Be Far More Pretentious than "Fort Ridgeley in '62".

"Minnesota at Gettysburg" the big spectacle announced for the coming Minnesota state Fair, september 6 to 11, is already beginning to take form and substance, although the fair is many weeks away. The magnitude of this spectacle which is to succeed the ultra successful "Fort Ridgeley in '62" of last year is indicated by the fact that the scenery which will picture Cemetery Hill and various other parts of the field at Gettysburg on which the gallant First Minnesota so distinguished itself, is 626 feet long, three times as long as any 'picture' ever before placed in front of the Minnesota state Fair grandstand.

Carrying out the scenic effects in connection with this spectacle, will be the bivouac of the Confederate troops at one end of the picture, the famous peach orchard toward the center, and the equally famous wheat field at the other end.

The Secret.

"I say," said Berkey to his wife yesterday at dinner, "you didn't say anything to any one about what I was telling you the night before last, did you? That's a secret."

"A secret! Why, I didn't know it was a secret," she replied regretfully.

"Well, did you tell it? I want to know."

"Why, no; I never thought of it since. I didn't know it was a secret." —Boston Globe.

George Jarman, Proprietor.

The Kratka people are going to celebrate the 4th, of July in grand style. Commenceing with a bowery dance on the afternoon of the 3rd, with a grand display of fire works in the evening. Picnic in the grove on Sunday.

Joseph Johnson came down from his farm in Star Township with cream for the Highlanding Creamery, today. Joe seems to be enjoying his usual good health, and some of those fellows, who have been denying us a commissioner so long, will perhaps discover that we have a healthy representative on that County Board.

A Lunatic's Repartee.

Some visitors were being shown through Kew Lunatic asylum, Victoria, one day, and. coming opposite the clock in the corridor, one of them, looking quickly at his watch, said, "Is that clock right?"

"No, you idiot," said a patient standing by. "It wouldn't be in here if it were right."

A Queer Eye.

An orator stated that "the worst enemy any cause can have is a double lie in the shape of half a truth," and the newspaper reported it "a double eye in the shape of half a tooth."

An Exception.

Naming a Kansas River.

Practically all the streams in Kansas were named by Indians and carry those names to this day, though in an Anglicized form.

The Neosho, the largest stream in southeast Kansas, has its own little story. The Osage Indians at one time lived in Missouri, and when they began talking of trading their lands in that state and moving to southern Kansas a party was sent out to look the country over and make a report on it. It was in the summer time and very hot and dry. Coming over the prairie northeast of Humboldt, they had a long way to travel without water.

"When they arrived at the river," said an Oswego man, "an Indian rode down the sloping bank into the water. But, to his surprise, the horse stepped right off into deep water, and the horse and Indian went in all over. As the aborigine clambered back on the bank he muttered, 'Wugh Neosho.' This in plain English means water pocket, or water hole, and the name clung to the stream ever afterward."—Hutchinson News.

Living the Simple Life.

A number of men gathered in the smoking car of a train from Little Rock to another point in Arkansas were talking of the food best calculated to sustain health.

One Arkansan, a stout, florid man, with short gray hair and a self satisfied air, was holding forth in great style.

"Look at me," he exclaimed—"never a day's sickness in my life, and all due to simple food! Why, gents, from the time I was twenty to when I reached forty years I lived a regular life. None of these effeminate delicacies for me, no late hours! Every day, summer and winter, I went to bed at 9; got up at 5; lived principally on corned beef and corn bread; worked hard, gents, worked hard, from 8 to 1; then dinner, plain dinner, then an hour's exercise and then"—

"Excuse me, Bill," interrupted a stranger who had up to this refrained from entering the discussion, "but what was you in for?"—Minneapolis Journal.

Very Nicely English.

This curious Bengali English was used to advertise a circus in India: "Some horse will make very good tricks. The klown will come and talk with that horses therefore audience will laugh itself very much. The lady will walk on horses back and horse is jumping very much also. The klown will make a joking words and lady will become to angry therefore klown will run himself away. One man will make so tricks of trapeze audience will fraid himself very much. One lady will make himself so bend, then everybody he will think, he is the rubber lady. This is the very grand display. This is the very better gymnastics. One man will walk on wire tight, he is doing very nicely because he is professor of that."

Then and Now.

Act I.

Tilkins—How is business, Wilkins?

Wilkins—Can't make it go. At this rate I shall be bankrupt in another month. I don't seem to have any head for business.

Tilkins—No; you haven't. But you have a good start, and if you'll promise to let me run things I'll go in with you as partner.

Wilkins—Done. A friend in need is a friend indeed.

Act II.—Ten Years Later.

Guest—What a magnificent place you have—everything that wealth could buy or heart long for! You have been wonderfully prosperous, Mr. Wilkins.

Mr. Wilkins (sadly)—True, but, after all, I get only half the profits of my great establishment. I tell you, my friend, the mistake of my life was taking a partner.—London Scraps.

Fear of Premature Burial.

The fear of premature burial, which prompted the late Lord Burton to direct by his will that his heart should be removed from his body, has caused many well known men and women to order a surgical operation to be performed upon their bodies. Harriet Martineau left her doctor £10 to amputate her head, and Lady Burton directed that her heart should be pierced with a needle. The late Edmund Yates left instructions that his jugular vein should be severed, with a provision that a fee of 20 guineas should be paid for the purpose. Literary persons appear to have been particularly afraid of premature burial, Bishop Berkeley, Lord Lytton, Hans Andersen and Wilkie Collins all took measures to protect themselves from it.—Westminster Gazette.

Notice to Settlers.

Crookston, Minn.,
June 23, 1909.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office yesterday telegraphed this office not to issue the notices proposed to be issued requiring homestead entrymen on the Eleven Red Lake Towns to show cause why their entries should not be canceled by reason of their failure to pay past due installments, so such notices will not be issued. The reason is that Mr. Steenerson has introduced a bill in Congress extending time to make such payments by all persons who are complying with the law as to residence and cultivation on those lands It appears certain that no person who is complying with the law as to residence and cultivation will be troubled or bothered in any manner on account of any failure to make payments until after Congress next winter shall have time to act on the matter.

His Bad Handwriting.

Dean Farrar in his "Reminiscences" says, that the first proofs of Dean Stanley's "Sinai and Palestine" informed the reader that from the monastery of Sinai was visible "the horn of the burning beast!" This was a fearfully apocalyptic nightmare of the printer's devil for "the horizon of the burning bush." The original proof sheets also stated that on turning the shoulder of Mount Olivet in the walk from Bethany "there suddenly burst upon the spectator a magnificent view of—Jones!" In this startling sentence "Jones" was a transmogrification of "Jerus," the dean's abbreviated way of writing "Jerusalem." When the dean answered an invitation to dinner his hostess has been known to write back and inquire whether his note was an acceptance or a refusal, and when he most kindly replied to the question of some workingman the recipient of his letter thanked him, but ventured to request that the tenor of the answer might be written out by some one else, as he was "not familiar with the handwriting of the aristocracy."

WHEN YOUR BACK ACHES

It Is a Warning That the Kidneys Are Sick and Need Help.

A bad back makes every day a dull round of pain and misery. It's a sign the kidneys are sick and cannot keep up their never-ending task of filtering the blood. Lame back, backache, dizzy spells and urinary disorders are warnings that must not be overlooked. A. G. Smith, 405 E. Mills St., Liberty, Mo., says: "I was racked with pain, stiff and lame, had dizzy spells and a terrible condition of the kidney secretions. I got so miserable I went to bed, but the doctor did not do anything for me and no one expected me to recover. Doan's Kidney Pills first relieved, then cured me, and I have had no kidney trouble for seven years since."

"Yep. He's waiting fer a tall feller drivin' a big red autymobile. He came by 'bout three years ago an' runned over th' old man's calf. The' feller stopped an' said: 'What's the damage?' an' the old man said, ''Bout 'leven dollars,' and the feller gave him a twenty an' drove on. An' th' old man's sittin' over there waitin' for him to come back."

"Eh! Poor old chap. Forgot to thank the man, I suppose. But what's he got that shotgun for?"

"The twenty th' feller gave him was bad."

Celebratin' the Fourth

'Twas the Fourth! An' the dye of the blue mornin' sky,
An' the red of the sun risin' fast,
An' the white o' the mist—made a flag that was kissed
By the breeze dilly-dallyin' past;
While the quail's meller fife stirred the echoes to life,
An' the drum o' the pheasant beat time,
An' all nature was gay in respect for the day—
An' the weather was proper an' prime.

'Long the broad country road rattled load after load
Of good people—a lengthy parade;
Little rosy-cheeked girls all in flounces an' curls,
Little boys dressed in gay cottonade;
Happy sweethearts an' beaus, older folks in good clo'es—
Lookin' ever so starchy an' glum;
An' the teams all a-prance in a side-steppin' dance,
To the tune o' the fife an' the drum.

Down the long Bailey hill, past the ol' Newsome mill,
'Cross the creek—an' a turn to the right;
An' the grounds an' the stand an' the crowds was at hand—
An' the whole celebration in sight.
There was people from Brun, there was folks from Dutch Run—
A respectable showin' from Cly;
An' a batch from Green Vale, an' another from Dale—
Celebratin' the Fourth 'o July.

Ev'rybody was there! All the homely 'an fair—
All the wise an' the feeble o' mind;
All the timid an' bold, an' the young an' the old—
An' the lame an' the halt an' the blind.
An' the older folks chaffed, an' the younger folks laughed;
An' the children, the birds an' the bees,
In a frolicsome way spent the sunshiny day—
In the shade o' the sheltering trees.

There was visions an' dreams—there was oceans an' streams
Of the best grub that ever was cooked;
There was ol'-fashioned cakes like no bakery bakes—
There was melons as good as they looked.
An' the poor an' the proud and the lowly and loud
Eat of chicken an' pickles an' pie;
An' the lout an' the lord sat at one common board—
Celebratin' the Fourth o' July.

Then the speakers all spoke—crackin' many a joke,
'An the ol' Declaration was read;
An' the rigs rumbled home in the gatherin' gloam—
An' the people went happy to bed.
Up the east the moon crept, to keep guard while they slept;
An' the streaks an' the stars in the sky
Spread a banner o' love 'cross the dark vault above—
Celebratin' the Fourth o' July.

Original Draft of the Declaration

PRESENT-DAY visitors to the state department, although they may not see the original Declaration of Independence, can inspect something almost as interesting—namely, the original draft of the Declaration in Jefferson's handwriting, with a few interlineations made by Franklin and Adams. This is displayed in a steel cabinet that stands adjacent to the safe containing the original Declaration. The steel exhibition cabinet also holds one of the facsimiles of the engrossed copy of the Declaration—one of those reproductions made by President Monroe.

In a glass case in this same treasure house of historic mementoes is the small, plain, unpolished mahogany desk on which Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence. This interesting relic came into the possession of the government in 1880. The desk had been given by Thomas Jefferson to Joseph Coolidge, Jr., upon the occasion of the latter's marriage to Jefferson's granddaughter, Miss Randolph. On the death of Mr. Coolidge, whose wife had died a year or two previously, the desk became the property of their four children, and was by them presented to the nation. It was the expressed wish of the donors "to offer it to the United States, that it may have a place in the department of state with the immortal instrument which was written upon it in 1776."

The desk bears an inscription in Jefferson's handwriting, as follows: "Thomas Jefferson gives this writing desk to Joseph Coolidge, Jr., as a memorial of his affection. It was made from a drawing of his own by Ben Randall, cabinet maker of Philadelphia, with whom he first lodged on his arrival in that city, in May, 1776, and is the identical one on which he wrote the Declaration of Independence. Politics as well as religion has its superstitions. These, gaining strength with time, may one day give imaginary value to this relic for its association with the birth of the great charter of our independence. Monticello, November 18, 1825."

Saving for the Fourth

Old-timer Recalls Limited Firecrackers of His Youth

"THIS was about the time when I was growing up, when us fellers 'd begin to figure on how we were going to grab out a few packs of firecrackers for the Fourth of July," observed Mr. Fattipose to a New York Sun man.

"The youngsters growing up nowadays don't know anything about the plans and schemes the tykes of another generation had to work to have any fun. The parents of most of the young "uns of to-day stake them to about all of the Fourth of July firecrackers they need and can use, but only the extremely opulent parents of my growing-up period did anything so reckless as disbursing real money to provide for the amusement of their progeny, and most of us had to cook up some kind of a dodge to get our own firecrackers.

"At that day, too, firecrackers were ten cents a pack, whereas in recent years I've seen 'em sold for as low as two packs for a nickel—a heap of difference in those figures to a boy ambitious to get all the noise that he can out of his money. They were three packs for a quarter then and three packs were usually as many as we ever dreamed of. We had to sort o' nurse our firecrackers along, you see, and stretch 'em out through the long long day. The first time I ever saw a boy fire off a whole pack of firecrackers at once—he was a Fauntleroyish kidlet of the rich in our town—I was so profoundly impressed with the barbaric lavishness of the performance that I could hardly get over it.

"But we had the nursing of our small supply of firecrackers down to a fine art. We'd crawl out of bed just about the rosy hour of dawn on Fourth of July morning and repair to an old disused cistern, covered over, and with a heavy rock on the planks to hold 'em down, and we'd begin our celebrating there. There wasn't any kick from the older folk about the "Ge-mun-ently, but how fine that first pack of firecrackers, when stripped of its smooth red paper covering, did look in the light of the dawn of those old Fourth of July mornings! early morning racket.

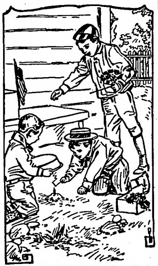
"Specially the green and yellow firecrackers that were fastened, one of each, to each package. We'd always save the green and yellow ones till the very last, for every boy knows perfectly well that the green and yellow ones made a terrible lot more noise than the red ones. Nobody ever told us that, but we just naturally knew it.

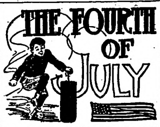


We'd Fire a Few Firecrackers Under the Tin Wash-Basin.

"Well, after setting off three or four out there on the old cistern—very stingily, and with the idea of making 'em last just as long as possible—we'd get the tin wash basin that rested on the bench back of the kitchen and that the whole family washed in of mornings; and we'd fire a few firecrackers under the tin wash basin, so as to get full action on the noise.

"The day after the Fourth of July was always a day of enormous gloom for us fellers, just like the day after the circus. We took a melancholy pleasure in trotting around the ruins of the vanished circus ring on the day after the circus, and on the day after the Fourth of July we'd extract the same kind of dreary pleasure in scouting around among the ruins of the firecrackers that had been let off on the great day, trying to pick up one here and there that had failed to go off. Once in a great while we'd actually pick up a whole firecracker that had been accidentally dropped on the day before.

"And say, right now, to-day, I wouldn't have half so much fun in picking up a bright new $20 gold piece on my way to the office as I did on a few occasions on the day after the Fourth of July when I came upon a sure-enough alive and charged firecracker that had got lost out of the pack on the previous day."



THERE'S a look of joy on the face of the boy
Who is counting his nickels and dimes,
For the Day draws near—'tis nearly here—
The happiest of happy times.

When bombs jar things, balloons take wings
And fireworks light the sky,
The boy is there with his annual scare—
He's in charge of the Fourth of July.

Since Liberty's bell first pealed the knell
Of the chains that monarchy cast,
The boy has raised Cain, has caught the refrain
Flung on from the mirrored past.

The day has been his, without query or quiz,
It has echoed his loudest licks.
Young South, young North whooped up the Fourth
In the spirit of Seventy-six.

We've all been boys, and we love the noise
Of the nation's natal day;
Our hearts go out to the riotous rout
And the smoke of the mimic fray.

So we yield the stage to the younger age
On this day of no restraint;
'Tis the boy's own day, we bow to its sway—
The Fourth and its patron saint.

Valley Forge Restored

INDEPENDENCE day, 1909, sees blood-stained, historic Valley Forge restored, and not only restored, but greatly beautified, improved and turned into a public park for the enjoyment of the people.

It is a fortunate thing that the time has passed when the pilgrim to Valley Forge in search of sights and relics of the historic camp, perhaps the most hallowed of our revolutionary reminders, was obliged to tramp over fields of none too friendly farmers and be constantly annoyed by signs warning off trespassers. Apart from which, the fatigue of such a trip was great, as there were no roads leading over the camp ground and no signs marking the way to the historic spots, only fields of waving grain or woodlands overgrown with underbrush. Consequently the hardest kind of walking over the steep hills was required to view but a few of the sights. Only the young and physically robust were therefore able to enjoy the pleasures of Valley Forge.

Through the untiring efforts of a number of patriotic men, all this has been changed and the state of Pennsylvania has been induced to assume and complete a task which was first offered and refused by the federal government, although the undertaking was clearly within its province, as the camp ground of Valley Forge is a relic which should belong not only to Pennsylvania, but to the entire nation, as every patriotic American must wish for its preservation and would feel proud in being part owner.

But whether by Pennsylvania or the national government, it must be at least gratifying to the nation to learn that the neglect of a century has been atoned for, and under the able and enthusiastic direction of the Valley Forge Park commission, a work of almost incalculable historical value has been done on the bleak heights above the Schuylkill, to which Washington's barefoot army crawled when the defeat of Germantown left them no other refuge.

Fort Washington and Fort Huntington have been restored. An iron tower 105 feet in height for observation purposes is being finished on Mount Joy, and from this tower not only a birdseye view of the entire camp ground and beautiful surrounding country can be had, but also Philadelphia, 20 miles distant, can be made out. A beautiful commemorative chapel of the Episcopal church has been built on the spot where Washington, in his direst hour of distress, knelt in prayer. The headquarters of the commander in the Isaac Potts house have been purchased, completely restored and turned into a revolutionary museum. Roads have been built which make possible quick communication between all points of the park, besides which, lawns and flower beds have been laid out and planted and even a guard house has been built to further heighten the park effect.

Proposed Confederate Memorials.

The United Daughters of the Confederacy have undertaken to carry to a successful conclusion two patriotic projects. One is the erection on the battlefield of Shiloh of a monument to the memory of the confederate soldiers who fell in one of the greatest battles of the civil war. The other is a memorial in the confederate section of the National cemetery at Arlington to commemorate the valor of the southern soldiers buried there.

SCOUT'S IDEA OF MARRIAGE.

Crusty Massachusetts Bachelor of Eighty Years Has Most Decided Views on the Matter.

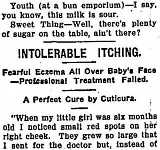
Eighty years of single blessedness is the record of Moses P. Stowe, one of the oldest residents of Grafton, Mass. Not a woman crosses the threshold of his cozy home.

"It makes no difference who or what the woman is; she wouldn't get inside of this house," he says. "Even women peddlers create a different atmosphere when they only knock at the door.

"Marry? Well, I should say not. You don't know what that word means. Why, look at all of the men in this country who have fastened themselves to women whom they professed to love, and now want to get as far away from femininity as they can. I wouldn't marry the best woman that ever lived. I tell you, they are trouble brewers; they always have been and always will be.

"I had lots of girl friends when I was a young fellow, but when there was any chasing to be done they were the ones who did it. I never allowed myself to become infatuated with a girl, as I knew it would be my end."

GRATIS.



Youth (at a bun emporium)—I say, you know, this milk is sour.

Sweet Thing—Well, there's plenty of sugar on the table, ain't there?

INTOLERABLE ITCHING.

Fearful Eczema All Over Baby's Face —Professional Treatment Failed.

A Perfect Cure by Cuticura.

"When my little girl was six months old I noticed small red spots on her right cheek. They grew so large that I sent for the doctor but, instead of helping the eruption, his ointment seemed to make it worse. Then I went to a second doctor who said it was eczema. He also gave me an ointment which did not help either. The disease spread all over the face and the eyes began to swell. The itching grew intolerable and it was a terrible sight to see. I consulted doctors for months, but they were unable to cure the baby. I paid out from $20 to $30 without relief. One evening I began to use the Cuticura Remedies. The next morning the baby's face was all white instead of red. I continued until the eczema entirely disappeared. Mrs. P. E. Gumbin, Sheldon, Ia., July 13,'08."

A Tall Bear Story.

"Why, once, do you know, I found a bear inside a hollow log. Well, of course, I couldn't get at him to shoot him, and the log was too heavy to move. I didn't know what to do. So at last I thought of cutting four holes in the log, about where the bear's feet must be, and I got his paws through slick. Then I tied a rope about the log and made him walk with it into camp. And—would you believe it?—we had all our food and all our fuel for the winter out of that one deal."—Outing.

A Broad Discrimination.

There is an elder of a certain church up-state who thinks that things are only half done or not well started in which he has no voice. At a prayer meeting he offered thanks for the safe return from their vacation of the minister and his wife. With proper dignity and in a loud voice he said: "O Lord, we thank thee for bringing our pastor safe home, and his dear wife, too, O Lord, for thou preservest man and beast."—Success.

Seek Prevention of Consumption.

The municipal authorities of Berlin have decided to introduce another berculosis. Heretofore, municipal effort has been confined to the maintenance of one or two homes for curable consumptives, but it is recognized that, useful as this is, it alone cannot cope with this disease. They have resolved, therefore, to devote more attention to preventive measures.

TUMOR OF FOUR YEARS GROWTH

Removed by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lindley, Ind.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound removed a cyst tumor of four years' growth, which three of the best physicians declared I had. They said that only an operation could help me. I am very glad that I followed a friend's advice and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for it has made me a strong and well woman, and I shall recommend it as long as I live."—MRS. MAY FRY, Lindley, Ind.

One of the greatest triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the conquering of woman's dread enemy—tumor. If you have mysterious pains, inflammation, ulceration or displacement, don't wait for time to confirm your fears and go through the horrors of a hospital operation, but try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and such unquestionable testimony as the above proves the value of this famous remedy, and should give confidence and hope to every sick woman.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

ITALY IS IN TERROR

NEW EARTHQUAKE CAUSES PANIC IN MESSINA AND REGGIO.

FULL DAMAGE NOT KNOWN

District in Which 200,000 Were Killed Last December Again Rocked and the People Flee from the Cities' Ruins.

Messina, Italy.—Southern Italy and Sicily where 200,000 lives were lost December 30 by the most terrific earthquake in history, have again been shaken, and had Messina and Reggio which were laid in waste at that time been rebuilt they no doubt would be devastated again to-day. The full measure of damage and loss of life in the new shock are not yet known.

It would seem that nature is determined to blot out Messina, but recently one of the fairest cities in the world. While minor shocks have been of frequent occurrence in Sicily, in the last six months they became more serious and caused considerable alarm. The most severe quakes came at 7:20 and 7:25 and were similar to the fatal disturbances of December, being accompanied by the same roaring noises that added to the terror of that fateful night. The population again fled in fear, and cries of terror rent the air. The people hurried to the open places praying to the saints that their lives might be spared.

It is impossible to accurately determine the number of casualties. Some of the reports are alarming, but they cannot be verified.

So far as is positively known only a few persons were hurt. One woman was killed by a falling wall, and a child was seriously injured. Gradually, as the confidence of the people returned, Messina had acquired a population of something over 25,000, but now the people again are in terror and do not feel themselves [illegible] even in the temporary huts erected for their shelter, and have fled to the country, preferring the shelter of trees and caves to the danger from falling walls. They lack food and covering, and are camping out in pitiful and desolate groups.

Sailors, soldiers and policemen have been sent out through the district to prevent looting and give courage to the people. Between eight o'clock at night and 7:20 o'clock in the morning eight shocks were recorded, and the instruments at the observatory registered a total of ten shocks of varying severity.

The shocks both here and at Reggio created a great panic among the people of these two cities. Walls of houses not completely demolished in the visitation of December were shaken down, and the inhabitants of the towns rushed from the streets.

The earth shocks have been becoming more intense recently, and they were sufficiently severe to cause alarm. The shocks were undulating and vertical, and accompanied by deep roaring sounds. The first one was followed by an explosion like the roar of cannon, and lasted between eight and ten seconds. It is said that this quake was of greater severity than the fatal one December 28.

WILL INSPECT MISSISSIPPI.

Inland Waterways Commission Starts from Buffalo on Long Trip to Mouth of Ohio.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The inland waterways commission, under instructions of congress, met here Thursday and started on a trip of inspection that will last two months. The commission will go by lake to Duluth, and thence to St. Paul, whence it will start down the Mississippi river, ending the inspection at the mouth of the Ohio. The commission will be met at St. Paul by prominent business men interested in the deeper-channel project, and several important matters, including the proposed harbor plans for St. Paul, the improvement of the Minnesota river and the high-dam question, which covers proposed work between St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Late in the month the body will leave for Europe to inspect the waterways of Germany and Holland.

Champlain Fetes Opened.

Crown Point, N. Y.—The fetes in celebration of the tercentenary of the discovery of Lake Champlain began here Monday in the presence of a multitude of persons. The exercises are taking place near the ruins of Old Fort St. Frederic and of Fort Crown Point. The local program included elaborate water pageants depicting the discovery of Lake Champlain and the fight of the Algonquins and Hurons led by Champlain against the Iroquois. A hundred and fifty Indians took part in these pageants. Following came the presentation of the Indian drama "Hiawatha."

SUGAR TRUST MEN INDICTED

CHARGED WITH CONSPIRACY TO RESTRAIN TRADE.

Corporation Six Directors and Two Lawyers Accused by Federal Grand Jury.

New York.—The American Sugar Refining Company, six of its directors and two other individuals were indicted by a federal grand jury on a charge of conspiracy in restraint of trade.

The individuals indicted are Washington B. Thomas, president of the American Sugar Refining Company; Arthur Donner and Charles H. Senff, and John E. Parsons of New York; John Mayer of Morristown, N. J., and George H. Frazier of Philadelphia, all of whom are directors of the company.

Indictments also were found against Gustav E. Kissel and Thomas B. Harnett, counsel for Adolph Segel. There were 14 counts in the indictment.

The indictments charge the corporation, the American Sugar Refining Company and the persons accused of conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. The defendants will answer to the indictments in court next Tuesday.

The penalties for the offenses charged in the indictment are not severe, as they rank as misdemeanors. The corporation if found guilty can be fined not to exceed $5,000, while each of the individuals if proven guilty are liable to a fine of $5,000 or one year's imprisonment, or both.

OUSTS GOTHAM POLICE HEAD.

Mayor McClellan Fires Bingham from Commissionership — "Politics," Says the Deposed Officer.

New York. — One of the most drastic upheavals in New York city's police history occurred when Mayor McClellan summarily removed Commissioner Theodore A. Bingham for insubordination after the latter's refusal to comply with certain revolutionary orders issued by the mayor.

With Gen. Bingham's retirement went several of his closest advisers and the leading supporters of his regime. As the head of the new regime the mayor at once appointed William F. Baker, hitherto a deputy commissioner, who indicated that a considerable change in the policy of the department is to be expected.

Gen. Bingham and his friends were outspoken in their declaration that the principal reasons for the mayor's act were political.

TEACHERS THRONG DENVER.

Forty-Seventh Annual Convention of National Education Association Opens There.

Denver, Col.—Denver is fairly alive with school teachers. They have flocked here from every state in the union, and every train that arrives brings many more to increase the throng. All these visitors have come to attend the forty-seventh annual convention of the National Education association which was formally opened Monday evening in the great Auditorium with a general session at which the president, Lorenzo D. Harvey of Stout institute, Menominee, Wis., delivered his annual address.

The convention will close Friday, and many of those in attendance will then go on excursions to points in Colorado and adjoining states and to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition at Seattle.

LING'S BODY IN RIVER?

Corpse Taken from Hudson May Be Strangler's Say New York Coroner and Policemen.

New York.—Although complete identification seems impossible, there appears to be a strong probability that the body of a Chinaman found floating in the Hudson river in the upper part of the city Thursday evening is that of Leon Ling or William L. Leon, murderer of Elsie Sigel.

The man's height, weight and general appearance tallies with that of Leon Ling, but as the body was nude except for a silk undershirt and had been in the water for more than a week a thorough examination will be necessary.

President Warns Party.

New Haven, Conn.—President Taft paused in the course of an after-dinner speech to 1,800 graduates of Yale, gathered at the annual alumni feast Wednesday, to issue a serious note of warning to congress and to the leaders of the Republican party.

The president declared that if the party which placed him in power and so long had controlled the government failed to live up to its promises and the expectations of the people, it would be relegated to the position of a minority opposition.

MILITARY TOURNAMEUT OPEN

THREE THOUSAND REGULARS GATHERED AT TOLEDO.

Troops Representing Every Branch of Service Give Stirring Exhibitions at Camp Taft.

Toledo, O.—The great military tournament at Camp Taft, which has been established in Bay View park, was formally opened Monday, and for a week the officers and men of Uncle Sam's army will give exhibitions of their work in time of war and peace. Three thousand troops are here, representing every branch of the service and they are demonstrating the efficiency of the army and its readiness to meet all conditions, much as the efficiency of the navy was proved by the globe-trotting cruise.

Many thousands of visitors witnessed the maneuvers Monday, for in addition to the people of Toledo, the tournament has attracted a very large number of persons from all the middle western states. Eleven thousand spectators are accommodated in a monster grand stand that has been erected.

Maj. Gen. Fred D. Grant, commanding the department of the lakes, is in command of Camp Taft, and the field events are in charge of Capt. A. J. Bowley, First Field artillery. The soldiers have been training for the event for months and go through their drills and maneuvers with astonishing speed and exactness. The commands that are here are the Second infantry, from Fort Thomas, Ky., whose predecessors participated in the defense of Fort Meigs in the war of 1812; the Tenth infantry, from Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.; the machine-gun platoons of the Second, Tenth and Twenty-seventh infantry, and Fifteenth cavalry; six companies of the Twenty-seventh infantry, the third squadron of the Fifteenth cavalry, and Battery F of the Fifth artillery, from Fort Sheridan, Ill.; Company L, Third battalion engineers, and Company A, signal corps, from Fort Leavenworth, Kan.; balloon detachment of the signal corps, with United States dirigible No. 1, from Fort Omaha; Company C, hospital corps, and a detachment of cooks and bakers from the barracks at Washington.

Brandenburg Acquitted in Cleveland Letter Case But Is Held for Kidnaping His Step-Son.

New York.—Although Broughton Brandenburg was acquitted Tuesday of the charge of grand larceny in connection with the sale of an alleged spurious letter of Grover Cleveland to the New York Times, he had only a few minutes of freedom.

Before leaving the courtroom he was rearrested and will be taken to St. Louis next week for trial on a charge of kidnaping his step-son, James Shepard Cabanne III. The maximum penalty for kidnaping in Missouri is 20 years' imprisonment.

Pittsburg Strike Is Settled.

Pittsburg, Pa. — The street railway strike, which cost the city of Pittsburg more than $200,000 in two days, was officially declared to be at an end at 10:30 o'clock Monday night.

In the private office of Mayor William A. Magee articles were signed by officials of the Pittsburg Railways Company and an executive committee from the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway employes which will for years to come prevent another tie up of the 400 miles of street railway tracks in and about Greater Pittsburg and Allegheny county.

Retail Coal Men Convene.

Chicago.—Several hundred retail coal dealers, members of the Illinois and Wisconsin association, gathered Wednesday morning in the Shorman house and opened their fourteenth annual convention. President H. A. Robinson of Peoria was in the chair, and after Walter S. Bogle had welcomed the association to Chicago, he delivered his annual address.

WRIGHT MAKES FLIGHTS.

Repeatedly Circles Fort Myer Grounds, Attaining Speed of Thirty-Eight Miles an Hour.

Washington.—Calm, confident and nerveless, Orville Wright, late Thursday afternoon, encircled the Fort Myer drill grounds time after time in his aeroplane in three successful flights while a crowd of thousands cheered him for the success that attended his persistency and pluck.

Mr. Wright would not estimate the speed at which the aeroplane traveled, and the length of the flights could not be accurately determined. Maj. Squier expressed the opinion that the rounds on the first flight were approximately half a mile in length. As the machine made three rounds in 50 seconds each, it probably was traveling at a speed of 38 miles per hour.

After the apparently unsuccessful attempts of Tuesday and Wednesday, the performances of the flying machine were inspiring. While the machine oscillated at certain points, it was evident from the regularity with which these things happened that they were due to the condition of the atmosphere and not to any fault of the machine.

MAN O' PEACE FOR THE SICK.

Miss Harriman Hoists Red Cross Flag Over Ferryboat She Provides for Consumptives.

New York.—Miss Mary Harriman, eldest daughter of E. H. Harriman, raised the Red Cross flag Thursday over an Erie ferryboat which she has fitted up and donated to the Brooklyn Red Cross society as a "man o' peace," for use in the war on tuberculosis. The boat lay at the anchorage off Columbia street, Brooklyn, and there Miss Harriman received its first pasengers, men, women and children who are victims of the white plague.

The boat is fitted out with accommodations for 300 patients and they will be given three meals a day and all the milk and eggs they can consume. For the commissary Miss Harriman will forage her father's farm at Arden. Attendants and physicians are provided, and there will be an open air school for Brooklyn children who have been kept out of school because they are tuberculous.

TOLD TO WHIP HUSBAND.

Pennsylvania Woman Instructed by Court to Thrash the Man Who Mistreats Her.

Wilkesbarre, Pa.—"If your husband abuses you again give him a good thrashing and if that does not cure him bring him to me, but I think the thrashing will do the business." This was the advice given Tuesday by Alderman Donohue of this city to Mrs. Michael Promack of Dupont who had her thin five-foot husband arrested on the charge of abusing her.

She said he married her for her money and not geting it ill treated her. As Mrs. Promick is six feet tall and well built and as the husband is less than five feet and does not weigh much more than 100 pounds, the alderman thought the woman could inflict more telling punishment than the law. She said she would try it.

Descendants of Signers Meet.

Philadelphia.—The Descendants of the Signers, lineal descendants of the men who in 1776 affixed their names to the Declaration of Independence, held their annual meeting Monday in the old state house, in the same room where their ancestors adopted the famous document. The sessions were presided over by the president, Albert McClellan Mathewson of New Haven, Conn.

15,000 Tin Workers Strike.

Pittsburg, Pa.—Fully 15,000 men employed in plants of the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company quit work at midnight Wednesday and the Amalgamated association claims that 20,000 men ultimately will be affected.

The principal storm centers will be at Newcastle and Sharon, Pa.; Youngstown, O.; Bridgeport, O.; Martin's Ferry and Cambridge, O.; Wheeling, W. Va., and Ellwood City, Ind.

A CORPORATION TAX

SENATE INCORPORATES TAFT PLAN INTO BILL BY VOTE OF 60 TO 11.

THREE DEMOCRATS VOTE "NO"

Is Substituted for Income Levy Proposition by Decisive Majority. Lodge Countervailing Duty Amendment Is Also Killed.

Washington, July 3.—The corporation tax amendment which was suggested by President Taft, drawn by Attorney General Wickersham and presented to the senate by Mr. Aldrich, chairman of the committée on finance, is an integral part of the tariff bill as that bill now stands.

The senate reached a vote on the proposition shortly before adjournment at 7 o'clock p. m. yesterday and the amendment was agreed to by the large vote of 60 to 11. With all modifying amendments disposed of, many Democrats voted with most of the Republicans for the amendment. Only three Democrats voted against the proposition on the final vote.

The test vote was on the substitution of the corporation tax amendment for the income tax provision and on that vote 45 senators cast their ballots in the affirmative and 31 in the negative. On this ballot all the Democratic votes were cast in favor of the income tax, which also received the support of a number of the insurgent Republicans.

Lodge Amendment Lost.

The first vote was upon the motion to substitute the corporation tax amendment for the Lodge countervailing duty amendment and this prevailed by a vote of 45 to 31. The affirmative vote was cast entirely by Republicans, even Senator McEnery, of Louisiana, who has voted with the majority side for all protective measures, throwing his ballot with his own party. The Republicans who voted with the Democrats in the negative were Messrs. Borah, Bristow, Bulkeley, Clapp, Cummins, Dolliver and La Follette.

Immediately following, Mr. Lodge withdrew his amendment, and a vote was taken on a motion to substitute the corporation tax amendment for the income tax amendment offered jointly by Messrs. Bailey and Cummins. The result was an exact counterpart of the vote on the previous roll call.

Next in order came the vote upon the corporation tax upon its own merits, but before this ballot could be reached Mr. Bacon sought to obtain action on two amendments to that provision presented by himself, both of which Mr. Aldrich moved to lay upon the table with successful result.

The climax was reached upon agreeing to the corporation tax amendment as a part of the tariff bill. This amendment was adopted by the vote of 60 to 11.

Personnel of the Vote.

Of the 11 negative votes eight were cast by Republicans and three by Democrats, the Republicans being Messrs. Borah, Bristow, Bulkeley, Clapp, Cummins, Dolliver, Heyburn and La Follette, and the Democrats, Chamberlain, Hughes and Shively. The affirmative vote was as follows:

Aldrich, Bradley, Brandegee, Briggs, Brown, Burkett, Burnham, Burrows, Burton, Carter, Clark (Wyo.), Crawford, Culom, Curtis, Depew, Dick, Dillingham, Dixon, Dupont, Elkins, Flint, Frye, Gallinger, Gamble, Guggenheim, Johnson, Jones, Kean, Lodge, Lorimer, McCumber, Nelson, Page, Penrose, Perkins, Piles, Rott, Scott, Smoot, Sutherland, Warner, Warren and Wetmore, Republicans, and Bailey, Bankhead, Culberson, Daniel, Davis, Fletcher, Foster, Gore, Johnston, McEnery, McLaurin, Martin, Money, Newlands, Raynor, Taliaferro and Taylor, Democrats.

Tobacco Tax Increase Planned.

Washington, July 3.—The republican members of the finance committee of the senate have agreed upon a general advance in the tobacco schedule of the administration part of the tariff bill. The increase in the tax on cut and plug tobacco and cigars and cigarets amounts to about 20 per cent over the house rates. The sub-committee on tobacco today decided to prohibit coupons in tobacco and snuff packages.

Waterworks Hearing Nearly Over.

Brainerd, Minn., July 3.—Evidence in the hearing before the appraisers in the matter of the condemnation of the plant of the Minnesota Waterworks company, which supplied Brainerd, is completed. The city's expert placed the value at about $28,000, while engineers of the company valued it from $110,000 to over $118,000. Arguments will be made Wednesday next.

THE WRONG OBJECTIVE POINT

Mule's Lack of Consideration Responsible for Ike's Being Late at His Duty.

An Atlanta merchant has frequent occasion to rebuke Ike, his darky porter, for his tardiness in reporting for duty in the morning. Ike is always ready with a more or less ingenious excuse.

"You're two hours late, Ike!" exclaimed the employer one morning. "This sort of thing must stop! Otherwise, I'm going to fire you; understand."

"'Deed, Mistah Edward," replied Ike, "it wa'n't mah fault, dis time! Honest! I was kicked by a mule!"

"Kicked by a mule? Well, even if that were so, it wouldn't delay you for more than an hour. You'll have to think of a better excuse than that."

Ike looked aggrieved. "Mistah Edward," he continued solemnly, "it might have been all right ef dat mule kicked me in dis direction; but he didn't—he kicked me de odder way!"—Lippincott's.

An Anatomical Wonder.

Senator Beveridge was criticising the ludicrous speeches of a certain upright but hot-headed congressman.

"He does make queer blunders, doesn't he?" said Senator Beveridge. "Have you heard about his latest?

"Well, it seems that a constituent, visiting him recently, complained of the shabbiness of a pair of ink-stained crash trousers that he had on.

"'A man of your position,' said the constituent, reproachfully, 'ought to wear handsomer trousers than those.'

"The congressman, offended, answered reproachfully:

"'My trousers may be shabby, but they cover a warm and honest heart.'"

Like an Hour Glass.

Belle—Yes; the more time he gets the less sand he has.—Cleveland Leader.

A Youthful Idea.

"See, my son," said an enthusiastic parent, anxious to impress the beauties and resources of nature, "what beautiful green dresses of leaves the trees have now, when in winter they are quite bare."

"I guess," said the youngster, thoughtfully, "that when winter comes they pack these pretty green dresses in their trunks, don't they?"

AN OLD TIMER
Has Had Experiences.

A woman who has used Postum since it came upon the market knows from experience the wisdom of using Postum in place of coffee if one values health and a clear brain. She says:

"At the time Postum was first put on the market I was suffering from nervous dyspepsia, and my physician had repeatedly told me not to use tea or coffee. Finally I decided to take his advice and try Postum. I got a package and had it carefully prepared, finding it delicious to the taste. So I continued its use and very soon its beneficial effects convinced me of its value, for I got well of my nervousness and dyspepsia.

"My husband had been drinking coffee all his life until it had affected his nerves terribly, and I persuaded him to shift to Postum. It was easy to get him to make the change for the Postum is so delicious. It certainly worked wonders for him.

"We soon learned that Postum does not exhilarate nor depress and does not stimulate, but steadily and honestly strengthens the nerves and the stomach.

"To make a long story short, our entire family continued to use Postum with satisfying results, as shown in our fine condition of health and we have noticed a rather unexpected improvement in brain and nerve power."

Increased brain and nerve power always follow the use of Postum in place of coffee, sometimes in a very marked manner. "There's a Reason."

SURVEYORS IN PINE LAKE.

Different crews of railroad surveyors are reported at Gully, Winsor and Pine Lake They are supposed to be working for the "Soo," but are tight as clams. Came to Gully on June 22nd. At that place experienced trouble, in that the grade proved to steep for them. In order to avoid this have been running many different lines in that locality and which in turn has delayed their work. They have been over in Section 6, in Pine Lake; also on the Section Line directly north from Gonvick running lines, and down near Winsor. It appears to be a final survey. Everybody here are happy over the fact that the coming of the "Iron Horse" is so close at hand, and from present indications everything indicate that it will tap the heart of Clearwater county. The grading on the Thief River Falls line began for good on Monday, June 21st, from Moose Lake.—Olberg Journal.

WOULD PRESIDENT TAFT SIGN IT?

From every portion of the country there is being raised a storm of protest over the probable shape the tariff bill will be passed by congress. It is generally regarded as an infamous bill in which necessities are taxed heavily, while luxuries are admitted under a very low rate. Champaign, which, of course, is necessary and is indulged in very extensively by the common people, is let off with a very slight tax and it is very kind that Aldrich et al. have been so considerate

Many believe that President Taft will veto the bill if it passes in its present form, or unless some radical changes are made, a condition that seems very improbable at this time.

Why would it not be a good idea, if the bill does pass in its present form, to deluge President Taft with protests. Have the big papers of each state act as a protest bureau and then send in the entire batch by a special freight train.

The average person cannot discuss the tariff with a very great degree of intelligence, but any person can understand that when luxuries are taxed a mere pittance and necessities are taxed heavily, it is the hand of the millionaire that is being shown thru Senator Aldrich.

Nearly every paper of influence, even the stauchest republican papers, are protesting, and the people are protesting even harder.—Crookston Times.

THE SOLDIER'S SLANG

Army Vernacular as Odd as That of the Navy.

MANY QUEER EXPRESSIONS.

A Man Just Enlisted Is Called "a Rooky," and Men Who Enlist at the Beginning of Winter and Desert In the Spring Are Called "Snowbirds."

The army has just as odd a vernacular as the navy. To the uninitiated some army expressions would convey little or no sense, as, for example, if a soldier were heard to say, "The top told me to report for kitchen police and help skin the spuds for slum for supper," the hearer would have several guesses before he would come anywhere near what this meant in the patter of the barracks.

In plain language, it means that the first sergeant (the ranking or orderly sergeant) had told him to report to the cook to assist him in peeling the potatoes to make the hash or stew for supper. Hash or stew is always "slum," and the first sergeant is "the top;" "kitchen police," a man who assists the cook in the preparation of meals and the washing of dishes, pans, etc.

A man who has just enlisted or has not yet been in the ranks long enough to be considered a full fledged soldier, having learned all his duties, is called "a rooky," and woe be unto the "rooky" who gets "fresh" before an old sergeant who has been in the ranks since before the fresh "rooky" was born! He will be told in any but gentle terms by the old timer: "Shut up and go about your work. Your name is not yet dry on your enlistment paper!" meaning that when he was sworn in and promised to serve for three years and obey the "orders of the president and the officers appointed over him" he had signed his name to this paper and the signature had not had time to get dry.

When a man says he is going to "take on" or "take on another blanket," he means that he is going to reenlist. The government, in the clothing allowance for each man, provides a blanket; hence the term to "take another blanket."

The guardhouse is called "the mill." Some ill behaved soldier away back in the past (the term is a very old one) no doubt thought his term in the guardhouse ground out toward its end very slowly, so he applied this now much used name to the prison of the garrison.

When "the top" says, "Get your blanket and go to the mill," the soldier knows he is in for a tour of duty in the guardhouse, and his blanket means one or more nights, for in that much to be avoided place nothing is supplied in the way of comforts, and each occupant carries with him his blanket, or more if he has them, to make his rest more comfortable.

All meals are called "chuck," and along toward mealtime the expression, "Is it not time for chuck call to blow?" is heard very frequently.

"Snowbirds" are men who enlist in the winter about the time snow begins to fall and the real snowbird puts in its appearance and desert in the spring when the robin appears. They "take on" only to tide over the winter with its discomforts.

The oldest man in the company is "dad" and the youngest "the kid.

Any deserter is called a "skipper."

Two men who share the same small tent or whose bunks are side by side in the barrack room are called "bunkies." This ancient term originated in the days of the very old army, when the bunks were "built for two" and two men slept side by side on a mattress filled with straw and one blanket apiece, much different from today, when each man has his hair mattress, pillow, sheets and blankets. A "bunky" always has a chew or filling for a pipe for his mate, when he might tell another man that he has not enough weed to "put under your nail."

All fines received from a court are called "blind," so that a man who received ten days in the guardhouse and a fine of $5 would tell his comrades that he "got ten days in the mill and five blind."

The commanding officer of a company or the post is always the "old man." If he is not liked other terms, not parlor talk, are used.

All field musicians are called "wind jammers" on account of their jamming of wind into the trumpet that calls the men to labor or rest.

Every man on the completion of his term of enlistment is given a discharge. At the bottom of his paper in olden times was a space in which the character borne by the man during his term of enlistment was written. If his service had been bad this part of the discharge was cut off, and it was called "a bobtail." In speaking of the length of time a man has to serve before he has completed his term of enlistment the term "butt" means less than a year. So to say he has a year and a little less than two years he would say "a year and a butt."

There are a number of men in the ranks who save their money and lend it to others. The rate is very high. If a man borrows $2 he must pay $4 at pay day. This is called "cent per cent." The term "one more shingle on the White House" means that the man has completed one more tour of guard duty consisting of twenty-four hours.

Many of these terms quoted are of very old origin, so old that if you ask the oldest man in the army whence he heard it first he will probably tell you, "Oh, it was used when I took my first blanket."—Major B. W. Atkinson in New York Tribune.

German Way of Serving Asparagus.

When living in Germany we noticed that the asparagus served there was unusually tender and of a much more delicate flavor than that which we got in America. We learned that the Germans do not consider asparagus fit to eat unless the outside skin is scraped from each stalk before cooking. This sounds like slow work, but if a sharp knife is used it can be done quite rapidly and is well worth the trouble.—Good Housekeeping.

A. D. Brown and Mr. Warren of Little Oak, passed by here yesterday on their way down the river with the new gasoline launch which they have just completed. They will have the new engine put in at Thief River Falls and the boat will be used for carrying freight and passengers up and down the river.

The farmers, living near Hilda have had their meadow land flooded and entirely destroyed by the river over-flowing caused by log jams in the Red Lake River, while the river has been kept so low, below the jam, that no boats can be run to take provisions up to the Eleven Town store keepers. But never mind common people, there are some men, who think they are the whole cheese, but who are now sitting on a mine that is likely to explode some fine day and do terrible execution.

CHINESE JUSTICE.

Li Hung Chang and the Men Who Tried to Poison Him.

When Li Hung Chang was Chinese premier and was having a bitter fight with some of the more conservative members of the tsung-li-yamen he received as a present a magnificent cake which he had reason to suspect contained poison. He put the cake aside and set all his powerful machinery to work to find out who was at the bottom of the plot. The investigation was partly successful, the crime being traced to three men, of whom one at least was absolutely guilty. Li had the trio arrested and brought to his yamen. When they arrived they were ushered into his presence and were received in his courtliest manner. The cake was produced with the remark that politeness forbade his tasting it until the three generous donors had had an opportunity to enjoy its excellence. Li cut the cake, and one of his servitors handed it to the unwilling guests. Each took a piece and ate or pretended to eat it. One crumbled the pieces and let them fall upon the floor, but the other two ate calmly, without manifesting any emotion. Ten minutes and the two men began to show symptoms of suffering. Li smiled benignantly and said to the man who had not eaten, "Your wisdom is so great that I am compelled to preserve your head as a souvenir to transcendent genius."

The man was removed and promptly decapitated. To the other two the premier remarked: "The cake that you are eating is not the one you sent, but one which I had my cook imitate. The poison from which you are suffering exists only in your imagination. I know of no way to cure your present pain except by letting you share the same fate as your friend who has just left the room."

As they were led away the statesman said to his retinue, "It is a pity that a man who can eat a deadly corrosive poison with an unmoved countenance should so misapply the talent wherewith heaven has endowed him."

ICEBERGS.

How Those Found In the North Atlantic Are Formed.

The distance covered by an iceberg of the north Atlantic from the time it is formed until it reaches the banks is fully 2,500 miles. It may have been afloat for a year, exposed to wide changes of temperature, battered by ice floes, possibly other bergs and ceaselessly washed by the waves. Yet some of those seen 2,000 miles south of their starting point are nearly 300 feet in height and truly of majestic proportions, often 1,000 or more feet in length, while it is an established scientific fact that so much more of the bulk is under water than is visible that the largest bergs may extend into the ocean to a depth of over half a mile.

Their enormous size when they become detached from the glaciers is proved by the observations of explorers along the Greenland coast. A few years ago a berg was measured as nearly as possible around the edges. This distance was about five miles. It had several peaks estimated to range from 300 to 500 feet high. Judging from its appearance, it was a solid mass that had separated in its entirety from the glacial edge of Greenland.

As arctic navigators who venture far north often see a score or more of great bergs in a day, the tremendous glacial activity in this region can be appreciated. The majority of these that drift to the Grand banks come from Melville bay. Some of the distinct glaciers that terminate the Greenland ice cap on this coast extend along it a distance of fully twenty-five miles. Their thickness or height can only be estimated, but in places near the open sea it is believed to be several hundred feet.

Recent examinations of this coast show that during the short summer the formation of bergs in the bay is almost continuous. The glacial movement keeps pressing the ice forward until a thick stratum often projects many feet beyond that beneath. After a time the great weight overcomes the tensile strength of the mass and it falls into the sea, and a berg is created.—Day Allen Willey in Scientific American.

A Frog's Nest.

In Brazil a species of tree frog constructs in the water a curious nest, or fortifications, to protect its eggs and young from the attacks of fish. Starting at the bottom of a pond, the mother frog erects a circular, tubelike wall of mud which at the top projects above the surface of the water. In the water thus inclosed the eggs are laid, and when they have hatched out the frog's young are secure from enemies until they are able to take care of themselves.

Puppies Both.

"I would give half my fortune to be in your little dog's place," said a "smart" young man in a railway carriage to a girl who had a toy terrier in her arms.

"And it would be the right place for you," she retorted, "for I am taking him to have his ears cropped!"—London Express.

British Savings Clubs.

The working people of England are great patrons of savings clubs, all sorts of agencies being created to enable them to save money that they may have it to spend during the festive season of the year. There are clubs of all kinds, ranging from the shop club, to which the workingmen contribute, to the little clubs run for the purpose of letting school children have a shilling's worth of sweets for a Christmas treat. There is hardly a workshop of any importance in London without its workmen's saving club, besides which there are many dividing clubs carried on at public houses, and the deposits amount in the aggregate to a very large sum. The withdrawals begin in the early days of December, and it is not uncommon for the banks to pay out £300 ($1,460) to £500 ($2,433) to a single club, and the problem of storing the money is one of some difficulty. As the amounts have to be divided among many people they are wanted in cash, and in some cases the proportion of gold, silver and copper is specified.

Easter Island.

Easter Island is a lonely Pacific islet, forty-seven square miles in area, entirely volcanic and containing several extinct craters, some of which are more than a hundred feet high, discovered by Roggeveen on Easter Sunday, 1722. Little is known concerning the curious remains which have made the island famous. They consist of more than 500 rudely carved stone statues and busts, varying in height from three to seventy feet and said to be portraits of famous men, not idols. There are also hundreds of stone houses on the island, with painted interiors and incised tablets which, strange to say, have never been deciphered. Between 1860 and 1832 the population, by reason of polyandry and emigration, dwindled to 150 souls, and in 1833 most of these were carried off by the Peruvians to work guano. The few inhabitants left are fair haired Polynesians. Since 1888 the island has been a Chilean convict station.—New York Telegram.

A King's Bank.

The practice of hiding money in all manner of out of the way corners is by no means modern. In the old days, according to "Gleanings After Time," secret receptacles were often made in the bedsteads and contributed both to safety and romance. On Aug 21, 1485, Richard III. arrived at Leicester. His servants had preceded him with the running wardrobe, and in the best chamber of the Blue Boar a ponderous four post bedstead was set up. It was richly carved, gilded and decorated and had a double bottom of boards. Richard slept in it that night. After his defeat and death on Bosworth field it was stripped of its rich hangings, but the heavy and cumbersome bedstead was left at the Blue Boar. In the reign of Elizabeth, when the hostess was shaking the bed, she observed a piece of gold of ancient coinage fall on the floor. This led to a careful examination, when the double bottom was discovered, upon lifting a portion of which the interior was found to be filled with gold, part coined in the reign of Richard III and the rest of earlier times.

Stevenson and Dreams.

Robert Louis Stevenson owed much of his inspiration to dreams. In one passage he attributed some of his finest work to the "brownies" who tenanted his brain during moments of unconsciousness. "The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" owes its origin to a dream. "I had long been trying to write a story on this subject," writes Stevenson, "to find a body, a vehicle, for that strong sense of man's double being which must at times come in upon and overwhelm the mind of every thinking creature. For two days I went about racking my brains for a plot of any sort, and on the second night I dreamed the scene at the window and a scene afterward split in two, in which Hyde, pursued for some crime, took the powder and underwent the change in the presence of his pursuers. All the rest was made awake and consciously, although I think I can trace in much of it the manner of my brownies."

Double Quick Composing.

Sir Arthur Sullivan wrote the overture to "The Yeomen of the Guard" in twelve hours and that to "Iolanthe" in less space of time—from 9 p. m. to 7 a. m. But even this capacity for speed in composition is eclipsed by M. Bompard, who for a wager composed the music to a song in ten minutes. Mr. N. Trotere, however, is the composer of whom most quick time anecdotes are told. His beautiful song "Asthore" was both written and composed in forty minutes in Blanchard's restaurant. The melody of "In Old Madrid" was the result of a sudden inspiration. It came to the composer while on his way home from the aquarium. Lest it should escape him he rushed into a small public house in Rochester row, seized a biscuit bag and on it jotted down the air. But Mr. Trotere holds the championship. It is said that he actually composed "The Brow of the Hill," wrote a letter and ran 400 yards to post it in eight minutes.—Dundee Advertiser.

Odd Names In China.

Chinese children are endowed with strange Christian names. Their girls, for instance, are not called Mabel, Jenny or Matilda, but Cloudy Moon, Celestial Happiness, Spring Peach or Casket of Perfumes. Their boys get less attractive names, being made for work and wisdom rather than pleasure and dancing. Thus we find a little two-year-old Practical Industry; three-year-old, Ancestral Knowledge; four-year-old, Complete Virtue; five-year-old, Discreet Valor. To their slaves they give still another set of names. Not For Me, Joy to Serve, Your Happiness and Humble Devotion may be taken as typical examples.

WHAT WERE THEY THERE FOR

Reporter's Seemingly Superfluous Question as to Happenings at Cabinet Meeting.

Postmaster General Meyer is of a serious turn of mind, but he has a bit of humor in his makeup, nevertheless. Being looked upon as the shrewdest politician in the president's cabinet, he is the objective point for newspaper correspondents on cabinet days.

Last week as Mr. Meyer emerged from the White House a newspaper man asked:

"Mr. Postmaster General, can't you give us some news about the cabinet meetings?"

"There really is nothing to say," replied the cabinet officer. "We discussed nothing of especial importance."

"Do you mean to say you did not discuss politics?" the newspaper man queried.

The postmaster general burst into laughter. When he recovered his usual serenity he said:

"Do you suppose we were all muzzled?"

HER FRIENDS WONDER

How Mrs. Kessler Was Rescued from Almost Certain Death.

Few have lived through such trials and suffering from kidney disease as were endured by Mrs. Caroline Kessler of W. Main St., Paw Paw, Mich. Well and strong again, her case is thought a miracle by her friends. What Mrs. Kessler went through makes a long story—backache, rheumatism, dizzy and fainting spells, urinary disorders, dreadful bloating of dropsy and finally a complete prostration that defied medical skill and caused her to be given up. Through the use of Doan's Kidney Pills Mrs. Kessler is a well woman and is willing to tell about her case to anyone who cares to inquire.

No Romance About It.

The stricken man constantly moaned the name of the young woman who had jilted him.

"Tell her," he said to the medical man, "that her cruelty killed me. Tell her I am dying from a broken heart."

The medical man shook his head.

"Aw, go on," he said. "That would be shamelessly unprofessional. Your heart's all right. It's your liver that's the trouble."

Good, If Homely, Advice.

Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfel, the famous Labrador explorer and social worker, says that in the interests of the campaign against tuberculosis, he has induced most of the natives to weave the motto, "Don't Spit," in their rugs, instead of other homely sayings, which were formerly used.

Unexpected Prize.

With a deftness acquired by long and patient practice the pickpocket extracted an old but well-filled wallet from the hip pocket of the unsuspecting old gentleman with the beaming countenance against whom he had carelessly brushed when leaving the street car, and on reaching a secluded place he opened it.

The contents had been wrapped with great care in numerous thicknesses of blank paper. Removing the wrappings one by one, he found in the center of the package a card with this inscription upon it: "Young man, Give Up Your Career of Crime! Nothing In It!"

The Earth and the Moon.

That the earth must shine on the moon even as the moon shines on the earth is obvious. To detect this light from the earth on the lunar surface and scientifically prove its existence is another matter. It is interesting to find that a recent number of a French astronomical paper contains two photographs of parts of the moon illuminated by earth light. They were taken by M. Quenisset at the Juvisy observatory.

GOPHER NEWS NOTES

Minnesota Events of the Week in Condensed Form.

Stillwater.—Frank Rainer, a farmer of Forest Lake, was killed by the accidental discharge of a shotgun while shooting hawks on his farm.

Caledonia.—Thomas Buckley, aged 49 years, died of apoplexy at his residence here. He was a prominent merchant and was city treasurer.

Red Lake Falls.—George Gamache, twenty-three years old, was struck by lightning and instantly killed here during a rain and electrical storm.

St. Cloud.—Sebastian Rechert, the well known St. Cloud merchant, died of sunstroke. Mr. Rechert was overcome by the heat while out driving.

Fergus Falls.—Judge Baxter today sentenced Matt Rohn to Stillwater for eighteen months for wife-beating. Rohn used a hot flatiron in his last assault.

Bemidji.—The Minnesota and International railroad will spend $30,000 improving and enlarging its terminals at this point, abandoning the present terminals in South Bemidji.

Hastings.—At a special meeting of the board of education, L. L. Sloreiger, of Cresco, Iowa, was elected principal of the high school at a salary of $100 a month.

Hastings.—The store of L. P. Warmeg, at Rosemont, was burglarized, knives and razors worth $25 being stolen. The saloon of Joseph Lynch was entered and $7 taken.

Bird Island.—The village council of Olivia has granted a twenty-year franchise to the Bird Island Telephone Company to install a modern telephone plant in that village.

Spooner.—Indian Agent R. S. McKenzie, of the district of Ontario, is making treaty payments along the Lake of the Woods and the reservation bordering on the Rainy river district.

Fairmont.—Henry Brocker, of Ceylon, aged 14 years, was drowned in Clear Lake. He was wading in shallow water and stepped into a deep hole. He was the son of a retired farmer.

Litchfield.—Sam Lockhart, a member of the Minneapolis fire department, who has been spending his vacation in this city, was fined $90 for shipping bass which were not properly labeled.

Bemidji.—At the meeting of the city council the contract for the city pumping plant was let to J. J. Robinson company of St. Paul, for the sum of $6,324. They will install the plant complete for that amount.

Brainerd.—Herman Hub, a machinist employed at the Northern Pacific shops in this city, was drowned while bathing in the Mississippi river about a quarter of a mile below the Northern Pacific railway bridge.

Waseca.—The city council has voted to pave ten blocks on Lake avenue with vitrified brick. Boulevarding up to the curb will be enforced. The cost of making the improvement will be met by a deferred payment plan.

Duluth.—Charles O. Mills, an ice dealer of Proctor, Minn., was killed by a fast passenger train on a hill near Duluth. He was walking on the track and stepped aside when a train approached from behind him, but did not get far enough away.

New Ulm.—Henry Frenzel, a prominent business man, died with paralysis of the brain. He was one of the early pioneers of this city and has been a pop manufacturer for 36 years and had a wide acquaintance throughout the state.

Fergus Falls.—A number of the members of the Fergus Falls City band are planning a very interesting trip. They have decided to walk from this city to Seattle, taking their instruments with them and giving concerts at cities and villages along the route.

Rochester.—George F. Howard, county superintendent of schools, has tendered his resignation and will associate himself with a school supply house. Mr. Howard was founder of the Rochester Industrial School. In 1902 he was elected county superintendent and he has held the office continuously.

Mankato.—In grading down the hill opposite the old hotel site near Garden City, twelve miles southeast of here, workmen found a human skeleton in the middle of the road six feet down, and on what was at one time top soil, some pieces of grass being perfectly preserved. The road is sixty years old. Some of the bones were were preserved and some of the teeth perfect.

Park Rapids.—At the state land sale about 400 acres were disposed of, all but one tract being bought by settlers residing near the land or those who wished to settle on land. The prices showed an increase over former years, and the demand was good. The land was appraised at $4 to $6 an acre, and most of it was sold at the appraised value. Some tracts went higher, but none above $8 an acre.

Fergus Falls.—Harry Gilbertson attempted to commit suicide by cutting his throat, while in the city jail here. Gilbertson was charged with drunkenness and was facing a prison sentence as he had been taken up for the second time under the Schaffer law.

Fergus Falls.—Mrs. Lena Stal, an elderly woman, was instantly killed by the Great Northern Oriental Limited, west-bound, at Evansville, two stations south of here. She was crossing the track and apparently failed to hear the train, which makes no stop at that station.

Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twentytwo per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirtyseven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium, or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. A. F. Peeler, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in many cases and have always found it an efficient and speedy remedy."

Dr. E. Down, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in my practice for many years with great satisfaction to myself and benefit to my patients."

Dr. Edward Parrish, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria in my own household with good results, and have advised several patients to use it for its mild laxative effect and freedom from harm."

Dr. J. B. Elliott, of New York City, says: "Having during the past six years prescribed your Castoria for infantile stomach disorders, I most heartily commend its use. The formula contains nothing deleterious to the most delicate of children."

Dr. C. G. Sprague, of Omaha, Neb., says: "Your Castoria is an ideal medicine for children, and I frequently prescribe it. While I do not advocate the indiscriminate use of proprietary medicines, yet Castoria is an exception for conditions which arise in the care of children."

Dr. J. A. Parker, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria holds the esteem of the medical profession in a manner held by no other proprietary preparation. It is a sure and reliable medicine for infants and children. In fact, it is the universal household remedy for infantile ailments."

Dr. H. F. Merrill, of Augusta, Me., says: "Castoria is one of the very finest and most remarkable remedies for infants and children. In my opinion your Castoria has saved thousands from an early grave. I can furnish hundreds of testimonials from this locality as to its efficiency and merits."

Dr. Norman M. Geer, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "During the last twelve years I have frequently recommended your Castoria as one of the best preparations of the kind, being safe in the hands of parents and very effective in relieving children's disorders, while the ease with which such a pleasant preparation can be administered is a great advantage."

My hands got all scaly and when I scratched, the surface would be covered with blisters and then get raw. The eczema got so bad that I could not move my thumbs without deep cracks appearing. I went to my doctor, but his medicine could only stop the itching. At night I suffered so fearfully that I could not sleep. I could not bear to touch my hands with water. This went on for three months and I was fairly worn out. At last I got the Cuticura Remedies and in a month I was cured. Walter H. Cox, 16 Somerset St., Boston, Mass., Sept. 25, 1908."

COMMISSION INVESTIGATES

COUNTY OFFICERS AT BEMIDJI ARE UNDER FIRE OF PROBE COMMISSION.

AUDITOR'S CASE COMES FIRST

Beltrami County Inquiry Continued to July 20, on Account of Serious Illness of Mrs. Wilmann.

Bemidji.—The hearing on charges against Auditor Wilmann and County Commissioners Wes Wright, F. O. Sibley and A. W. Danaher has begun. The state is represented by Lyndon A. Smith, assistnat attorney general, and M. F. Kane, deputy public examiner, with M. E. Ryan as referee and special commissioner, and J. J. Cameron, stenographer. E. E. McDonald appeared as attorney for Wilmann and Danaher, and P. J. Russell represented Wes Wright. F. O. Sibley did not appear.

The charge against Wilmann is for non-feasance, and that against the county commissioners for non-feasance and malfeasance.

The state moved that the case of the county auditor be taken up first. Mr. McDonald asked for more time and presented an affidavit from Wilmann to the effect that his wife was seriously ill with tuberculosis and expected to die at any moment; that he was not served with a copy of the charges until yesterday and that more time was absolutely necessary.

Mr. Smith said the proceedings differed from the usual method in that the charges were preferred according to statute and accused the county auditor of non-feasance, or of things left undone. Mr. Smith said he represented Governor Johnson to see that nothing but legal evidence was accepted, and that the law was followed. Dr. E. H. Smith testified that Mrs. Wilmann was very ill and might die at any time.

Mr. Ryan adjourned until July 20, because of the serious illness of Mrs. Wilmann.

A. W. Danaher submitted an affidavit to the effect that he expected to prove that the excess expense of the county, which is over the 5 mill levy, was necessary to maintain the county government.

MINNEAPOLIS LAW VALID.

Dairymen Required to Give Tuberculin Test to Cattle.

Minneapolis.—The tuberculin germ test for cattle and the Minneapolis milk ordinance prohibiting the sale of all milk not taken from officially inspected cattle is held valid by Judge Frank C. Brooks of the district court, who denied the application of several milk dealers for an injunction restraining the city and Dr. P. M. Hall, health commissioner, from destroying their milk.

This is the first decision upholding an ordinance requiring milk to come from herds subjected to the tuberculin test ever rendered either in Minneapolis or elsewhere, and is a decisive victory for the health department.

The case has been in court since Jan. 26. The Seven Corners Milk company, the Bloomington Milk company, the Flour City Creamery company and the Star creamery filed a joint application for an injunction. The health department had confiscated quantities of milk belonging to these concerns because the milk came from uninspected herds.

The plaintiffs argued that the pasteurization killed the milk germs of tuberculosis and that inspection was not necessary. The court held, however, that as no method was universally used or approved for killing the bacilli, the health department had a right to demand inspection of all herds.

Judge Brooks' conclusion of law is as follows: "The court finds that the plaintiffs or any of them are not entitled to an injunction or any relief whatever in this action, and that the defendants are entitled to have judgment for the dismissal of said action and for their costs and disbursements." A stay of forty days is granted for appeal.

The Minneapolis ordinance was passed two years ago and is the most rigid in the country. It requires the tuberculin test for every herd every year.

Park Rapids.—At the state land sale about 400 acres were disposed of, all but one tract being bought by settlers residing near the land or those who wished to settle on land. The prices showed an increase over former years, and the demand was good. The land was appraised at $4 to $6 an acre, and most of it was sold at the appraised value. Some tracts went higher, but none above $8 an acre.

NEW ULM RIFLE TEAM WINS.

Members Make a Fine Showing During the Season.

New Ulm.—The indoor rifle team of Company A, Second infantry, located at New Ulm, has recently been awarded first prize and baner for the highest score attained at the competitive shoot of all the national guard indoor rifle teams of the state for the season 1908-1909.

This has been the first experience of the Minnesota guardsmen with the Springfield 22-caliber rifles distributed last fall to all the companies in the state.

At the meeting of the Minnesota National Guard Association in January the officers formed an indoor rifle association for the promotion of rifle practice in the state and banners were offered as prizes for the company teams making the highest aggregate score at the close of the season. The result was carried on through the winter and at the end of the season the team shoot was held, the result of which was that Company A of New Ulm obtained the banner as first prize with the score of 972 points; Company C, Third infantry of Duluth, was second with 926 points; Company F of the Second infantry of Fairmont was third with the score of 959 points.

The only possible contestant with Company A for the championship is St. Peter, which defeated all other teams which it met with the exception of the Company A team. The first match between the two teams resulted in a victory for Company K with a score of 920 to 910. The second was carried by Company A with a score of 923 to 910 and the third, through a difference of interpretation of regulations, was claimed by both companies. Company A, however, claims clear title by reason of the decisive score of 972, as against Company K's of 956 in the brigade team shoot; furthermore, because practically the same teams met in a match on Memorial day on the St. Peter outdoor range and there Company A won out by 11 points. The team has been coached and managed by Capt. Albert Pfaender, who is himself an experienced rifleman.

COUNTIES TO GET FREE ROCK.

State Ready to Furnish Crushed Granite Where Needed.

The first of the crushed granite which the state is grinding at the St. Cloud reformatory to be furnished free to counties that want to use it on the roads is about ready for shipment and from now on about eight or ten cars a week will go out from the crushing plant. The Great Northern and Northern Pacific, who offered to do the hauling free, will begin carrying the rock in a day or two.

Some of the first rock goes to Princeton, a large quantity will be hauled by team from the crusher to adjoining roads, and Sherburne and Anoka counties wil come next on the list.

The North-Western line has promised to haul the rock free 75 miles on any of its lines from the Twin Cities. George W. Cooley, engineer of the state highway commission, wrote to some of the other roads, asking them to do the same. The Minneapolis and St. Louis road answered that the anti-pass law of 1907 prevented them from carrying anything free either for individuals or for the state, and though they were much interested in the cause of good roads, they were sorry that the law did not permit them to grant the request.

Mr. Cooley referred this matter to some of the other roads that had promised to haul rock free, and they answered that in their interpretation of the ant-pass law it would not interfere with their hauling the rock free. The report that the attorney general gave Mr. Cooley an opinion stating that the anti-pass law prevented the hauling of rock free is denied by both Mr. Simpson and Mr. Cooley. Mr. Simpson says that no opinion has been asked from him on the subject.

STATE BANK RESOURCES GROW.

Thirteen Months Show Increase of $5,000,000.

Bank resources of the state banks of Minnesota have increased from $89,027,899 on May 6, 1908, to $94,300,853 on June 23, 1909, according to the summary of the statements submitted to Public Examiner Anton Schaefer by the banks for those dates. There were 627 banks reporting as against 600 a year ago. On June 30, 1899, there were only 170 state banks with resources of $36,615,570.

In the tabular statement given out by the public examiner, the items of capital stock, surplus and undivided profits show a decrease during the 13 months. The deposits subject to check were also slightly less but the time certificates increased from $41,352,151 to $47,504,087, which accounts for practically the whole increase in the liabilities.

Under the heading of resources the loans and discounts have increased from $66,078,032 to $71,421,935, the securities from $1,313,171 to $1,683,425, the value of banking houses and fixtures from $3,032,639 to $3,215,268, while the item of cash on hand has decreased from $4,375,096 to $3,691,572.

VICTORY FOR THE BOOK TRUST

JOYNER'S ELECTION SO REGARDED BY EDUCATORS.

Freedom for Porto Rico and Philippines and Suffrage for Women Advocated by Delegates.

Denver, Col. — The election of James Yadkin Joyner, superintendent of public instruction of North Carolina, as president of the National Education association is regarded by his supporters as a victory in their fight against any regulation of the prices of school text books. Mr. Joyner was elected over Ben Blewitt, head of the St. Louis schools, and Dr. J. H. Phillips of Birmingham, Ala

Among the other things done by the association were:

Went on record against the existence of fraternities in high schools in a resolution which declares such organizations to be opposed to the spirit of democracy.

Decided to "investigate" the feasibility of simplified spelling, but took no decided stand either for or against. In the regular sessions, Edwin G. Dexter, commissioner of education for Porto Rico, offered a resolution urging that congress be asked to confer citizenship on the people of Porto Rico.

Immediately a member from Alabama arose and proposed to tack on a little suggestion about freedom for the Filipinos. He said they had been nurtured by the eagle of freedom going on ten years now and thus far the only civilizing influence they had felt was the water cure.

Miss Mary Shirley of California then declared:

"Now if there is going to be any freedom advocated here, I want to make another amendment. If the savages of Porto Rico and of the Philippines are going to get support here, I want the voice of this association to be raised in behalf of those who deserve it most—the women of the United States."

Irwin Shepherd of Winona, Minn., was re-elected secretary; A. H. Chamberlain of California, was re-elected treasurer.

FLOOD DANGER IS OVER.

Conditions in Missouri and Kansas Improve as the Waters Recede —Damage $1,500,000.

Kansas City, Mo. — The flood situation in Missouri and Kansas is gradually improving. At Kansas City the Kansas and Missouri rivers both were still rising, but the prediction is that they will begin falling to-day without causing damage here.

Springfield, Mo., on the Jordan river, and Ottawa, Kan., on the Marais des Cygnes river, were the points where most suffering was experienced yesterday. The streets were buried under ten to fifteen feet of water.

The body of R. A. Dameron of Colfax, Ill., who was drowned at Springfield, Mo., on Tuesday, has not been recovered. Eight have been drowned and the damage is estimated at $1,500,000.

Tuberculosis from Milk.

Stockholm. — American investigations of the responsibility for the persistent spread of the disease among human beings, particularly children, were officially reported Thursday to the eighth international tuberculosis conference, in session here, by Nathan Straus.

The paper by the New York philanthropist was presented by Dr. Arthur Randolph Green, medical director of the Straus pasteurized milk work, and one of the American delegates. It disclosed for the first time the overwhelming evidence gathered by the American investigators to show the responsibility of milk from tuberculous cows for the infection of human beings with tuberculosis.

FIND SPICY SNELL LETTERS.

Can't Be Used But May Aid Prosecution—Some Are from Mrs. McNamara.

Bloomington, Ill.—That Col. Snell neglected to destroy letters that he received from women has developed in the announcement by lawyers for the disinherited son that a large number of spicy missives were located in an unused closet in the old mansion located in the northern section of Clinton.

The old man doubtless received these letters while he was an occupant of the homestead a few years before his death. The letters will be examined by the lawyers for the contestant but it is feared that they will not be of any value due to the decision of the supreme court when the case was sent back for another trial.

The upper court took occasion to declare such letters ineligible, referring particularly to those credited to Mabel Snell McNamara and to the wife of Rev. Hamilton. It was held that letters received by the old man could not be construed as affecting his mentality.

Some of the newly-discovered letters are in the handwriting of Mabel Snell McNamara upon whom the millionaire lavished thousands of dollars.

REBELLION IN COLOMBIA..

Opponents of President Reyes, Who Is in London, Proclaim a New Ruler.

Bogota, Colombia.—A portion of the army stationed at Barranquilla took arms on Sunday last against the Colombian government, made prisoners of the municipal authorities and proclaimed Gonzalez Valencia as president.

Gen. Jorge Holguin, who is acting president in the absence of Gen. Rafael Reyes, was strongly denounced and the gendarmerie were driven out of the city, later arriving at Cartagena. The revolutionists took possession of the town and several steamers on Magdalena river.

Gen. Holguin has declared martial law throughout the country. Gonzalez Valencia has disavowed the rising and is coming to Bogota.

Gen. Perdomo left Honda with six steamers having on board 3,000 men and 20 pieces of artillery. The objective point of the troops is Barranquilla.

THAW NEARER FREEDOM.

Decision of Justice Gaynor May Mean the Elimination of Jerome from the Case.

New York.—Harry K. Thaw and his attorneys won a second victory in his fight for freedom Friday when Supreme Court Justice Gaynor denied the motion recently made before him for the removal of the Thaw insanity hearing from Westchester county to New York county.

The decision gives special satisfaction to Thaw and his lawyers, for it is taken to mean the elimination from the case of District Attorney Jerome, who originally prosecuted Thaw so vigorously. Mr. Jerome recently withdrew from the hearing at White Plains,

Fine Miss Lonsdorf $2,000.

Trenton, N. J.—Miss Camille Lonstorf was fined $2,000 by Judge Cross in the United States district court here, after she had pleaded non vult to the charge of smuggling.

Miss Lonstorf was represented by a lawyer, and her fine was immediately paid. The young woman with her mother and sister had been abroad and brought into this country about $2,500 worth of furs.

Her defense was that she did not know that the furs were dutiable.

Immediately after paying the fine they left Trenton.

PASS TARIFF BILL

ALDRICH—PAYNE MEASURE IS ADOPTED BY THE SENATE.

FINAL VOTE IS 45 TO 34

Senator Beveridge in Closing Debate Declares Republican Party Has Not Kept Promise of Downward Revision—Disputed by Aldrich.

Washington.—By a vote of 45 to 34 the senate, Thursday night, passed the Aldrich-Payne tariff bill.

President Taft arrived in Washington Friday and at once began a conference with leaders to rush the measure through.

The vote on the bill was:

Yeas—Aldrich, Borah, Bourne, Bradley, Brandegee, Briggs, Bulkley, Burnham, Burrows, Burton, Carter, Clark (Wyo.), Crane, Depew, Dick, Dixon, Dupont, Elkins, Flint, Frye, Gallinger, Gamble, Guggenheim, Hale, Heyburn, Johnson (N. D.), Kean, Lorimer, Jones, McCumber, McEnery, Nixon, Oliver, Page, Penrose, Perkins, Piles, Scott, Smith (Mich.), Smoot, Stephenson, Sutherland, Warner, Warren, Wetmore—45.

Nays—Bacon, Bailey, Bankhead, Beveridge, Bristow, Brown, Burkett, Chamberlain, Clapp, Crawford, Culberson, Cummins, Daniel, Dolliver, Fletcher, Foster, Frazier, Gore, Hughes, Johnston (Ala.), La Follette, McLaurin, Martin, Money, Nelson, Newlands, Overman, Owen, Shively, Simmons, Smith (S. D.), Stone, Taliaferro, Taylor—34.

The failure of the senate to keep the promise made to the people by the Republican party respecting a revision of the tariff downward was the theme of Senator Beveridge as the debate was drawing to a close.

"Our votes," he said, "shall be cast in harmony with our party's pledges as voiced by our party's leader and the nation's president."

Senator Beveridge was answered by Senator Aldrich, who said he had often seen men interpret their own judgment as the judgment of their party.

"The Republican party is a party of majorities," he added, "and the views of the majority in matters of legislation control party policies. The senator from Indiana does not speak for the Republican party. He has no right to call here the name of the president of the United States in support of any suggestion which he has made."

Senator Aldrich declared that the pending bill was a fulfillment of the party's pledge. If senators wished to vote against the bill, he said, they should not attempt to speak for their party.

As it passed the senate the bill contains almost 400 paragraphs. The senate made 840 amendments to the house provisions, many of which were added Thursday when the senate sat continuously from ten o'clock in the morning until 11:18 at night, stopping neither for luncheon nor dinner.

The most interesting occurrences of the sitting were the adoption of amendments by Senator Bradley of Kentucky and Senator Curtis of Kansas, the former exempting tobacco "in the hand" from the internal revenue tax of six cents a pound, and the latter placing a countervailing duty on crude petroleum shipped from countries which impose duty on oil importations from the United States. The action on tobacco was a real surprise as the senate has frequently refused to remove the tax.

Senator La Follette's tariff commission amendment was rejected by a viva voce vote. Asking that they be considered as a single amendment, Senator La Follettee offered a large number of changes to the woolen schedule, substituting ad valorem duties for specific rates. They were voted down.

Upon motion of Senator Aldrich, the vice-president announced the senate conferees as follows: Senators Aldrich, Burrows, Penrose, Hale, Cullom, Republicans, and Daniel, Money and Bailey, Democrats.

Elks Throng Los Angeles.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Members of the Order of Elks from every state in the union have arrived in Los Angeles for the convention of the grand lodge, which opens Sunday and continues for a week. Every train brings more delegates and visitors and they are met and cared for by former residents of their state or city. To entertain guests from Illinois 5,000 former residents of that state have formed the Illinois Association of Southern California.

MORE PINKHAM CURES

Added to the Long List due to This Famous Remedy.

Camden, N.J.—"It is with pleasure that I add my testimonial to your already long list—hoping that it may induce others to avail themselves of this valuable medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I suffered from terrible headaches, pain in my back and right side, was tired and nervous, and so weak I could hardly stand. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound restored me to health and made me feel like a new person, and it shall always have my praise."—Mrs. W. P. VALENTINE, 902 Lincoln Avenue, Camden, N. J.

Gardiner, Me.—"I was a great sufferer from a female disease. The doctor said I would have to go to the hospital for an operation, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound completely cured me in three months."—MRS. S. A. WILLIAMS, R. F. D. No. 14, Box 39, Gardiner Me.

Because your case is a difficult one, doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has cured many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, indigestion, dizziness, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result is worth millions to many suffering women.

"Why, Mrs. Jones, what are you doing out in all this rain?"

"Oh, I just ran out to buy an umbrella!"

Laundry work at home would be much more satisfactory if the right Starch were used. In order to get the desired stiffness, it is usually necessary to use so much starch that the beauty and fineness of the fabric is hidden behind a paste of varying thickness, which not only destroys the appearance, but also affects the wearing quality of the goods. This trouble can be entirely overcome by using Defiance Starch, as it can be applied much more thinly because of its greater strength than other makes.

The banks in this city that advertise in newspapers show an increase in assets of 38 per cent and an increase in deposits of 85 per cent in a period of five years, says the Pittsburg Chronical Telegraph, while the banks which do not avail themselves of the opportunity to advertise gained in the same time only 27 per cent in assets and 11 per cent in deposits.

Picturesque Japanese Peasants.

The most characteristic scenery in Japan is not the mountain, on which few Japanese dwell, but the rice field, which is to be found wherever there is a patch of level ground for the field and sufficient water for irrigation. Gentle slopes are made useful by terracing, and the cooly, preparing the ground or cutting his crop, is the true Japanese peasant. He is a picturesque peasant in his blue cotton suit, his broad, conical straw hat and straw overcoat. He is a good natured peasant, absurdly contented with his earnings, though the agricultural laborer earns as little as 8 or 10 cents gold a day. His house is a light wooden frame surmounted by a heavy thatch, and he loves to plant a lily garden along his rooftree. But he always has one thing which separates him from the Chinese and the East Indian—he lives on a platform raised above the ground. No hardened soil for him, no chilly pavement or brick or stone. A wooden floor, a piece of clean matting, a broom and a bathtub the poorest Japanese will always have. —Tokyo Letter to Boston Transcript.

A Deceptive Air.

The Bushby storekeeper surveyed Mr. Leonard with a contemplative eye and then turned his gaze toward Jimmy Sloane, who was putting packages into the delivery wagon. Jimmy had the leisurely air of one with plenty of time at his disposal.

"You want to know how he'd be for your business down below?" said Mr Gregg slowly.

"Yes," said the visitor. "I noticed him yesterday, when that crowd of young fellows were getting the piano into the hall; he seemed to work harder than any of the others. It occurred to me he might like a bigger chance than he has here."

"M-m," said the storekeeper. "Well, now, I can't say as to that, of course, but as to his working harder than any of the other boys, I'll tell you what they say, and you can believe it or not, jest as you choose.

"They all like Jimmy, for he's first rate company, but the truth is that when it comes to lifting, or such work, Jimmy's all take holt and mighty little h'ist."—Youth's Companion.

Dark Walls Best For Illumination.

Some scientists who have been making investigations into the part played in the matter of illumination by light and dark walls have come to the conclusion that the dark walls are better fitted for good illumination than the light. In a room where the walls are dark and where the source of light is entirely behind the reader's field of vision a person who reads is impressed with the idea that the room is excellently well illuminated, but if now another light is brought into the room and placed within the field of his vision, though not shining on the paper he is reading, the pupils of his eyes will contract, less light will enter them from the paper he reads, and the reader will be impressed with the idea that the illumination has been reduced and the paper is becoming darker. These scientists say that the experiments show that if the walls are light colored the efficiency of the illumination may actually be diminished.—Pathfinder.

LOOKING AND SEEING

There Is a Marked Difference Between These Two Acts.

THE POWER OF OBSERVATION

It Should Be Cultivated Even In the Most Ordinary Things—A Faculty That Is Possessed by All, but That Is Developed by the Few.

It is the hope and desire of all parents that their children shall make some sort of a mark in the world when they grow up. They do not in the majority of cases expect that their offspring will become famous and make names that will live for ages, but they cherish the thought that they will be successful men and women in some profession or business. That is the keynote—that success shall be their portion.

Yet it is a fact that most parents neglect or pay very little attention to one part of the child's education which is of the highest importance. They do not train the perceptive faculties.

Power of observation will help you more than anything else in your struggle for existence, and yet there are comparatively few people who are keen observers. One small fact will prove this latter statement. The man who observes everything, he who sees everything he looks at, is singled out either as an inquisitive person or a clever one, and this shows that he is an exception.

It is easy to give instances of this lack of perception even in the ordinary things of life. Some years ago an artist engaged in a London firm of printers had to draw an advertisement in which the central figure was a cock in the act of crowing. Nothing seemed easier, but when he set to work the artist found himself confronted by a difficulty—does the cock show its tongue prominently when it crows? Every one of the hundred men employed by the firm had seen a cock crow scores of times, yet not one of them could answer the question. The artist had to go to a friend who kept fowls and chase the poor rooster round and round the yard until it crowed.

A schoolmaster, wishing to test the perception of his boys, asked them how many times they had seen a cow or pictures of that animal and found, as he had expected, that all the boys had seen the creature more times than they could remember. Then he offered to give small prizes to the boys who could correctly answer this question: "Are a cow's ears above, below, in front of or behind its horns?" Only two boys gained prizes, and their answers were guesswork.

Now sit down and test yourself in some such simple manner. You have all seen a horse "down." Can you describe how it rises? Does it get up on its fore feet first and then on its hind feet, or does it kneel first, then get on its hind feet and finally on its fore feet?

However, you need not confine yourself to the animal kingdom in testing your perceptive faculties. Many subjects will suggest themselves to you.

As an excuse for this want of observation it is often urged that "a man can't know everything," but the excuse is a bad one. There is a great difference between knowing little or nothing and knowing everything. When the faculty has been trained it requires no more effort to note the points of the object looked at than it does to glance at that same object and come away none the wiser.

The chances of success in life are on the side of the man who knows certain things because he has learned about them by using his senses instead of having to go to a book for all that he wishes to know. Books are indispensable, as there are so many things which cannot come within the range of our observation, but wherever possible we should use our senses to acquire knowledge at first hand.

This will explain why men who cannot read or write have built up substantial businesses. They have made use of the power possessed by all, but cultivated by very few.

The perceptive faculty must be trained during childhood and youth. After the completion of the twentieth year very little progress can be made. A grown man is unable to develop his powers of observation to any satisfactory degree. Youth is full of energy, and that is the time to inculcate the lesson that we should see all that our eyes rest upon.

It should be the object of every parent to teach his child to note every object that comes in his way. When out for a walk in a park the child should be told to observe the shapes of the leaves on the different trees, the tinting of the color of animals toward the under part of the body, and so on, and should be told that when asked a question on the subject he must be prepared to say that it is so, not that he thinks it is.

All children have inquiring minds, and after a walk or two, coupled with such instruction as we have mentioned, you will find the child making great progress and acquiring a quality that will be invaluable in after life.

One of the methods adopted by Houdin, the conjurer, for quickening the perception of his son was to make him walk rapidly past a shop window or a stall on which a number of articles were displayed and then write down a list of the objects noticed. At first only half a dozen articles were perceived during the moment occupied in passing the store or window, but after having done it once a day for a month the boy was able to make a list of forty objects.—Pearson's Weekly.

A Striking Attitude.

The Hollow Bones of Birds.

The hollow bones of birds are frequently cited as beautiful instances of providential mechanics in building the strongest and largest possible limb with the least expenditure of material, and this is largely true, and yet birds, like ducks, which cleave the air with the speed of an express train, have the long bones filled with marrow or saturated with fat, while the lumbering hornbill, that fairly hurtles over the treetops, has one of the most completely pneumatic skeletons imaginable, permeated with air to the very toe tips, and the ungainly pelican is nearly as well off. Still, it is but fair to say that the frigate bird and turkey buzzards, creatures which are most at ease when on the wing, have extremely light and hollow bones; but, comparing one bird with another, the paramount importance of a pneumatic skeleton to a bird is not as evident as that of a pneumatic tire to a bicycle.—Exchange.

Lord Russell's Retort.

Lord Russell once presided at a dinner given for Sir Henry Irving on his return from America. While the dinner was in progress Lord Russell suggested to Comyns Carr that he propose Sir Henry's health. "I can't make speeches, you know," he said.

Sir Henry gently replied, "I heard you make a fine speech before the Parnell commission."

To which the pungent Irishman answered, "Oh, yes, but then I had something to talk about!"

Before and After.

"That couple used to be inseparable a year ago," he observed, "and now you hardly ever see them together. Why is it? Do you know?"

"Yes," said she. "They weren't married a year ago."—New York Press.

Their Present Names.

"What are the names of that young couple next door?"

"We won't be able to find out for several weeks. They've just been married, and he calls her Birdie, and she calls him Pettie."

FOR SALE: A second hand Minneapolis Threshing Rig, complete, for $550,00. Fred L. Farley, Red Lake Falls, Minn.

C. L. Clark and Al. Smith have been doing Notary work for the Deer Park proposed County ditch the past week.

We have been develing a big share of our time to haying this week, which accounts for a small amount of local news this week.

Lenard McAndress took the Dan Patch boat to Thief River Falls this morning, to see the Cole Bros Circus, which shows there tomorrow.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Nelson, of Highlanding were passengers down the river on this mornings Dan Patch to see the big Cole Bros circus, at Thief River Falls tomorrow.

The weather the past week has been very discourageing for haying, with two or three rain showers every day, but there semms to be a prospect of a fine weather today.

Wheat is now nicely headed and is in blossom, with a sure prospect of a fair crop. The straw is not quite so heavy is it was last year. but if it fills good it will be an avrage crop.

If you get hungry going down to Thief River Falls, stop at The Soo Cafe, near the Soo depot, and get a lunch, or a square meal at a reasonable price.

George Jarman, Proprietor

The people are not to get a dollar from the state from the road and bridge fund, this year or next, but the brainless yaups that they elected to represent them got their "pork barrel", all right. but there was no pork in it.

The latest folders issued by the Canadian Pacific and Soo railroad companies show the proposed new Thief River Falls Duluth line, and it is projected as leaving the main line just south of this city.—Thief River Falls Press.

Do not forget the Kratka Farmers Club picnic, to be held in James O'Briens grove, on Sunday July 25th,. Prominent speakers will be present to address the people, not on the subject of socialism, but on the subject of farming and dairying, and no hat will be passed arround to take up a collection to pay expenses of speakers.

The Agricultural Society of Red Lake County are out with their eighth annual premium list for their county fair to be held at Thief River Falls on Aug 4th, 5th, and 6th,. The fair promises to be better than ever this year and we hope to see the farmers up this way have some credible exhibits, for by doing so you advertise the part of the county in which you live.

Work of grading on the Soo line from Moose Lake, where it leaves the main line, to Thief River Falls is being pushed with all possiable speed by Fole Bros. the general contractors, who have a good sized army of men at the work, and are employing more as fast as they can get them. This is authetic information, and means that the talking time is passed and the grade is being made on the Soo extension from Duluth to Thief Rive Falls. From present indications the line will cross the eleven townships between the Red Lake and Clear Water rivers.

THE RIVER SEINE.

It Is the Most Picturesque of the Highways of Paris.

We have heard almost too much of the streets of Paris and not enough of that street most distinctive of all—the river Seine. Flowing through the city for six miles, it is a highway, with its bateaux mouches, its bridges and its quays. Of a dark night the Seine may seem to lugubrious fancy the symbol of death in the city's life abounding—murky death and inky crime, oozy and silent wickedness. Yet normally, even perhaps to suicides, the Seine is but the mirror of a city's mood. There are lights everywhere—lights lengthened in the water. The Louvre and the Conciergerie shown in the stream are things fairer than their originals. It is better to look upon the eddying reflections of the bridges here than to stand in the Place de la Concorde, bright with its orange lamps in honor of an auto show. The lights on the Seine and its images are more alluring, more innately of fairyland and Paris, than the gilded boulevards.

Nor is it only in the moonlight that the Seine has charms. The holiday sculler finds it a paradise for miles above the city, and there are ever such fishermen as Maupassant's Renard. Line fishing is more than a mild sport at Paris. Even to watch its devotees seems to amuse your true Parisian. A legend tells us that in the commune days, when the Hotel de Ville was fired on and a dark page written in the city's history, the Seine fishermen pursued their pastime, imperturbable. And the tale seems likely enough as the saunterer watches the fisher folk, whose leisure may be envied more than their occupation and who are found not on the city quays alone, but in the banlieu, where the Seine's green bank is dabbed with villages in brown and red and gray and where one stops to watch the peasants bathe their horses in the stream itself, rubbing them down soon afterward by the river's brink. Within the city there are the men who clip poodles on the quays and higher book and picture stalls with their merchants and shifting groups of bargain hunters—the Odeon arcade for new books, the riverside for old.—Scribner's Magazine.

ASTRONOMY.

Its Exactness Illustrated by the Discovery of Neptune.

There is perhaps no more striking illustration of the power of scientific method than that relating to the discovery of Neptune in 1846. The planet Uranus, until then the outermost known member of our solar system, refused to follow the path computed for it by mathematical astronomers. With the progress of time the discrepancies between its predicted and observed positions grew constantly larger until in the early eighteen-forties the discordance amounted to fully seventy-five seconds of arc. This is a small angle, not more than one-twenty-fifth the angular diameter of our moon, yet a very large angle to refined astronomy, for a discrepancy of two seconds would have been detected with ease. The opinion gradually developed that Uranus was drawn from its natural course by the attractions of an undiscovered planet still farther from the sun than itself. Adams in 1843 and Le Verrier in 1845 independently and each without knowledge of the other's plans attacked the then extremely difficult problem of determining the approximate orbit, mass and position of an undiscovered body whose attractions should produce the perturbations observed. Regrettable and avoidable delays occurred in searching for the planet after Adams' results were communicated to the astronomer royal in October, 1845. Le Verrier's results were communicated to the Berlin observatory in September, 1846, with the request that a search be made. The disturbing planet, later named Neptune, was found on the first evening that it was looked for less than one degree of arc from the position assigned by Le Verrier. If an energetic search had been made in England the year before the planet would have been discovered within two degrees of the position assigned by Adams.—Professor W. W. Campbell in Popular Science Monthly.

The Smuggled Box.

A joker had some fun with the customs officials at New York some years ago. A servant had gone ashore from a German liner with a basket and was about to leave the pier when a passenger whispered to a customs officer that he had better see what the basket contained. Following the tip, the basket bearer was detained, and a wooden box was found among a lot of soiled linen. The box contained another and this still another box, the third securely fastened with screws. When these were removed a card was discovered on which was written in three languages, "This is the 1st of April. Many happy returns of the day."

The Picture In Disguise.

Of the strange vicissitudes through which many of the world's famous pictures have passed perhaps none was odder than that of "The Picture In Disguise," a magnificent painting that now adorns the residence of Lord Leigh in Warwickshire, England. This remarkable picture for many years appeared to be merely a painting of flowers. The floral study was, however, finally pronounced by an astute art dealer to be in reality a mask for another painting. With the permission of the owner he caused the painting of flowers gradually to be removed, whereupon there was discovered underneath a very fine portrait of Charles I. by Van Dyck. While no authentic record of this masterpiece has been found, it is supposed that the portrait was disguised by some royalist in order to guard against its destruction by Roundheads during the revolution.—Boston Post.

A Lunatic's Repartee.

Some visitors were being shown through Kew Lunatic asylum, Victoria, one day, and, coming opposite the clock in the corridor, one of them, looking quickly at his watch, said, "Is that clock right?"

"No, you idiot," said a patient standing by. "It wouldn't be in here if it were right."

A Queer Eye.

An orator stated that "the worst enemy any cause can have is a double lie in the shape of half a truth," and the newspaper reported it "a double eye in the shape of half a tooth."

An Exception.

She—Do you suppose a man ever spoke the truth when he told a woman she was the only one he ever kissed? He—Well, I don't believe Adam lied about it to Eve.—Boston Transcript.

Tragic Tale of a Tragedian.

"The awfulest and the funniest stage wait I ever lived through," said a sprightly English actress, "was when a certain well known London actor manager, whose name I dare not divulge, was doing a tremendous curse scene on a darkened stage. He had the audience spellbound with his sonorous declamation, which, of course, they didn't know depended largely upon his ample mouthful of false teeth. At the very climax of his bloodcurdling maledictions the entire dental collection dropped out suddenly in the excitement of the moment and bounded into some obscure hiding place. The tragedian's mighty voice died down to an unintelligible mumble as he groped about frantically in search of the missing masticators. We were all too helpless from laughter to be of much help in this critical situation. At last, after what seemed like half an hour of the most hysterical suspense, the stage manager located the teeth with the aid of a dark lantern and restored them to the frantic star, who clapped them into his mouth and began cursing again with redoubled earnestness. I never knew what the audience thought, and no one ever dared to ask the actor manager."—New York World.

Quicksilver.

The ore from which quicksilver is obtained is a brilliant red rock known as cinnabar. When of high purity it is actually vermilion in color. Cinnabar is the original source of the pigment known commercially as vermilion. It is a compound of sulphur and quicksilver, and in order to separate the latter from the sulphur the rock is roasted. Passing off in the form of a gas, the mercury is afterward condensed and flows out in a fine stream, like a continuous pencil of molten silver. Like gold and silver, mercury is occasionally found in a native or pure state. Sometimes the miner's pick penetrates a cavity that contains a cupful or more of the elusive and beautiful fluid. Miners suffer much from the poisonous effects of the quicksilver fumes. Extreme cleanliness is the best safeguard for workers in this dangerous occupation. Use is also made of a sort of lemonade which serves to a certain extent as an antidote, a strong acid taking the place of lemon juice in the composition of the drink.

Must Keep the Curtains Up.

"In London it is strictly against the law for the driver of any public conveyance to allow the curtains of his vehicle to be pulled down," said a man who has visited the English metropolis. "By day or night the windows of cabs, hansoms, carriages, or what not, whether drawn by horses or propelled by electric power, must be so open to public inspection as to allow a plain view of those occupying the interior. A closed rig wouldn't get a block before a London bobby would nab its driver and hale him to a magistrate's office, where he would get no mercy. The law is based on the theory that closed vehicles lend themselves easily to the commission of robbery or murder and that they may also assist a criminal to make his escape."—Baltimore American.

The Gorgons.

The Gorgons were creatures of Greek mythology, mentioned by Homer and Euripides as being of peculiarly abhorrent aspect. Their hair was composed of serpents, their bodies covered with scales and girdled with reptiles with heads erect, vibrating their tongues threateningly, while the hands of the Gorgons, adorned with sharp talons, were of brass. The gaze of the monsters was deadly, all upon whom they fixed their eyes being turned to stone. One of the three terrible sisters was conquered and beheaded by Perseus, and as he took flight in the air en route for Ethiopia, holding the severed head in his hands, the drops of blood which fell from it became serpents, which ever after infested the sands of Lybia.—New York Telegram.

Avoided the Conventional.

"It is a wonderful story," says the publisher to the new author, whose manuscript has just been accepted, "but you have failed in one important feature. You do not describe the way the heroine was dressed when the hero first met her. You'd better write in a paragraph about her clothes, but try to avoid the conventional."

The ingenious author, knowing the sameness of costume descriptions in the best sellers and also knowing how to make an appeal to the feminine heart, wrote:

"Heloise floated toward him garbed in a $600 dress, a $250 hat, with a $98.75 mantilla over a $375 lace coat."—Chicago Post.

Sorry He Spoke.

He was very deferential, but he was a deacon in the church, and he felt that he had a right to criticise. "I hope you'll pardon me," he said, "if I suggest that your sermons are—ah—"

"Too prosy, I suppose?" suggested the minister.

"Oh, no, not that, but too long."

"But you mustn't blame me for that," returned the minister pleasantly. "If you knew a little more I wouldn't have to tell you so much."

Shaving.

When asked whether Napoleon shaved himself Talleyrand replied: "Yes. One born to be a king has some one to shave him, but they who acquire kingdoms shave themselves." Dionysius, the tyrant of Syracuse, not daring to commit himself to a barber's hands, is said to have singed his own beard with glowing walnut shells.

Pleasure once tasted satisfies less than the desire experienced for it torments.

Man With the Conundrum.

The man with the fretful eyebrows and the sorrowful ears comes to the desk of the man with the dispirited mustache and asks:

"Why is a man who goes on an expedition to discover the south pole and after many months of toil and privation during which he eats all his canned goods and half of his dogs and then returns to civilization with a fixed appetite for boot heels and hat brims—why is he like a woman who has been waiting impatiently since midnight for the sound of the latchkey as her husband endeavors to unlock the front door without awakening the entire neighborhood?"

The man with the discouraged mustache shakes his head impatiently, and the other repeats the question, whereupon the man with the discouraged mustache asks:

"What is the difference between a lady reading a hair restorer ad. and a man who asks fool questions when you are busy? Answer—Because they are both about ready to dye."

"Oh, very well!" snaps the man with the fretful eyebrows and the sorrowful ears. "The answer to mine is that both are getting ready to deliver a lecture, but I wouldn't tell you if you pleaded with tears in your eyes!"—Chicago Post.

TIRED ALL THE TIME.

Languor, listlessness, dullness of spirits are often due to kidney disorders. Pain and weakness in the back, sides and hips, headaches, dizziness, urinary disorders are sure signs that the kidneys need immediate attention.

Delay is dangerous. Alonzo Adams, Osceola, Iowa, says: "My kidneys failed me. I suffered awful pain and was so weak I could not work, and often had to take to bed. I was dull and exhausted nearly all the time. I consulted doctors and used medicines, but only Doan's Kidney Pills helped me. Soon I was permanently cured."

Remember the name—Doan's. For sale by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo., N. Y.

Girl's Head Encrusted—Feared Loss of All Her Hair—Baby Had Milk-Crust—Missionary's Wife Made

Two Perfect Cures by Cuticura.

"For several years my husband was a missionary in the Southwest. Every one in that high and dry atmosphere has more or less trouble with dandruff and my daughter's scalp became so encrusted with it that I was alarmed for fear she would lose all her hair. After trying various remedies, in desperation I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment. They left the scalp beautifully clean and free from dandruff, and I am happy to say that the Cuticura Remedies were a complete success. I have also used successfully the Cuticura Remedies for so-called 'milk-crust' on baby's head. Cuticura is a blessing. Mrs. J. A. Darling, 310 Fifth St., Carthage, Ohio, Jan. 20, 1908."

The Same Old John L.

Old John L. Sullivan always had a fine Irish wit, and it remains with him in his advanced age. Not long ago he was appearing in a Baltimore theater and the manager, for business reasons, introduced him to a wealthy youth of the town. The youth was a typical chollyboy, the sort of a specimen that old John abhors. Sullivan was washing his face in the theater dressing room when the two arrived, and they waited patiently until he had finished his ablutions. When John had dried his countenance he gave the dude one look, and then said to the manager: "Well, I congratulate you, Jack, is it a boy or a girl?"

Wanted to Defer the Petition.

A Los Angeles mother tells the following:

"One summer's eve my little son of six years was sent to bed at his usual time; but he could not sleep. Upon my inquiry what troubled him, he replied: " I can't finish my prayer. I've got as far as 'Forgive us our trespasses as' —but I can't get any further, for Howard licked me to-day and I want to lick him to-morrow.

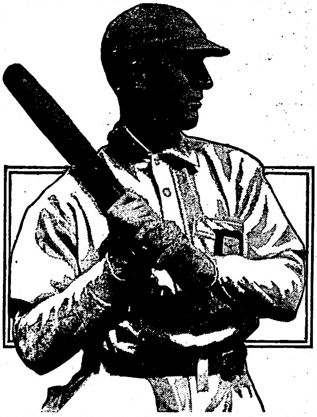
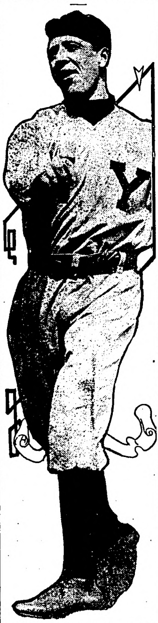
LEADER OF THE PITTSBURG PIRATES



Here is Fred Clarke, the pilot of the pirate crew from Pittsburg. Fred has been in the game a long while, but from the way he keeps up his speed it will be many moons before a youngster is selected to supplant him. Clarke has carried home several pennants for the Smoky City aggregation. It was under the late Billie Barnie, in the old Louisville days that Clarke made his entry into major league company. He soon succeeded Barnie as leader of the Colonels, and later, when the Pittsburg club bought out the Louisville franchise and merged both clubs, Clarke came to Pittsburg and has remained ever since, playing left field and managing the team.

Just now the Pittsburg clan is sailing along at the head of the National league race and the hustling manager has his men in good shape. Of course he has the able assistance of that mighty Dutchman, Hans Wagner, and my! what a bundle of assistance that big pretzel hunter is to Clarke. The latter says its the pennant for his this time, and he further avers that a world's championship goes with it. For he feels that his team will be able to trounce the Detroits, whom he picks to win the American league flag.

ONE OF THE GIANT TWIRLERS



Leon Ames has done acceptable work for the New York Giants in the box this season. While Ames has never been ranked as a star, he has developed into a first-rate twirler during the years he has been with the Giants.

Pulliam Back in Harness.

Harry Pulliam is again the directing head of the National league. After a leave of absence of six months the National league president has resumed his duties. When Pulliam appeared at his office in the St. Louis building in New York he was as brown as a berry and looked the picture of health. Though they had not given the information out in advance, the office assistants were expecting him. John Hoydler, who had been acting as president turned over everything to Pulliam and resumed his duties as secretary.

MOST BASEBALL PLAYERS ARE LIVING MODEL LIVES

High-Salaried Diamond Artists Realize That They Must Keep in Best of Condition.

The life of the average baseball player is as close to the model a good citizen should follow as can be. He is generally married, and, except when he is traveling, spends his spare time at home. On the road he is at his hotel most of the time when he is not at the baseball park. Once or twice a week, perhaps, he goes to the theater, but generally he spends the evening in the lobby of his hotel talking over baseball and other matters with members of his own team and friends who drop in to see him. Nine times out of ten he is in bed and asleep by 10:30 o'clock.

In the old days of baseball it used to be quite the thing for the star player to spend his nights in drinking with friends, basking in the geniality of popularity, and mixing in rowdy carousals. Such actions are a thing of the past.

Nowadays the baseball player is first of all a gentleman. No team will put up with a man that drinks excessively, save in rare cases. Now and then there is a man who can spend his evenings in hitting the high spots and then play good baseball the following day. Such men are few and far between, however. Most of those who try it discover that their careers as ball players in big-league company are short-lived.

It is a matter of common sense. The ball player knows he cannot do his best when he is not taking care of himself. If he does not know it the fans and his manager will point it out to him with unquestionable force. He knows that to hold a job on a big-league baseball team he must be in possession of the ability to use the best his brain and muscles contain. He can have this ability only by observing the best rules of life.

Furthermore, the baseball player in the last few years has come to realize better than ever before that when he is through with baseball he can expect nothing from the public that once applauded him, nor from the manager that once begged for his signature to a contract. He must take care of himself, and if he has not provided for the future during his days of success and money-making he is in a bad way.

There are probably no men receiving such high salaries who take such good care of their money and save so much of it as baseball players. Almost any well-known diamond star that has played in one of the big leagues for a number of years has usually laid by a big proportion of his salary, and when the inevitable time for his retirement comes he is in a position to take up some other business, or if he does not wish to do that at once he finds himself in circumstances easy enough to be free from care concerning the future for a number of years at least.

Umpire Cusack Loses Job.

John Heydler, acting president of the National league, has dismissed Umpire Cusack, whose work has been unsatisfactory. For the present the National league will go along with seven umpires, Johnstone working alone.

Doctor—Yes, I believe so.

Old Maid (resignedly)—O, then, doctor, you needn't call again.

The Happiest.

In the smoking-room of the Finland, discussing a June wedding, Andrew Carnegie said:

"And thank goodness it wasn't an international marriage, though the bride did have 18 millions.

"Not," appended Mr. Carnegie, "that I object to international marriages wherein the two parties are good and honorable and well matched. But so many of these marriages are like one that a Boston cynic described to me.

"'Was it a happy marriage?' I asked this Bostonian.

"'Oh, quite,' said he. 'The bride was happy, her mother was overjoyed. Lord Lacland was in ecstacies, and his creditors, I understand, were in a state of absolutely endless and uncontrollable bliss.'"

Time to Change Subject.

The Courier-Journal tells of this embarrassing statement made by a well-known Louisville woman who is known as "saying things without thinking." Her daughter was entertaining a young man on the front porch and the mother was standing at the fence talking to the neighbors next door. In the yard of the latter was a baby a little over a year old, and it was trying to walk. "You shouldn't let it walk so young," advised the thoughtless matron. "Wait until it's a little older. I let my daughter walk when she was about that age, and it made her bow-legged." The young man began to talk energetically about the weather.

Sex in Cromwells.

Of course with the sexes on a footing of equality as regarded opportunity, it would not be long until a female Cromwell made her appearance, and, having made her appearance, was getting her portrait painted.

The painter, once more a fawning, courtly fellow, would have the picture a flattery; but she rebuked him in words that became historic!

"Paint in the hips!" she commanded, sternly, showing that she could be more rigidly devoted to the truth than Oliver himself.—Puck.

ORIGIN

Of a Famous Human Food.

The story of the great discoveries or inventions is always of interest.

An active brain worker who found himself hampered by lack of bodily strength and vigor and could not carry out the plans and enterprises he knew how to conduct, was led to study various foods and their effects upon the human system. In other words, before he could carry out his plans he had to find a food that would carry him along and renew his physical and mental strength.

He knew that a food which was a brain and nerve builder (rather than a mere fat maker) was universally needed. He knew that meat with the average man does not accomplish the desired results. He knew that the soft gray substance in brain and nerve centers is made from Albumen and Phosphate of Potash obtained from food. Then he started to solve the problem.

Careful and extensive experiments evolved Grape-Nuts, the now famous food. It contains the brain and nerve building food elements in condition for easy digestion.

The result of eating Grape-Nuts daily is easily seen in a marked sturdiness and marked activity of the brain and nervous system, making it a pleasure for one to carry on the daily duties without fatigue or exhaustion.

Grape-Nuts food is in no sense a stimulant but is simply food which renews and replaces the daily waste of brain and nerves.

Its flavour is charming and being fully and thoroughly cooked at the factory it is served instantly with cream.

The signature of the brain worker spoken of, C. W. Post, is to be seen on each genuine package of Grape-Nuts.

DRAINAGE IS NOT AFFECTED

PORK BARREL DECISION WILL NOT PREVENT IMPROVEMENT.

SURVEYING THE ONLY QUESTION

State Engineer Ralph Confident That Court Rulings Settles the Matter.—Good News for Many Counties in State.

St. Paul.—There is absolutely no danger that the decision in the pork barrel case will tie up any of the state drainage work, according to George Ralph, engineer of the state drainage commission. In proof he points to several decisions of the supreme court covering the point. The only thing which has not yet been tested is the topographical survey, which the state and the federal government are co-operating in making, but Mr. Ralph cannot see how a survey can be called a work of internal improvement. "If that is prohibited by the constitution, I do not see how the state can do any work of any kind," said Mr. Ralph yesterday.

Decisions Are Cited.

The drainage laws of the state, codified and annotated by W. J. Brown of Warren, have been published just a few days. The book cites a number of decisions of the court on the constitutionality of the drainage laws, and in the case of Rippe vs. Becker, 56 Minn., 100, the court says that "works of internal improvement as used in the constitution means any kind of public works except those used by the state in the performance of its governmental functions, the preservation of the public health," etc.

Drainage ditches are nearly always held to be necessary for the preservation of public health, and that is the saving clause which prevents them from coming under the class of internal improvements which the state is forbidden by the constitution to take part in.

In the case of Lien vs. Board of County Commissioners, 80 Minn., 56, the court said that "the authority of the legislature to enact drainage laws is derived from the police power, the right of eminent domain or the taxing power, and is undoubted."

Holds Appropriation Legal.

In the same case the court held that the purpose of a ditch must be public, but it is not necessary in order to constitute a public use that the whole community or any large portion thereof should participate in the use, or that all should be equally benefited. The benefits may be limited to the inhabitants of a small locality.

In the case of Utick vs. County Board of Polk county the court said the benefit to highways is sufficient public use to sustain the taking of private land for public use.

In most cases the money expended by the state for drainage is only to pay for the benefits to state's land, but in an opinion last October Attorney General Young upheld the spending of money by the state in drainage in cases when no state land is involved on the theory that the police power of the state is involved.

MILWAUKEE TO BUILD CUT-OFF.

Proposed Line Will Extend Straight From Camp Douglas to Sparta.

La Crosse.—To build a new line of tracks from Camp Douglas, north of the present tracks, to Tunnel City, through a tunnel half a mile long, and then crossing the Milwaukee tracks overhead and running parallel with them to Sparta is said to be the intention of the Milwaukee road which has surveyors at work. This route would give a straight route to Sparta, La Crosse and other points and, it is said, will result in making Camp Douglas the junction of the North-Western, Omaha and Milwaukee roads, meaning the abandonment of Elroy as a junction. Trouble with the tunnel near Elroy is assigned as one of the reasons for the cut-off.

SNELLING GETS NEW BUILDINGS.

Officers' Quarters Probably Will Be First to Be Constructed.

Washington, D. C.—That there will be some important construction work at Fort Snelling is indicated as a result of a visit of Representative Stevens to the war department today, when he saw Secretary Dickinson, Quartermaster General Aleshire and other officers. Several sets of officers' quarters will be authorized and the quartermaster's storehouse and stables will be extended. Officers at the post especially are cramped for room, and they will be taken care of first in the new construction.

SPANISH VETERANS MEET

Hugo V. Koch, of St. Paul, Elected Department Commander

St. Paul.—Hugo V. Koch of St. Paul was re-elected commander of the Minnesota Department of the United Spanish War Veterans at the fifth annual encampment, which opened a two days' session at the old capitol building. About 50 delegates from Minneapolis, St. Paul, Fort Snelling, Faribault, Red Wing, Fergus Falls, Duluth, Winona and Waseca answered the roll call.

Other officers elected were: L. H. Dibble, Faribault, senior vice commander; M. J. Murray, Duluth, junior vice commander; A. J. Rick, Winona, inspector; J. W. Finehout, St. Paul, judge advocate; Dr. L. French, Duluth, surgeon general; R. L. McKinnion, Minneapolis, chaplin; G. Koschel, Winona, marshal; G. Kern, Winona, J. Flynn, St. Paul, L. M. Caney, Faribault, L. G. Peterson, Minneapolis, J. F. Gibson, Duluth, F. H. Erickson, Red Wing, H. A. Pangram, Waseca, William Evans, Fergus Falls, and Sidney Fry, Fort Snelling, members of the council of administration.

Commander Koch appointed J. W. Haines adjutant, and Daniel Pettigrew quartermaster for the ensuing year. H. G. Brant of St. Paul, was installing officer, and Samuel Skoog, master of ceremonies.

Faribault was chosen as the next convention city. Mayor D. W. Lawler welcomed the delegates to the city.

Ladies' Auxiliary Convenes.

The second annual convention of the ladies' auxiliary of the United Spanish War Veterans opened at the same time. Isis B. Olson, St. Paul, national aide of the association, opened the meeting. A. J. Rick, Winona, and J. W. Haines, St. Paul, carried the greetings of the war veterans. About 30 delegates were present.

Miss Dora Brant St. Paul, was elected national aide for the coming year, and Miss Grace F. Murray, Duluth, state secretary. The council of administration election resulted as follows: Mrs. Dora Pohlman, Winona; Miss Mabel French, Duluth, and Miss Wilhelmina Anderson, St. Paul.

ARMOUR MAY BUILD TANNERY.

New York Report Says Packers Dominate the Leather Industry.

Minneapolis.—Within a year from the commencement of work on the immense abattoirs and packing plant of Armour & Co. at New Brighton, the construction of a great tanning works will be taken up.

This is the story which comes from Chicago via New York. The New York Journal of Commerce says it is simply part of the plan of the American packers to control the leather and shoe manufacturing industry of the United States. In commenting thereon the Journal says further:

"By ownership and control and by contracts the beef packers have become so dominant in the sole leather tanning business that it is difficult to locate independent tanneries. More than 30 tanneries are now said to be under Armour, Swift and Morris control.

"It is only a question of time when the monopoly of leather by the packing companies will be complete."

The establishment of a leather tanning plant at Minneapolis, it is said, is simply a part of the plan for securing complete control of the leather business. Tanneries will be located elsewhere as well to complete with the independent companies.

JOHNSON MAY HAVE OPERATION.

Ill From Recurrence of Trouble Left by an Operation.

St. Paul—Governor John A. Johnson may be compelled to go upon the operating table for a third time. While his condition is not critical, it is serious, and his friends are worried.

The governor is averse to taking this step unless it shall be absolutely necessary.

Governor Johnson's trouble dates a long time back when he was operated upon for appendicitis. Since then he has undergone a second operation for troubles growing out of the original ailment. He has had recurring periods of the trouble. During the last campaign the exertion undergone by him seemed to have been too severe, and the recurrences of the trouble have been more numerous, one of them especially severe occurring during the session of the legislature last winter.

The governor believes he will be able to go to Seattle July 27.

Contract Let.

Park Rapids.—The contract for putting in the extensions to the waterworks system and laying the mains across the river has been secured by W. I. Gray & Co., of Minneapolis. The extensions must be completed and a new and larger pump put in before freezing weather.

PAPERS BARE DEATH SECRET

SENSATIONAL DISCLOSURES IN BANKER SAYLER'S DOCUMENTS.

Contents of Packet Left by Dr. Miller's Victim Inspected by His Brothers.

Crescent City, Ill. — Contents of the private packet left by the late Banker J. R. Sayler, opened Thursday, are said to be of a startling nature. According to W. R. Nightingale, who was present when the secret papers were read by brothers of the decedent, the contents, which he refused to divulge, have a direct bearing on the killing of Mr. Sayler by Dr. W. L. Miller last Sunday.

"We can't give what we found to the public, at least not now," said Mr. Nightingale. "I will say, however, that it is evidence which will prove of value to the prosecution of Dr. Miller, who is charged with murder, and of Mrs. Sayler, charged with being an accessory."

As soon as the contents of the packet were learned by Thomas and Willis Sayler, brothers of the late banker, and Mr. Nightingale, State's Attorney Pallissard, at Watseka, was notified by long-distance telephone. He secured a horse and buggy and came at top speed to this village.

The fourth and final bullet fired at Mr. Sayler was found in the dining room of his late home. Three were previously found in the body. The fourth was embedded in the southeast corner of the room.

Watseka, Ill.—The county jail is still under a strong guard to prevent an attack on Dr. William L. Miller, slayer of J. B. Sayler, the Crescent City banker, whose funeral Wednesday was attended by thousands. Miller has written to his wife urging her to come to him at once and she is expected Friday.

A dispatch from Blairsville, Pa., quoting Mrs. Miller as having forgiven her husband and only awaiting his summons to fly to his aid was received simultaneously with a private message from Mrs. Miller to Sheriff Heikes of the same import.

SNELL INSANE, SAYS JURY.

Decides the Clinton Millionaire Was Incompetent to Make a Will—Another Appeal Likely.

Clinton, Ill. — The jury in the contested will case of the late Col. Thomas Snell returned a verdict last night finding that Col. Snell was not competent to make a will. The estate is valued at $1,500,000.

Col. Snell made only a few bequests, leaving the estate in trust until the death of all his children and grandchildren. It then was to be distributed among his great-grandchildren and their heirs. The will was contested by his son, Richard Snell, a banker of Clinton, who was cut off with $50 in the will. The first trial resulted in a disagreement. At the second trial the jury returned a verdict breaking the will, but the supreme court set aside the verdict on the ground that improper evidence was allowed to go to the jury. It is announced that the case will again be appealed to the higher courts.

Quake Kills 300 Persons.

London. — Special dispatches received here from Athens say that 300 persons were killed or injured by the earthquake that occurred in the province of Elis, in southern Greece. The damage to property also was very great. Hot water is flowing from many of the springs in the stricken district, while the water in the rivers and brooks has turned a reddish color.

BATH HISTORICAL PAGEANT.

Great Celebration Is Begun in the Ancient English City—Illinois Girl Taking Part.

Bath, England.—Victoria park, the beauty spot of this ancient city, was a scene of splendor Monday when the great historical pageant was opened. People from all parts of the United Kingdom were present, as well as many from other lands. But the guests who attracted the most attention were the young women who have been sent here from nearly every town in the world that was named Bath after this, the mother city. Among these young women was Miss May Sisson, who represents Bath, Ill., and whose mother was born in Bath, N. Y.

Another American woman taking part in the ceremonies is Mrs. Spencer Trask of New York city, the author of "King Alfred's Jewel." This dramatic poem was so admired that Mrs. Trask was invited to write verses in honor of the American towns named Bath, and did so, adding a peace hymn for both countries.

The pageant will last six days, and includes eight episodes, from which will be gained an idea of the range of history of the city, extending back to the British King Bladud, who ruled before the Romans established on the Avon river the town they called Aqua Solis, "waters of the sun."

In the pageant the lesser king, Richard Nash, whose management of the bathrooms gave to Bath of the eighteenth century precedence over the other fashionable resorts, Epsom Harrowgate and Scarborough, is not subordinate in interest even to King Bladud, King Edgar, Henry VII., Queen Elizabeth or Queen Charlotte, for the seventh episode is devoted to the "Glorious Time of Beau Nash and Ralph Allen, 1752."

CHINESE MASONS HIDE LING

Empire Approves Protection of Slayer of Elsie Sigel, According to Denver Orientals.

Denver, Col. — That Leon Ling, slayer of Elsie Sigel in New York, never will be found through the assistance of his countrymen or the Chinese government is stated by Chinese here. His protection, it is said, was approved by the empire after the report of the consul at New York had been received.

A Chinese newspaper, having the unofficial sanction of the Chinese government, has reached Denver, in which the report of the Chinese consul in New York is printed in full.

This report followed an investigation made by the consul at the direction of the authorities at Peking. The report after citing the facts of the case as generally known, states that it has been discovered that Elsie Sigel, fearing disgrace, went to Leon Ling's room seeking aid, and in a moment of desperation took her own life by poison. Ling, the report states, was absent at the time and found the dead body of the girl upon the bed upon his return. Frightened by the discovery, he called Chung Sing, says the report, who advised him that, should he tell the truth to the police regarding the finding of the body he would not be believed and probably would be lynched. Frightened by this view of the case, Ling adopted desperate efforts to dispose of the body and conceal his own whereabouts.

SULTAN AHMED MIRZA ASCENDS PERSIAN THRONE WHEN FATHER FLEES.

VICTORY FOR NATIONALISTS

Ruler a Minor and Azad Ul Mulk Is Proclaimed Regent — Dethroned Monarch Refugee in Russian Legation, Protected by Czar's Troops.

Teheran.—The war of the Nationalists for a new rule in Persia was perfected Saturday when the crown prince, Sultan Ahmed Mirza, who was proclaimed shah Friday, was placed on the throne abdicated by Mohamed Ali. It is now believed the fighting will cease.

Mohamed Ali has taken refuge in the Russian summer legation at Zerzende where he is under the protection of detachments of Cossacks and Sepoys, dispatched to Zerzende by the Russian and British diplomatic representatives.

The new shah is yet in his minority, and Azard ul Mulk, head of the Kajar family, has been appointed regent. Sipahdar, one of the most active leaders of the movement, has taken office as minister of war, and governor of Teheran. Gen. Liakhoff, through whose negotiations with the Nationalists the surrender was effected, was escorted by mounted Bakhtiari riflemen to the parliament building and was greeted with loud applause by the people. He was informed that he might remain temporarily in command of the Cossack brigade provided he strictly obeyed the orders of the war minister. This arrangement was communicated to the British and Russian legations.

The shops and private houses occupied by the shah's soldiers have been plundered and the residence of the manager of the Indo-European Telegraph Company has been looted.

St. Petersburg.—The Russian foreign office received a dispatch Friday night from M. Sabelin, charge d'affaires at Teheran, saying the shah had taken refuge at the Russian summer legation at Zerzende. The shah was accompanied by his wife and one of his sons and a small party of loyal adherents, and his action was in accordance with an arrangement previously worked out by the Russian and British legations.

M. Sabelin immediately informed the British diplomatic representative of the shah's arrival and a convoy of Sepoys was forthwith dispatched to Zerzende. During the shah's stay at that place protection will be furnished by a joint detachment of Cossacks and Sepoys.

The full strength of the Russian expedition is now at Kasvin and, if necessary, the cavalry could get to Teheran in two days. The foreign office is under the impression that a detachment probably will be required, not so much to protect the shah or to oppose the Bakhtiari tribesmen as to handle the street mobs and the Teheran rabble, which is bent on pillage. The troops inevitably will be sent in if a single Russian is killed or if a foreign mission requests protection. In this event the role of the troops would be confined to police duties. Both the Russian officers and the officials of the Russian legation at Teheran have been enjoined to remain strictly neutral in internal affairs.

THREE KILLED IN COLLISION

Open Switch Is Responsible for Wreck on C. & E. I. Railroad Near Champaign, Ill.

Champaign, Ill. — Three men were killed and two injured in a head-on collision between south-bound passenger train No. 23 and north-bound train No. 26 on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois railroad at Royal, near here, yesterday.

The dead:

W. E. Barker, engineer, Chicago.

Nelson Paulson, fireman, Villa Grove.

F. H. Hollenbeck, express messenger, Chicago.

An open switch was responsible for the wreck. Passenger train No. 26 was on the siding to permit No. 23 to pass. The latter took the switch traveling at the rate of 50 miles an hour. The impact was terrific. Engine No. 23 was smashed and the front end of the express car was crushed like an eggshell. The damage to the engine of No. 26 was small and the express car on the south-bound train was the only one to leave the track. Aside from a severe shaking up the passengers on both trains escaped without injury.

$100,000 Short in Accounts.

New Orleans.—Wyatt H. Ingram, Jr., trust officer of the Hiberian Bank & Trust Company of New Orleans, was arrested Wednesday evening on charges of being a defaulter and forger.

It is alleged that he is between $75,000 and $100,000 short in his accounts.

SURPRISED AT THE SCHEDULE

Colored Man Felt He Was Being Railroaded Into the Class of "High Financiers."

A colored man was tried the other day before a Charlestown court for stealing some clothes from a young white man. A pretty clear case was made out against the colored man and he confessed.

"I reckon I ain't got nothin' to say, white folks," he said with humility, "'ceptin' hit's jes laik it is."

"Well, since you admit your guilt," said the judge, "I will try to make it light for you. But first we will have to get an estimate of the value of the clothing. Mr. Plaintiff, what do you value these articles at?"

"The dress suit cost me $80, your honor," replied the young man, "the overcoat $75 and the silk hat $10."

"Mr. Jedge," broke in the accused, "I'd lak ter say des one word befo' you goes any fudder."

"All right; go ahead."

"I submit dat I tuk dem clo'es, boss man, but at no sich prices as dem!"

TOLD TO USE CUTICURA.

After Specialist Failed to Cure Her Intense Itching Eczema—Had Been Tortured and Disfigured But

Was Soon Cured of Dread Humor.

"I contracted eczema and suffered intensely for about ten months. At times I thought I would scratch myself to pieces. My face and arms were covered with large red patches, so that I was ashamed to go out. I was advised to go to a doctor who was a specialist in skin diseases, but I received very little relief. I tried every known remedy, with the same results. I thought I would never get better until a friend of mine told me to try the Cuticura Remedies. So I tried them, and after four or five applications of Cuticura Ointment I was relieved of my unbearable itching. I used two sets of the Cuticura Remedies, and I am completely cured. Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

Give the people a chance to vote before we have anymore sessions of the legislature, for we had enough of the present gang, last winter.

We have one of the best counties in northern Minnesota for dairying and mixed farming, and it is getting to be time for us to let the other fellows know it, by a good exhibition of our products, at the state and county fairs.

Both Senator Nelson and Clapp represented the people of Minnesota in their vote against the Aldrich tariff bill, and Should President Taft sign the bill, Minnesota will be in the doubtful colum in the next presidential campaign.

There is some talk over the state of holding a special sesssion of the state legislature next winter. —Norman County Index.

Oh for hevens sake cut out that kind of talk! We understand all the "pork barrel" members of the last legislature got hone safe and sound, if they did leave their pork behind them, and it is best to let them stay at home.

The Supreme Court by a unanimous vote knocked out the $000,000 for roads. This ought to be an eye opener to our sleeping legislature and becking govenor. This ends the fight, and with it ends the political career of the legislators, who by it legislated themselves out of the public lime light forever. We feel comforted in knowing it is no loss —Olberg Journal

Our County Commissioners has appropriated the sum of $500,00 to cover the expense of making a Red Lake county exhibit at the state fair. This is certainly a move in the right direction, and the farmers of the county should take an an active interest in getting samples of their best farm products to mayor Duffy, at Red Lake Fals, who will see to it that they are taken proper care of and placed on exhibit at the state fair to the credit of you and Red Lake County.

Rounded Them Up.

Editor Quist, of The Thief River Press is justly indignant at the socialist of that city, who got rounded up by the Tri-State Telephone company and voted against public ownership, and for corporation ownership, and it only took the Tri State Telephone company half of a day to round them up." The Press says: "There is a great big question mark in the minds of some of the ocal socialialis are eligible to membership in the state or national party when for some unknown, petty reasons they will cast aside the very fundamental principals on which their party is founded."

Now Mr. Quist quit your kicking; can't you let the socialists have a little fun? Just stop and consider that they campaign the year around for their party, except about four or five days, just before election, which they devote to having a good time, then vote, the republican, or democratic ticket and go back to their old jobs, and the socialist party. The Thief River Falls socialists seems to be easy, when they only had to use a half a day on them. Down in the big cities it takes from three to five days to round them up proper, depending somewhat on the groath of the socialist movement among the farmers, which only has a tendancy to shorten or lengther the good time just before election, depending on how many of them are needed. This is the bad feature about socialism. If a corporation, or any individlal want any assistance to work a slick scheme on the public, they call on the socialist party, and it seems that party promptly responded, at Thief River Falls.

Charles Hawtrey's Twang.

"Once on a time"—it is Charles Hawtrey who tells this tale—"I tried to sink my identity in the part of a man who was my dearest friend. I had known him since he was a baby. I wanted to sink my own identity and copy him. I was not allowed to. This is how it happened:

"De Wolf Hopper had put on in London a burlesque of a play in which Mrs. Langtry and myself were acting. Some one burlesqued me, of course. He had merely a few lines to say, but he did it very well. It so happened that on the night it was produced I was not acting. So I strolled round to Hopper's theater and suggested to him that I should take the part myself that night. The idea of parodying oneself seemed to me rather original. He consented, and on I went just in dress clothes, as the character called for. It was a great success, all except the identification. I lost that, but not enough. The London Times came out the next morning with the following:

"'The resemblance to Mr. Hawtrey was certainly remarkable and would have been more so had it not been for the pronounced American accent.'

"That was the first and last time I have ever been accused of a twang."—New York Tribune.

Sixteenth Century Meals.

Judging from a passage in Harrison's "Description of Britain," breakfast eating in the sixteenth century was held to denote effeminacy. "Heretofore," he writes, "there hath beeu more time spent in eating and drinking than commonly is in these days; for whereas of old we had breakfasts in the forenoon, beverages or nuntions after dinner, and thereto reare suppers when it was time to go to rest, now these od repasts, thanked be God, are verie well left, and ech one (except here and there some young hungrie stomach that cannot fast till dinner time) contenteth himself with dinner and supper onlie. The nobilitie, gentrie and students ordinarilie go to dinner at 11 before noon and to supper at 5 or between 5 and 6 at afternoon. The merchants dine and sup seldom before 12 at noon and 6 at night, especialle in London. The husbandmen dine also at high noon and sup at 7 or 8, but out of the tearme, in our universities, the scholars dine at 10."

Saved by His Wit.

The French author Martainville was a royalist and did not hesitate to attack the French revolution and its authorities. Presently, of course, he was summoned to appear before the revolutionary tribunal, with the terrible Fouquier at its head. The revolutionary tribunals at that time did not hesitate to send everybody to the guillotine who had ventured to attack them. Martainville expected to go with the rest of the victims. "What is your name?" asked the revolutionary judge. "Martainville," said the young author. "Martainville!" exclaimed the judge. "You are deceiving us and trying to hide your rank. You are an aristocrat, and your name is De Martainville." "Citizen president," exclaimed the young man, "I am here to be shortened, not to be lengthened! Leave me my name!" A true Frenchman loves a witticism above all things, and the tribunal was so much pleased by Martainville's grim response that it spared his life.

The Krakatoa Eruption.

Perhaps the most remarkable volcanic eruption known was that which took place in August, 1883, at the island of Krakatoa, in the strait of Sunda. Streams of volcanic dust were thrown seventeen miles high, and more than a cubic mile of material was expelled from the volcanic crater. The air waves started by the eruption traveled around the earth seven times. The noise was heard at Madura, 963 miles away; at Borneo, 1,116 miles distant; in Western Australia, 1,700 miles away, and even at Rodrigues, distant more than 2,000 miles. The dust and powdered pumice thrown out of the crater made the entire circuit of the earth before settling down and were the cause of the strange sunsets that were observed for many months.—New York American.

Venetian Coffee Houses.

The first cup of coffee was drunk in Europe at Venice toward the end of the sixteenth century. The Venetian chronicler Morosini in his records of the events in the year 1585 mentions the beverage called "cavee" drunk by the Turks and noted for its anti-soporific qualities. In the year 1591 a Venetian doctor introduced the berries from Egypt, taught his countrymen how to crush them and brew the beverage, and the use of coffee soon became general—so much so, in fact, that Venice was full of coffee houses where the people idled away their days drinking the aromatic beverage. A peculiarity of the Venetian coffee houses was that their patrons did not pay for each cup of coffee they drank, but settled their bills for all the coffee consumed at the end of each year. The regular price of a cup of coffee was 5 soldi, about 2½ cents, and in some of the old cafes of Venice today the same price is still charged.—New York Sun.

Awkward Compliment.

There is such a thing as being too persistently complimentary. A candid and well meaning professor who had witnessed the performance of a little play in a private house in which his hostess had taken the leading part met the lady as she came from behind the curtain.

"Madam," he said, rushing up to her, "you played excellently. That part fits you to perfection."

"Oh, no, professor," said the lady modestly. "A young and pretty woman is needed for that part."

"But, madam," persisted the professor, "you have positively proved the contrary!"—Pearson's Weekly.

Starboard and Port.

Why do the sailors call the right hand side of the ship "starboard" and the left hand "port?" For the answer it is necessary to go back to the days of the Norsemen and Saxons. In the viking ships the warriors hung the "bords," or shields, on the side of the ship above the places for their oars. The viking himself held the steer oar, which was fastened to the right hand side of the stern. Thus the right hand side of the ship became known as the steer side, and as the bords of the warriors were hung there it was called the "steerbord," or starboard side, while the lower, or lurking side, became the larboard. Bord eventually became corrupted into Blamed the Planets.

In the middle of the fourteenth century in Paris a new ordinance enjoining the cleansing of the streets and the shutting up of swine was carefully neglected, as usual, and a terrible plague was the consequence. The faculty of medicine, called upon for a remedy by the king, sent to inform him after long discussion that the plague was the result of a hostile conjunction of the planets Mars and Jupiter.

A Question of Color.

The enormous difficulties of color terminology are illustrated by a customer's "exact statement of her requirements" in a large Deansgate establishment one day. "Something in blue taffeta silk, please. I don't want anything as dark as navy blue nor anything as light as Cambridge blue, but something darker than Eton blue and yet a little off from an electric blue and hardly a sky blue—more like a robin's egg blue and yet not quite so light, but not an indigo blue, but something like this tint; I think they call it morning glory blue, which is something like a turquoise blue and yet not quite so light as that and yet not so dark quite as this aquamarine blue nor so light as baby blue. Now, if you have anything in the shade I have described, please show it to me." The intelligent assistant unrolled a length, a cross between the blue devils and the deep sea, with the remark: "This is the shade of blue you require, madam. It is called 'London milk!'"—Dyer and Calico Printer.

The Oriental Mind.

Frederic S. Isham, the author, told the following to illustrate the double dyed duplicity of the oriental mind. Mr. Isham was in Pekin. Passing the arch to the Baron von Kettler, supposed to be an arch of contrition for the foul assassination of that brave official, the novelist asked a Chinaman who spoke a little English:

"You know why this monument was erected, I suppose?"

"Oh, yes," was the ready reply in dialect, "to commemorate a triumphal deed, the death of a very powerful foreigner!"

"Commemorate! And is that"—in amazement—"what the people generally think was the purpose of this monument?"

"Why not?" The Celestial's face was immovable, but a suggestion of sardonic humor seemed to flash from his slant eyes. "Chinese people much likee monument."

And, indeed, they seemed to bask in the shade of it with much satisfaction.

We had our worst rain and storm of the season on Monday last, which did some damage to crops and a goodeal to hay. There was no hail in this locality, but the heavy rain and strong wind laid nearly all the grain flat on the ground, but a [illegible] wind yesterday has straightend up most all of it.

The past week has seen the distruction of thousands of tons of hay, which has been a great damage to the farmers of the county. Last week the weather was unfavorable for drying hay and the farmers kept the mowers going, expecting to have fine weather to put up the hay this this week, but a heavy rain on Sunday night and a flood on Monday afternoon completly soaked all hay that was cut, whetner in stack or otherwise and has so badly damaged it that a large part of it is entirely ruind.

On last Saturday morning Mr. George Singer, the Rhoda dairy man attended an auction sale in the south part of the township. but before leaving home ih the morning he started his two hired men to stacking hay. On his return home at night he found the men had worked good and hard and put up a stack of hay 90 feet long, 22 feet wide and about 6 feet high, which was in fine condition to catch its full share of Sunday and Monday's heavy rain storm. We have no record of the Saturday night storm at Rhoda, but understand the two men were looking for new jobs of building hay stacks the next morning.

Our school district did not hold any anual school meeting on last Saturday evening. as there was no qucrum present. This means that if there is no one takes an enough interest in having school in the district to call a special school meeting, that we will have no school this year. It is doubtful if it would be of any use to call a special meeting for every voter in the district would be likely to say, "there will be enough of them there, no use for me to go," and of course that means that there will be no one there. It is up to the people that have children to go, Do you want school, or not?

NOTICE: There will be a Special school meeting held at the school house, on Saturday evening July 31st, at 7 o'clock p. m. If there is no voters attends this meeting it means no school this year, in this district.

CLEARWATER LOCALS.

Everybody is busey haying now days.

Mrs. Ramstad, from Minoit, is visiting with the family of Mrs. S. Legvold.

The Ladies Aid Societ will meet at Mrs. R. N. Fores the last Wednesday in July. All are welcome.

Quite a few people were taking in the sights at the ball game Sunday.

Mr. A. Rolandson went down to the city of Crookston on Monday, for a witness, for Christ anb Benhard Lindberg, to make final proof on ther homesteads.

Mrs G. Underdahl was the guest of Mrs. A. Brekka, on Sunday last.

Those who attended the Coleman circus from this locality, were Miss Nellie Short, Miss Ida M. Lillo and Miss Anniebell Rolandson.

William Lindberg is working for Con Short during the haying season.

Mrs Bernhar Lindberg went to Crookston Monday for a few days visit with friends and relatives.

Servites will be held at the schoo house by Knut Ericksons, on Sunday July 25t, at 11 o'clock a.m. by Rev. skan, pastor.

Mr. German Underdahl is visiting with Deer Park friends this week.

There was quite an excitement on Monday afternoon, cause by the little five year old daughter of John Gunderson getting lost, while out picking berries with her brothers. The entire neighborhood was out serching for her, and at last she was found by Martin Solum. about a mile from home, and restored her safe to her parents.

And He Did.

"I believe we are all ready," said the young man who was about to officiate as the bridegroom.

"All right I will join you in a moment," replied the clergyman, rising.—Chicago Tribune.

Locations of Promotion.

Elzena, aged four, reveled in kindergarten lore and each day imparted to her young mother the many interesting things that the sweet faced teacher had told them. Among the vicissitudes of school life to be encountered was that of vaccination, which was new to the little one. After much explaining and reassuring this difficulty was safely passed. A few weeks later she returned one day from kindergarten in a whirl of excitement, exclaiming: "Mother, mother, I'm going to be promoted! Mother, will I be promoted on my arm or my leg?"—New York Times.

An Earl's Duel With a Butler.

About the middle of the last century the Lord Rosebery of that time was in Paris, and in paying a call one day he was received so rudely by the butler that he complained to his friend of the servant's conduct. But the butler had been a noncommissioned officer in the French army, and as such he challenged Lord Rosebery to a duel. The earl accepted, and two shots were exchanged without result. But Lord Rosebery was angered at his own condescension and afraid his antagonist might lay aside his military rank and resume his duties as a servant, thus exposing an earl to the reproach of having fought with a butler. So he settled an annuity of £250 on the man on condition he did not return to domestic service. The condition was faithfully observed on both sides.

ARAGO'S NOSE.

It Was Enormous In Size, but It Was Safely Anchored.

Emmanuel Arago, the French politician, was a nephew of the noted astronomer and was considered a handsome man, although his nose was extremely conspicuous. At one time he was traveling by train to Versailles when a child who was in the same car and who had watched Arago for some time with dilated eyes began to cry. In vain did the child's mother endeavor to calm the perturbed juvenile. The poor mother was in despair, and as the shrieks grew more and more piercing Arago felt bound to interfere and see what he could do. He said to the child:

"What ails you, my dear?"

Thus addressed, the child sobbed out, "Take off your nose."

Arago looked at the mother, who grew very confused and said:

"Ah, monsieur, excuse me—excuse my son."

"But, madame," said Arago, "what does he mean?"

The mother then explained that she had during the carnival taken her child to see a number of persons in masks and with false noses and he had become so excited that he could thing of nothing else.

"By an unfortunate occurrence," she added, "we got into the same carriage as you, who no doubt for some good reason are prolonging the carnival. But you see what a deplorable result has followed. Let me then beg of you to have pity on a poor mother and take off your nose."

"But, madame," said Arago, stupefied.

"A little more and my child will have convulsions," shrieked the mother. "Take off your false nose."

"But, madame," said Arago in despair, "that is impossible. This is not a false nose, but my own!"

"Impossible, impossible!" cried the agonized lady.

"Touch it," said Arago.

The lady gave a pull at Arago's nose, but it did not come off in her hand, as she had expected.

"A thousand pardons," she said, "but pray—oh, pray, hide it with your hat."

So Arago continued his journey with his nose in his hat, and the child's screams gradually subsided. Arago himself used to tell the story with much glee.

ROLE OF THE COCOANUT.

The Staff of Life to the Natives of Sea Washed Island.

It is more than a coincidence that the tree which furnishes a greater amount of available material to man than any other in the vast kingdom of vegetables is the first to spring up on the bare rocks of the newly arisen coral reef. The cocoanut, so formed that it may have floated halfway across the Pacific, is thus universally distributed throughout tropical islands.

It thrives best near the sea, seldom penetrating far into the interior. Its hard shell is a coat of mail for the embryo plant, enabling it to stand hard usage for a protracted period and locking up securely the precious life in miniature.

The fibrous husk which envelops it and is seldom seen on the market on account of the greatly increased bulk breaks the jar which would be inevitable should the hard nut fall unprotected from the tall tree to the ground sixty or ninety feet below.

Such a blow would scarcely fail to break the shell, occasioning the loss of the nourishing milk so necessary to the germ. The outer husk not only breaks the jar of a fall, but buoys it up on the water, while the tough outer cuticle is waterproof.

Thus is the tree which offers to man almost in the raw state all his necessities freely scattered where the warm seas and their borders offer a footing, and from it the humble native secures sugar, milk, butter, wine, vinegar, oil, candles, soap, cups, ladles, cordage, matting, thatch for roof and material for raiment, combining food, clothing and shelter in a single gift, continually making waste places habitable.—New Age.

Building Up a Speech.

Before making a speech Charles Dickens would decide on his various heads and then in his mind's eye liken the whole subject to the tire of a cart wheel, he being the hub. From the hub to the tire he would run as many spokes as there were subjects to be treated, and during the progress of the speech he would deal with each spoke separately, elaborating them as he went round the wheel, and when all the spokes dropped out one by one and nothing but the tire and space remained he would know that he had accomplished his task and that his speech was at an end.

Doing It.

Old Lady (to grocer's boy)—Don't you know that it is very rude to whistle when dealing with a lady?

Boy—That's what the guv'nor told me to do, mum.

"Told you to whistle?"

"Yes'm. He said if we ever sold you anything we'd have to whistle for the money."—London Fun.

Running Conversation.

Collector (angrily)—You know very well, sir, that this bill has been running several years. Now, I put it up to you, what do you want me to do with it? Debtor—By George, I'd enter it in the next Marathon race if I were you!—Puck.

What Did He Mean?

"Yes; I believe that every intelligent woman should have a vote."

"But, senator, I understand that you were opposed to women's suffrage?"

"I am."—Judge.

Nature as a Designer.

Not the least mysterious of all the wonders of the earth is the extraordinary cleverness of Dame Nature as a carver and designer. Her tools are air, rain, rivers, springs and frost. Any one who has ever seen the marvelous Queen Bess rock on the north Cornish coast, that wonderful presentment of Queen Elizabeth, who is seated so grandly upon the sands, must have asked himself the question as to how much a thing could have been accomplished. Continuous trickling of water wears away the face of the rock. Haphazard it was until at last a weird pattern is formed that sometimes resembles a man's face, sometimes an animal. All over the world Nature has placed her picture gallery and her collection of statuary, the biggest free show in the world.

Another work of Nature's that very often results in extraordinary changes being effected is a landslip. And landslips have arisen from the tiniest possible causes. A little underground flow of water had gradually undermined a hill or cliff until at last the earth became like a hollow nut. Then the soil became top heavy. The sea beat against its foundations, and millions of tons of earth were flung into the sea, which proves the axiom that the tiniest beginnings often produce the mightiest ends.—London Standard.

English Luggage Lifters.

English railway companies suffer severely through the purloining of passengers' baggage and other articles by platform thieves, and in some cases it is a difficult matter to find out the miscreant. One of these luggage lifters was on an occasion some time ago seen keeping vigil over a barrow of luggage, and in his hand he carried apparently a good sized portmanteau. He walked up and down the platform several times and at last stopped opposite the luggage. Placing his bag on the barrow for a moment, he then picked it up and walked off. But the lynx eye of one of the railway officials had also been watching the barrow, and, going up to the man, had him arrested and searched. It was found that his apparent portmanteau was only a skeleton and inside had a set of springs, etc., which, when placed over a smaller bag, held the latter in position. But for the smartness of the official another traveler's bag would have been missing.—London Answers.

Rose Colds From Paper Roses.

"A patient of mine is subject to rose colds," a doctor said. "She caught a bad rose cold last week from a bouquet of artificial roses. That often happens. It is supposed to show the mystic, psychological aspect of disease, but as a matter of fact it is just as natural to take a rose cold from paper roses as from the real kind. Why? Because the paper roses that bring on rose colds are always perfumed. It is the fad, you know, to perfume artificial flowers. The scent used is the essential oil of roses, and it is this oil in the natural flowers that causes rose colds."—New York Press.

A Keen Observer.

Ethel, aged three, had been to visit her cousins, two fun loving and romping boys. She had climbed upon her father's knee and was telling him of her visit. "Papa, every night John and George say their prayers they ask God to make them good boys," said she.

"That is nice," said papa.

SHE HAD HIM ON THE HOOK.

Maiden Well Knew Lover Could Not Resist Culinary Bait She Had So Cleverly Cast.

Janet had molded the domestic affairs of the family with whom she lived for so many years that the news of her intended marriage had much the effect of an earthquake. "Have you and David been engaged long?" ventured the mistress of the household.

"One week when next Sabbath comes," stated Janet briefly.

"And—and had you any thought of marrying before that?" asked her mistress.

"Times I had and times I had not," said the imperturbable Janet, "as any person will. But a month ago when I gave David a wee bit of the cake I'd been making and he said to me: 'Janet, have you the recipe firm in your mind, lass, so you could make it if Mrs. Mann's book would be far from your reach?' I knew well the time was drawing short.

"And when," said Janet, closing her eyes at the recollection, "I said to him, 'David, lad, the recipe is copied in a little book of my own,' and I saw the glint in his eye I reckoned 'twould be within the month he'd ask me."

WHY PEOPLE SUFFER.

Too often the kidneys are the cause and the sufferer is not aware of it. Sick kidneys bring backache and side pains, lameness and stiffness, dizziness, headaches, tired feeling, urinary troubles. Doan's Kidney Pills cure the cause. Mrs. N. E. Graves, Villisca, Iowa, says: "I suffered from kidney trouble for years. The secretions were disordered, there were pains in my back and swellings of the ankles. Often I had smothering spells. I had to be helped about. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me five years ago and I have been well since. They saved my life."

Remember the name—Doan's. For sale by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Exchanging Solemn Thoughts.

"Ah, says the man with the parted whiskers, "when one stands alone in the night and contemplates the wonders of creation, how futile, how puny man seems! How vain, how puerile his hopes and longings, when he is surrounded by the eternal silence of the universe! Has this ever occurred to you?"

"You bet!" answers the man with the big scarf pin. "He feels just as punk as he does when he misses the owl car and has to stand on the corner an hour for another one."—Chicago Post.

A Gentle Aspersion.

Among the prisoners brought before a Chicago police magistrate one Monday morning was one, a beggar, whose face was by no means an unfamiliar one to the judge.

"I am informed that you have again been found begging in the public streets," said his honor, sternly, "and yet you carried in your pocket over $10 in currency."

"Yes, your honor," proudly returned the mendicant. "I may not be as industrious as some, but sir, I am no spendthrift."—Harper's Weekly.

Spoken from Experience.

It was the grammar class and the teacher had asked for words ending with "ous." "Can any one," she said, "give me a word like 'dangerous,' meaning full of danger, 'hazardous,' full of hazard?"

There was silence for a moment. Then a boy in the back row put up his hand.

"Well, Bobby, what is your word?"

"Please, Miss," came the reply, "pious, full of pie!"

HOME TESTING

A Sure and Easy Test on Coffee.

To decide the all important question of coffee, whether or not it is really the hidden cause of physical ails and approaching fixed diseases, one should make a test of ten days by leaving off coffee entirely and using well-made Postum.

If relief follows you may know to a certainty that coffee has been your vicious enemy. Of course you can take it back to your heart again, if you like to keep sick.

A lady says: "I had suffered with stomach trouble, nervousness and terrible sick headaches ever since I was a little child, for my people were always great coffee drinkers and let us children have all we wanted. I got so I thought I could not live without coffee, but I would not acknowledge that it caused my suffering.

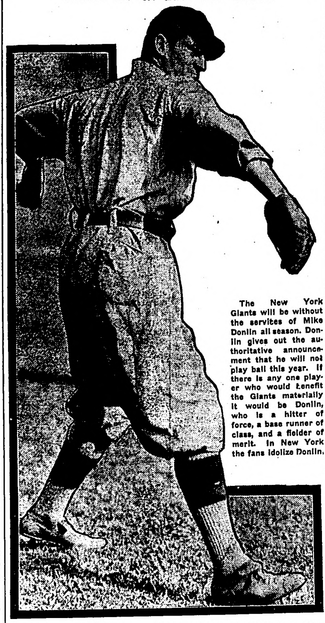
"Then I read so many articles about Postum that I decided to give it a fair trial. I had not used it two weeks in place of coffee until I began to feel like a different person. The headache and nervousness disappeared and whereas I used to be sick two or three days out of a week while drinking coffee I am now well and strong and sturdy seven days a week, thanks to Postum.

"I had been using Postum three months and had never been sick a day when I thought I would experiment and see if it really was coffee that caused the trouble, so I began to drink coffee again and inside of a week I had a sick spell. I was so ill I was soon convinced that coffee was the cause of all my misery and I went back to Postum with the result that I was soon well and strong again and determined to stick to Postum and leave coffee alone in the future."

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

DONLIN OUT OF GAME FOR SEASON.



The New York Giants will be without the services of Mike Donlin all season. Donlin gives out the authoritative announcement that he will not play ball this year. If there is any one player who would benefit the Giants materially it would be Donlin, who is a hitter of force, a base runner of class, and a fielder of merit. In New York the fans idolize Donlin.

PERIL OF THE SPIKES ON BASEBALL DIAMOND

The peril of the spikes is rendering baseball almost as dangerous a game as football, according to numerous critics. Hardly a day passes but that in a close play some guardian of a base is cut or sustains some strain or breaking of a bone. Managers now regard it as one of the first essentials of a good infielder that he can put the tag on a base-runner. Many basemen lack the requisite nerve. Others have not the skill. With the ball and the runner arriving together and the runner coming recklessly through, throwing himself spikes first at the bag, it takes a cast-iron nerve to avoid flinching. Daring base-runners, like Cobb of Detroit, make capital of the fact that it is known that they are absolutely reckless and will be stopped by no thought of injury either to themselves or the baseman. Accidents have been so frequent at the home plate that several catchers have been forced to the wearing of shin guards.

BROWN'S SECOND BASEMAN.

PLAY THAT DISHEARTENS THE MAJORITY OF CLUBS

Having Men Caught Off Bases Takes Life Out of Team—Important Part of the Game.

There is probably nothing in baseball that so quickly takes the life out of a club as to have a man or two caught off the bases. With this fact in view every club tries to perfect itself in this department of the game. To the spectator there usually appear but two men who are directly connected with the play, when in reality the pitcher has as much, if not more, to do with it than any of the other players. This is especially true where the catcher throws to one of the bases to catch a man napping. The infielder usually gives the catcher the sign that he is going to attempt the play, but often the backstop signals the baseman to this effect. The pitcher is next tipped off on what is coming, and, knowing what is expected, he must pitch the ball where it will be easy for the catcher to handle and at the same time such a distance away from the batter that it is impossible for him to hit the ball.

It can readily be seen that if the pitcher does not keep the ball out or away from the hitter what a swell chance the man at the bat has to not only break up the attempted play, but at the same time to hit through the spot vacated by the infielder. The infielder must start for the base as soon as the pitcher starts to deliver the ball, and consequently this spot is left open. Brown, Kling and Tinker pulled off the play on Sam Crawford in the fourth game of the world's series at Detroit, when they picked the Tigers' slugger off second. It was a swell play all around and, while most of the glory of the play went to Kling and Tinker, Brown must not be overlooked, as he made the play a success by the manner in which he handed the ball to Kling. In that memorable 17-inning game between the Athletics and Detroit, Donovan, Payne and O'Leary caught Hartsel the same way, and but for Topsy being nailed, which lost at least one run in that inning, the White Elephants would have been a winner that day, and which would have won for them the championship last year.

Big Offer for Battery.

It is not generally known, but a short time ago Stallings made a mighty effort to get hold of Washington's star twirler, Johnson, and his running mate behind the bat, Street. An offer was made by Stallings and Frank Farrell, which approximated $30,000 for the pitcher and catcher, but it was promptly turned down by Cantillon. The Washington manager said at the time that he might just as well sell his whole team as part with those two men. While the $30,000 offer was for Johnson and Street, Stallings would give almost as much for the catcher alone.

Seybold New Toledo Manager.

Ralph Seybold, right fielder of the Toledo American association team has taken charge of the team, succeeding Fred Abbott, who resigned. Abbott will continue as catcher.

EIGHT HOUR DAY ON FARM

STATISTICS SHOW THAT FARMER DOES NOT GET UP AT DAWN AS HE USED TO DO.

CONDITIONS ARE IMPROVED

And 42 Cents' Worth of Food Every Day Is Living High, According to Government Figures Just Completed.

Washington, D. C.—No longer does the tired farm hand tumble out of bed at 4 a. m., with the prospect of sixteen hours' work before retiring —at least not in Minnesota. Farmhands in Minnesota have practically an eight-hour day, according to the department of agriculture.

Not only that, but the up-to-date farmband lives off the fat of the land, the statistics showing he eats daily food which costs on the farm 42 cents. He eats $12.65 worth every month—estimating country costs and not city prices. It is figured by the department of agriculture that this is living high.

A bulletin just issued by the department deals with the work of state experiment stations. In Minnesota an important, although somewhat unusual line of investigation has been carried on relating to hours of labor on farms, wages paid hands, and the cost of living for farmers.

Investigation of farm wages in four localities for the years 1904-1907 showed that the average wage paid during the crop season (April to November, inclusive), a little over $26 a month, or 12.7 cents an hour, and the average for the other four months is $14 a month or 11.2 cents an hour, the hours of labor being much shorter in winter. The wages paid are not in addition to board, the cost of which has been added to the wages actually paid.

The hours of labor in three localities during six years were found to average for all months of the year 8.6 hours for week days with three hours' work on Sundays.

Studies of the cost of living showed that in Minnesota the average farm family uses annually farm produce worth $222.97, groceries and fuel costing $170.89, and house furnishings costing $32.57, while the value of the women's labor involved is $216.66, and that of men and horses $57.74, making a total cost of $700.83 per family a year. Of this $203.35 represents the actual cash outlay for supplies, to which must be added whatever wages may be paid to hired women, the balance representing the produce of the farm and the labor of the family.

The average cost of the board of hands was found to be $12.65 a month or 42 cents a day.

MRS. STEENERSON HURT.

Wife of Minnesota Representative Is Struck by Bicycle in Washington.

Washington, D. C.—Mrs. Halvor Steenerson, wife of Congressman Steenerson of Crookston, was knocked down by a bicycle ridden by an unknown man, while she and her husband were out walking. Mrs. Steenerson ran from the middle of the street toward the pavement to escape an automobile and was struck by a bicycle coming in an opposite direction. There were some contusions of the right shoulder, thigh and knee, but no bones were broken. It is expected that she will be about in a few days.

STUDENTS TO BE ENUMERATORS.

Durand Will Seek to Keep Census Work Out of Politics.

Washington, D. C.—If Director E. Dana Durand, of the census bureau, has his way, students of the University of Minnesota will be be given preference for appointment as enumerators in the Minneapolis district next year. This preference may also extend to other districts in the state.

The directors' idea is that with college students as enumerators he will get the maximum of energy and intelligence, which is very desirable in making a count of the population and in getting other information required by the census law. In the past, it has been the custom to give these places to active political workers in the various districts, and in some instances the supervisors have been able to build up pretty good political machines through distribution of this patronage.

These machines have in some instances been operated for the benefit of the congressmen who were responsible for the appointment of the supervisors themselves.

It is expected that Mr. Durand's proposition to make university students and other young men in the same class enumerators of the census, will meet with opposition among members of congress who have in some instances at least, already promised places to their political friends.

NEW PLAN FOR CITY.

Mankato Studies Proposed Commission Plan at Home.

Mankato.—The charter commission has completed the new charter after six months' work, and, if adopted, it will make Mankato the first Minnesota city to be governed by the commission plan.

The new charter, as reported to the council, follows the charter of Berkeley, Cal., very closely, being changed where local conditions require it. A simple, direct form of government is provided, closely responsible to the people, and calculated to cut off unnecessary expenses.

The only officers are a mayor, to draw $900 a year, and four councilmen, to draw $600 a year each. These are to appoint all other officials, prescribe duties, and fix salaries, and to discharge the usual duties of a mayor and council.

The right of recall, the initiative and referendum are provided.

The mayor and councilmen are expected to give such time to their duties as is required, and each is to have a seperate department and be the responsible head of it. Provision is made for frequent examinations of the city's books, and for published financial reports.

The council has provided for the publication of 3,000 copies of the proposed charter, and special election will be called early in the fall to submit it to a vote of the people.

$40,000 OFFERED IN PREMIUMS.

New Premium List of Minnesota State Fair Issued.

Novel in style, and of unusual typographical excellence, the 1909 premium list of the Minnesota State Fair, which has just been issued to the number of 15,000, contains a good deal of information which this annual publication has not heretofore carried. Including the introductory matter generally descriptive of the coming state fair, Sept. 6 to 11, and the almost complete list of the county and state fairs of the United States and Canada, the new volume has 200 pages and will be mailed to any address in response to a request addressed to Secretary C. N. Cosgrove, Minnesota State Fair, Hamline, Minnesota.

Over $40,000.00 is offered in premiums at the state fair this year, including many new classes, and in addition to this there are many special prizes offered by various societies interested in live stock breeding, agriculture, and horticulture.

SLAYER CONFESSES CRIME

FORMER INDIANA GIRL MAKES HUSBAND ADMIT MURDER.

J. L. Byrd, Arrested in Denver Soon After Wedding, Tells of Killing Fellow Clerk in Memphis.

Denver, Col.—James W. Robinson, who was arrested here Thursday on suspicion of being J. L. Byrd, wanted in Memphis, Tenn., for the murder of Joseph Black, a shoe dealer of that city, has confessed, at the behest of his wife, that he was the murderer.

Byrd was married two weeks ago at Colorado Springs and with his bride was enjoying his honeymoon at Denver. The prisoner's wife, Elsie Syms Robinson, came to Denver with her parents from Terre Haute, Ind.

Robinson's confession followed a talk with Chief of Police Armstrong in the latter's office. Robinson's bride of two weeks, who was present, finally interrupted.

"Jimmie, if you are the man, tell them," she said. "It will make no difference to me, because I will stick by you no matter what the circumstances."

There was silence for a moment. Then Robinson, white and shaking, owned up.

"Chief," he said, "I am the man you want. I killed Black because I thought my life was in danger. We engaged in an argument over a baseball bet and he started toward me with an open knife in his hand.

"I seized the only weapon at hand, a shoe stretcher, and struck him over the head with it. I did not mean to kill him. I didn't tell you before on account of my wife."

Byrd added that Black previously had insulted him several times.

"For two years I have been wishing that I'd never left home," he said, "and now that I've been caught and told my story, I am happy and will go back there and clear up everything and commence to live right."

Robinson said that in a panic of fear after his fatal encounter with Black, he went to Texas, stayed there a few days, then came to Colorado later going to San Francisco and Seattle and returning to Colorado, where he secured employment.

ACTION MAY MEAN A WAR.

Argentine Orders Bolivian Minister to Leave and Summons Her Envoy from La Paz.

Buenos Ayres.—The Argentine government Tuesday sent his passports to the Bolivion minister here, ordering him to leave Buenos Ayres within 24 hours. The government has also telegraphed Senor Fonseca, Argentine minister to Bolivia, to leave La Pas immediately. It is practically a declaration of war.

The action of the Argentine government follows the refusal of Bolivia to accept the decision of Argentina in the matter of the boundary dispute between Bolivia and Peru. The Argentine Republic has taken offense at the action of the president of Bolivia, who, it is asserted, has sent circulars to the prefects throughout the country, casting reflections on the Argentine government.

TWO DIE IN CLOUDBURST.

Colorado Picnic Party in Mountain Deluge—Illinois Woman Among Those Who Escaped.

Boulder, Col.—Two are dead and two seriously injured as the result of a cloudburst that deluged Two-Mile Canyon, north of Boulder, Friday.

The dead:

Verne Carlise, aged 13, Boulder.

Arthur Dickerman, aged 25, Greeley.

The seriously injured are: Mrs. Abott, Garden City, Kan.; Miss Bristow, University of Colorado.

The victims were members of a picnic party. When the rain began to fall the party sought shelter under a huge bowlder. Presently a torrent swept down the canyon to a depth of two feet. Six were able to gain shelter, but in aiding their companions, Dickerman and Carlisle were swept down with the torrent. Among those who escaped were: Mrs. Ross of Robinson City, Ill., and Miss Robinson of Omaha, Neb.

Houston, Tex.—Twenty-three reported dead, 14 missing, eight injured and a property loss totalling millions is the most complete estimate on the result of the storm which raged over the southern coast of Texas. The communication with the stricken district was still fitful Saturday, and not until full reports are received will the full damage and loss of life be known.

FRENCH CABINET FORMED.

Aristide Briand, the New Premier, Presents Names of His Aids to President Fallieres.

Paris. — After a day of conferences Aristide Briand succeeded in forming a new French ministry and officially announced the success of his endeavors to President Fallieres. The new cabinet is made up as follows:

Premier and Minister of the interior and of public worship, M. Briand; minister of justice, M. Barthou; minister of foreign affairs, M. Pichon; minister of finance, Georges Cochory; minister of education, M. Doumergue; minister of public works, posts and telegraphs, M. Millerand; minister of commerce, Jean Dupuy; minister of agriculture, M. Ruau; minister of the colonies, M. Trouillot; minister of labor, M. Viviani.

The portfolios of war and the navy will be filled to-day. These have been offered respectively to Gen. Brun and Admiral Boue de la Payrere and both are expected to accept.

THANKS COURT FOR DEATH.

Hindoo Student Will Be Executed for Assassination of Sir William Hutt Curzon Wyllie.

London.—Madarial Dhinagri, the Hindoo student who, on the night of July 1, at the conclusion of a public gathering at the Imperial institute, shot and killed Lieut. Col. Sir William Hutt Curzon Wyllie and Dr. Cawas Lalcaca, was found guilty and sentenced at the conclusion of a trial of less than an hour at the Old Bailey Friday.

As the lord chief justice concluded in pronouncing sentence the prisoner drew himself up in military style and saluted. He said:

"I thank you, my lord. I am proud to have the honor of laying down my humble life for my country. Your sentence of death is perfectly illegal. You are all powerful and can do what you like; but remember, we will have the power some time. That is all I have to say."

DEATH LIST GROWS

EIGHTEEN REPORTED TO HAVE PERISHED IN FIERCE GULF STORM.

CLOUDBURST HITS DULUTH

Minnesota City Flooded and Three Lives Lost—Conditions Alarming in Northern Wisconsin—Loss from Floods Reaches Millions.

Houston, Tex. — Twenty-one reported dead, eight injured and a property loss totaling $1,250,000 is the result of the storm which raged over the southern coast of Texas Wednesday, according to the latest dispatches received.

The property loss in cities and towns along the coast is estimated at $1,250,000.

The storm has practically demolished Velasco. Not more than a dozen houses stand. The gulf waters were driven inland for nearly three miles. Two negroes lost their lives.

A dispatch from Beaumont says a party of 13, three brothers named Abernathy, their wives and seven children, who left High Island for Sabine Pass Tuesday afternoon, are missing.

One person was killed at Eagle Lake, three at Bay City, one at El Campo, four at Palacios, one at Wharton, one at Pendleton, one at Ramsey.

The territory around Bay City seems to have been the center of the storm, which moved southwest from Galveston. For four hours there a 70-mile wind swept across the country, carrying everything before it. Velasco, a small town near Bay City, is reported demolished but with no loss of life and none injured.

Worst at Bay City.

At Bay City, about 50 per cent. of the business section was damaged, including the opera house, one bank, the courthouse, the new high school building and the city jail. In the jail the cages were left standing and the prisoners were exposed to view, but were safe. Six prisoners escaped from the jail at Richmond, when the windows had been blown in and while the guards were repairing the damage.

At Galveston Bay, the situation is not as bad as at first reported. No part of the railroad bridge, which spans the arm of the bay between the island and Virginia Point, was washed away but some 50 feet of the structure was thrown badly out of alignment by a huge barge and other small craft, which were washed from their moorings and pounded against the piling.

Five of the ten reported Tarpon fishing pier victims at Galveston have been rescued at sea.

Cloudburst Floods Duluth.

Duluth, Minn. — Following the terrific rains a cloudburst caused a scene of devastation in Duluth. The loss as now computed will reach $1,500,000.

Three lives were lost during the storm. Two children were swept from their mothers' sides on Ninth avenue, East, one body being lost in a sewer at the bottom of the hill. Another child was lost in Keene's creek at West Duluth.

The theater crowds came out to find the streets a miniature lake each, and the men, picking up their female companions, carried them to higher ground. Automobiles and hacks were impossible, owing to the accumulation of mud in the streets. The hotels were crowded with those unwilling to venture forth in the elements.

Twenty or more houses were washed away along small creeks in the city suburbs.

Flood Situation Worse.

Ashland, Wis. — The situation in the flood district is worse. The railroad bridge and all other bridges are believed to have been swept out to Odanah. Nothing has been heard from that place since 3 o'clock a. m. A special train has left for Odanah, carying boats and men. Boats have also left for the mouth of Bad river to pick up refugees. Six bridges are torn out on the Marengo river, five of them being steel. Four million feet of logs were swept into the lake at Montreal river. Train service on all roads is abandoned.

Another heavy downpour Wednesday night aggravated the situation. The village of Odanah is completely isolated. The people in Odanah are sleeping in tents and on the high lands.

New Trunk Murder Mystery.

Lynn, Mass. — Another trunk murder mystery was added to criminal annals by the finding of the body of Minos K. Monjian in the room of Vahan Nalbandian in a boarding house here. Both Monjian and Nalbandian were shoe workers. There was a bullet wound and several knife wounds in the breast. The motive is not known, as the slayers have fled.

TROOPS READY FOR STRIKERS

WISCONSIN MILITIA PREPARED TO GO TO KENOSHA.

Three Men Shot in Rioting at Allen Sons' Tannery Plant—Leaders of Trouble Arrested.

Kenosha, Wis.—Troops were ready to be rushed into the city Friday at the first sign of a repetition of the rioting which resulted in the shooting of three strikers Thursday at the tannery of N. R. Allen Sons Company. The soldiers awaited orders at Milwaukee.

A large force of deputy sheriffs, armed with riot guns, is guarding the tannery.

The wounded are: Tony Monkom, Peter Sobocobic and Charles Clemm.

The rioting began when the guards attempted to disperse strikers who gathered in numbers about the entrance of the plant to jeer at 200 or more men who remained at work. As the last of the men entered a rush was made by those outside to go into the building.

Simultaneously a deputy and a policeman were cut off by the strikers and attacked with bricks and clubs. The guards drew their revolvers and charged the mob, firing in the air. When the strikers retreated, one of their number was found to have been shot in the groin. He is believed to be fatally injured. Deputy Sheriff Lewis Morehouse and Policeman Nels Nelson, on whom the attack was made, were both painfully injured about the head.

A dozen or more arrests followed and the police declare they have the worst agitators behind the bars. They are taking no chances, however, and a large number of additional deputies were sworn in for duty at the plant.

The shooting put a stop to negotiations which were in progress at the time for a settlement of the strike. Charles W. Allen, general manager of the company, was in conference with a deputation of strikers. He at once dismissed them and declared all negotiations off. Nevertheless an agreement was reached later for a further conference, and a meeting of strikers was arranged to name a committee for the negotiations.

Sheriff Gunther telegraphed Gov. Davidson asking for troops. Gen. Falk was communicated with and arrived in Kenosha. He declared the situation to be critical and said that a renewal of the disturbances would be a signal for the bringing in of troops.

INDICTED FOR MURDER.

Dr. Miller, Mrs. Sayler and Her Father Charged with Slaying Illinois Banker.

Watseka, Ill.—The special grand jury called by Judge Hooper in the Sayler murder case returned indictments Wednesday against all of the parties accused of the crime.

There are two indictments. The first contains 14 counts and in varying forms charge Dr. Miller, Mrs. Lucy Sayler and John Grunden with the murder of J. B. Sayler. The second indictment charges Ira Grunden, brother of Mrs. Sayler, with being an accessory after the fact.

Dr. Miller, Mrs. Sayler and the two Grundens were arraigned Thursday morning and their cases set for trial. It will be determined whether a special session of court will be called or whether the cases will go over to the regular term. Each of the defendants pleaded not guilty.

It is regarded as certain that the defense will make a motion for a change of venue to some other county far removed from Iroquois.

Wright Makes Long Flight.

Washington. — In two short flights in the Wright aeroplane at Fort Myer, Va., Orville Wright closely approached the world's aeroplane speed record, attaining an average velocity of 54½ miles an hour as computed by Wilbur Wright, who held the stop watch on the machine for half a dozen rounds of the course.

On the first flight the air craft remained aloft only one minute and thirty-nine seconds, the aviator being forced to descend by losing a cog wheel on the magneto after making his second round of the course. On his second flight, after the cog had been replaced, the aeroplane swiftly circled a dozen times around the course, which is five-sixths of a mile in the circumference. Certain changes in the gearing of the motor and propellers, which were intended to give the machine a higher speed, had been effected earlier in the day.

Safe Blowers Foiled.

Bedford, Ind. — Safe crackers blew the safe of the Oolitic post office, but got nothing, as they failed to open the inner door after three trials.

The explosions aroused the villagers and the cracksmen fled, leaving tools and nitroglycerin at the safe. They expected to get much money, which is deposited every pay day by the foreign laborers, who send it to the old country, but pay day does not come until to-day. Bloodhounds failed to find a trail.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

The Thief River Falls papers claim that the farmers were taken in for some of their hard earned money by confidenc men at the Cole Bros. circus, which lately visited that place. The con's knew who to tackle that they was sure had cash, and that is the Red Lake county farmers.

There is some talk about J. A. Deffy, the Red Lake Falls banker, becoming the candidate of the republican party for representative from this district. He would make a first class man for the position, and aside from a little local prejudice, at Thief River Falls, he would have the solid support of the party in Red Lake county.

Next Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, are the dates set for the Thief River Falls Fair, and it would be a safe bet to make, that the attendence of farmers from up this way will be very light. Not because they would not like to go, but it is a quetion of hay, with them, with the weather against them, and not a man that can be hired to work, at any price.

Nocturnal Tragedy.

It is a dark night. It is also a dark kitchen. The kind hearted man in his stocking feet is after a drink of water for his fretful youngster. He thinks he can find his way in the inky darkness. He is mistaken. He turns to the left instead of to the right and falls down cellar.

Another good man gone wrong.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Sven Hedin's Experience.

Dr. Sven Hedin, the famous traveler and explorer, had some terrible experiences during a journey through Tibet. He told how, owing to the high altitude at which he and his party traveled, that to unbutton one's coat meant acute pain and tension to an overwrought heart, which literally was at the point of breaking. His only safety lay in the fact that he never left the saddle for a single moment from morning till evening. Had he done so his heart would have given way. At one time they were nine days without water, and when at last he saw a small pool Dr. Hedin drank five pints without stopping.

The Gift.

"Accused of begging!" exclaimed the magistrate. "Why, you are the very man who was begging at my door yesterday!"

"Yes," assented the vagrant, with a sneer, "and you didn't give me anything."

"Well, I'll give you something now—fourteen days!"

The Romance of Other Years.

"One of the most beautiful smiles ever seen upon the face of mortal suffused itself on the countenance of Lord St. Orville as he fell at the feet of Julia in a deathlike swoon." You probably suppose that this sentence is an extract from some schoolgirl's novelette; but, in fact, it comes from a novel which eighty years ago was seen on the tables of most people of taste and culture. That is the style which was delectable in the brave days of old.—London Telegraph.

Not Guilty.

"I have orders to arrest all blind beggars," said the policeman, not unkindly, to the man with an "I Am Blind" placard.

"Go your way," responded the mendicant blithely. "I can see as well as you can. That placard is part of the fake."

Naturally the embarrassed policeman let him go.—Philadelphia Ledger.

MANNING THE STATIONS.

Discipline Aboard Ship at Sea in Times of Emergency.

At no time is the perfect organization aboard ship so well illustrated as in the time of an emergency. The slightest scent of danger in the wind must find every man ready. And every man is ready. Every man has a number. Every man has a station. A bell tap may send your dining room steward off at a run just when he is serving your soup. At the bell tap he is no longer your steward. He is "No. 78" in the ship's emergency organization, and when he gets to his station he finds Nos. 54, 45, 236, 117, 118 and some others there to act with him like a machine. Aboard a big ship there are sometimes as many as sixty stations about the vessel, and at the sound of an alarm bell thirty seconds have not elapsed before every man has responded to his number at his station and is ready to act, to fight fire, to man the lifeboats, or what not.

Up in the wheelhouse is further exemplification of what system will do. Within reach of the officers are a dozen contrivances of machinery that connect with every part of the ship. A touch of one lever closes a bulkhead in this or that compartment of the hold, a touch of another mans all emergency stations, a lever here mans lifeboat so-and-so, and a lever there mans any one or all. Here is a telephone, its wires extending to every part of the ship, and an officer's voice carried to a distance station in the bowels of the ship is so magnified by mechanical means that it can be heard twenty feet from the receiver and fairly bellows its orders.

A sailor or steward never knows at what minute, day or night, he may be called to his station. At the sound of the signal bell he must be at his post. There is a drill of some kind every day aboard ship, but the men never know whether they are running to a real fire or only a drill. Boats are uncovered, falls overhauled, davits swung out. Every boat must have its compass, night signals, fresh water and provisions ready for immediate action. From the chart room the captain can start a squad in the most remote part of the ship simply by pressing a button, and the flashing of tiny electric lights faithfully record how every detail of the drill is being carried out. A chart gives the location of all bulkheads, and a tiny light sparkles when this or that water tight compartment is closed. In case of a collision every bulkhead below the water line is closed by a turn of a lever in the wheelhouse, making the modern ship practically unsinkable.—Van Vliet Adling in Bookkeeper.

He Dazed Lew Wallace.

Shortly after the first success of "Ben-Hur" Lew Wallace had occasion to go over to London and one day picked up a pirated copy of the novel at a railroad newsstand. To his amazement he found the subtitle left off, a preface interpolated and one of the chapters rewritten. Of course he boiled with rage, and as soon as possible he called on the publisher. That gentleman coolly admitted his crime and told Wallace he thought the amended form better adapted to the British taste, doncherknow. His gall was so stupendous that the novelist was awed and went away without spilling his gore.

It Was Good Advice.

A wildly turbulent peasant was once a witness in a trial before Chief Baron O'Grady. The counsel, after pestering him for some time, put a question to him which reflected on the witness' character.

"If ye ax me that again I'll give ye a kick in the gob!" was the answer.

The counsel appealed to the court, stating that an answer was necessary to his client's case, ending up with the query, "What would your lordship advise me to do?"

"If you are resolved to repeat the question," replied the court, "I'd advise you to move a little from the witness."

The Poultice Is a Barbaric Relic.

The poultice is a barbarous relic of the days of witch burning. The typical home poultice is made of flaxseed. It is a soggy, unsavory, germ infested instrument of torture. Clapped upon the suffering baby's chest, it interferes with the poor child's breathing, infects his skin with the germs that cause pimples and boils and makes him unbearably uncomfortable and unhappy. The heat in the poultice is its only valuable feature. The dampness does damage, and the flaxseed is as inert as so much sawdust or breakfast food. Why not use hot water bags or, better still, hot cloths?—Delineator.

He Got the Teacher.

A man called at a grammar school in a large city to see one of the teachers and, uncertain just which was the room he wanted, noted the bell buttons in the main corridor. He pressed one of them. His surprise was great when soon after the sound of the gong children and teachers fled forth from the various rooms, all in orderly line and with no excitement or crowding. The visitor had pressed the button which called for the fire alarm drill practice.

Useful to Flirts.

A young man called on a patent expert and showed him an idea he wanted protected. It was in the form of an engagement ring.

"But," said the expert, examining the very ordinary looking circlet, "what is there patentable about this?"

"It is adjustable, sir," said the inventor proudly.—London Answers.

Was Cleopatra Beautiful?

Archaeologists have discovered authentic portraits of Cleopatra, and critics have confronted these portraits with the poetic descriptions of Cleopatra given by Roman historians and have found that in these descriptions there was at least much fancy. In the portraits we do not see the countenance of a Venus, delicate, gracious, smiling, nor even the fine and sensuous beauty of a Marquise de Pompadour, but a face fleshy and, as the French would say, "bouffie," with a powerful aquiline nose—the face of a woman on in years, ambitious, imperious, which recalls the face of Maria Theresa. It will be said that judgments on beauty are personal; that Antony, who saw her alive, could judge better than we who see her portraits half faded out by the centuries; that the attractive power of a woman emanates not only from corporeal beauty, but also, and yet more, from her spirit. The taste of Cleopatra, her vivacity, her cleverness, her exquisite art in conversation, are acclaimed by all.—Guglielmo Ferrero in Putnam's.

A Modest Fee Appreciated.

Shortly before Dr. W. T. Bull, New York's famous surgeon, was stricken with his fatal illness a young east side physician called at his office and said that he was attending a poor girl over in his neighborhood who would surely die unless operated on. The family was too poor to pay and the doctor did not feel that he was equal to the operation. Would Dr. Bull give him a little advice as to how to proceed?

"Well, I guess we had better go and take a look at the patient," said Dr. Bull, putting on his coat.

They found the patient in an east side tenement, and in less time than it takes to tell it Dr. Bull had the room cleared and began the operation. When he was leaving the father of the girl met him in the hall and forced a quarter into his hand. Dr. Bull thanked him and went off feeling happier than if he had received a $1,000 fee. The girl got well.

The Third Way.

The Midland express was slowing up in Derby station. An American traveler, his finger keeping the place in his Baedeker, addressed the carriage:

"Can you tell me whether this place is 'Derby' or 'Darby?' I have heard both."

"The original and therefore the correct pronunciation," replied a precise looking passenger, "is 'Darby.' I have seen it spelled 'Darbie' on old maps. It is also the form used in common speech."

"You'll find 'Derby' is right," rejoined a passenger, less precise. "It's spelled like that, and the people up in the north of the county say 'Derby.'"

At this point the train stopped, and a porter bawled loudly into the carriage, "Dawby!"—Manchester Guardian.

The Englishman and His "Bawth."

"I had a bachelor apartment at one time with an Englishman, who was always talking about his 'bawth, you know,'" said a New York banker. "The first thing of a morning he said: 'I must take my bawth, you know. Really, how, I must take my bawth—haw, haw!'

"He did so much talking about his 'bawth' that I stayed one morning to see him take it—to see if it was different from the bath of the American.

"It was. This is what he did: First he spread a soft towel at the bottom of the bathtub, then turned on the water until it was about two inches high.

"'So as not to chill my feet, you know—haw, haw!' he explained to me.

"Then he stood on the soft towel in the two inches of water, turned on the spray, sprang through it, leaped out and rushed for a towel.

"He had taken his 'bawth, you know—haw, haw!'"—Washington Post.

A SMALL BLIND TUBE

The Vermiform Appendix and Its Probable Function.

PROBLEM OF APPENDICITIS.

The Causes of the Disease and the Methods of Fighting It—The Way the Operation of Removal Is Performed—Disease as Old as Mankind.

Appendicitis is not a disease of modern times, though its nature and methods of treatment are the result of careful observation by one of our well known modern surgeons while engaged in postmortem work.

It may be safe to say that appendicitis is as old as mankind, for in studying very old histories wherein are given the diagnoses of the physicians we read of cases of inflammation of the bowels, intestinal disorders and like ailments the symptoms of which prove that they must have been appendicitis.

Appendicitis is inflammation of the vermiform appendix, a small blind tube, averaging two and a half inches in length and a quarter of an inch in diameter, attached to the coecum at its inner and posterior part. It is made of a very sensitive mucous membrane containing several glands.

The appendix is part of the digestive tract, its function, it is believed, being to lubricate that part of the intestines, though as yet there is no absolute proof of this. Careful study of a child from whom the colon has been removed until he reaches the age of manhood has revealed no irregularities of any nature.

The causes of this disease may be grouped under four heads—stenosis, which means closing up; impaction, the entrance of foreign bodies, not necessarily seeds; exposure and injury. In fighting this disease nature takes three methods of disposing of the toxic materials—discharging them into the peritoneal cavity, sending them into the bowels and discharging them through an external wound. In the first, if the discharge be not too rapid while the peritoneum is taking them up, nature again makes an effort to ward off the threatened danger by walling the poisonous matters in, thus localizing them and so aiding the physician or surgeon in his work. If, however, the discharge be sudden, as is the case when the mass bursts, the whole of the peritoneum becomes involved, which is called septic peritonitis, and this is generally fatal.

After the diagnosis has revealed the disease the doctor decides whether the case be one for medicine or external treatment or for separation. In the latter case the greatest of care is demanded, as sometimes an immediate operation is necessary, while at other times it must be delayed, often for hours, until the condition of the patient has been brought to that point at which the surgeon can feel it is safe to go ahead.

The operation determined upon, the most careful arrangements to secure perfect antisepsis are made, and the patient is placed in a full state of anesthesia.

The operating surgeon then draws an imaginary line from the navel to the anterior superior spine of the right hip bone, dividing that line into three parts. Under the inner side of the middle third the appendix in normal cases will be found, though in rare cases it has been found on the left side and in extremely rare cases otherwise displaced.

Having satisfied himself of the exact spot under which it will be found, an incision from two to five inches long is made in the skin. (Some of the best surgeons pride themselves on the smallness of their incisions in this operation.) The fatty tissues are then cut through, the small blood vessels are secured, and then the muscular walls of the abdomen are separated, bringing into view the peritoneum. This is a serous secretive lining composed of two layers. On cutting through this the edges of both layers are clamped so as to enable the surgeon to reunite them when the operation shall have been completed.

The intestines are now visible, and the affected section is very tenderly drawn through the opening; where the nature and extent of the infection are made known. Hot towels moistened with salt water are kept applied to the intestine while it is exposed. The word "tenderly" characterizes the whole of this operation, as the surgeon must be more than careful to prevent any rupture of the appendix, for should this happen while he is operating the pus would be quickly taken up by the peritoneum and other mucous membranes, and the resulting complications would make the outcome very uncertain.

The mesentery, a large vessel adjoining the appendix, is next ligated, and then the colon is tied off, after which the diseased organ is cut away. The stump is pushed back into the intestine and the ligature is tightly drawn, this to prevent the forming of a pouch.

The removal safely accomplished, the intestine is replaced, the edges of the peritoneum are carefully approximated and the muscular walls, fatty tissue and skin are brought together by subcutaneous and cutaneous sutures.

In the majority of cases, no complications ensuing, the patient is ready for discharge in two weeks.—James M. Smyth, M. D., in New York World.

There is a proper dignity and proportion to be observed in the performance of every act of life.—Aurelius.

DAMASCUS.

An Isolated Oasis In the Midst of a Vast Desert.

The situation of Damascus is remarkable—she stands isolated on an oasis of the vast desert which everywhere hems her in. You may see from Damascus the sunset touch with purple the low western hills twenty-five miles away. These hills mark the beginning of the great desert. Beyond them there is nothing but a rolling waste and the long roads to Palmyra and Bagdad. The permanence and prosperity of Damascus are due to the presence of two rivers, which have converted this spot of the dreary, desolate and uninhabited desert into a smiling and well watered plain. The Pharpar approaches only within seven miles of Damascus, but by means of canals and aqueducts sends its life giving waters to the gardens of the city. The Abana is the stream from which the city's main supply of water is obtained. Minerva-like, it springs full born from the base of a perpendicular rock at Ain Fijih, in the heart of the Anti-Lebanons, and runs a course of ten miles in a gorge, a large river twenty to thirty feet wide and four feet deep, its waters always fresh and ice cold, casting out branches everywhere, permeating every nook and corner of the city, until, as one has said, "literally there is scarce a street, bazaar, khan courtyard or dwelling house which has not its marble or stone fountain constantly filled with running water supplied directly by the Abana itself." Thus the Abana, not fruitlessly wasting her waters on that thirsty land, saves them in her narrow gorge till she can fling them well out on the desert and expends all her life at once in the creation of a single city.—Biblical World.

CHANGED HIS MIND.

Influence of a Game of Golf Upon a Man's Life.

A New York pastor received a call in his study one morning not long ago from a man with whom he had a pleasant but not intimate acquaintance. And the visitor told him without much ado that he had called on a peculiar errand.

"Some time ago," he said, "as you know, I lost my wife. I have no children, I have no kinsfolk, and I am very lonely in the world. Last week, by an unlucky speculation, I lost my whole fortune. I am therefore without companionship, without occupation, without money. I am too old to start again, and I have no joy in life as it is. I have deliberately decided, therefore, to commit suicide. And I called to tell you of my purpose and to ask the favor of you that when my body is found you will make such an explanation as your good judgment and kindly feeling toward me may suggest. I have come simply to ask this favor and not to argue the question, which I have settled for myself. If you do me this last service I shall be very grateful."

The preacher said little and was far too wise to undertake to dissuade him, but he permitted the man to say all that he had to say without interruption.

Then as he was going away the preacher called to him and said:

"I have not seen you on the golf links for some time. You use to enjoy the game."

"Yes," said the other.

"Well, go out and play one more game today before you carry out your purpose."

The man smiled for the first time and went to the golf course and—he is living yet.—World's Work.

Old Time Gas Charges.

The price of gas in the early part of the last century is shown by a schedule of charges issued by the Liverpool Gaslight company in the year 1817. Instead of so much per cubic foot being levied each individual burner was charged for, and the price varied according to the hour at which the light was to be extinguished. Thus for using one No. 1 Argand burner up till 8 p. m. £3 per annum had to be paid. For the right to keep it alight until 9 £3 18s. was the figure, while those roistering blades who sat up till 10, 11 or 12 had to disburse £4 16s., £5 12s. and £6 8s. respectively. Imagine the gas bill at a house where ten or twelve burners are flaring away until the small hours if such a method of taxation were in force nowadays!—Liverpool Post.

Insincerity.

"Our civilization demands a greater or less degree of mendacity," remarked the abstruse person. "We are constantly encountering some empty phrase, some conventional remark, which is absolutely devoid of sincerity."

"That's right," answered the book agent. "That's perfectly true. I am reminded of it every time I walk up to the front step where there is a doormat with the word 'welcome' on it."—Washington Star.

The Right Word.

"Why do you speak of him as a finished artist?"

"Because he told me he was utterly discouraged and was going to quit the profession. If that doesn't show that he's finished I don't know what does."—Chicago Post.

The Plain Part of It.

"Did the young man they caught in fraudulent transactions peculate very much?"

"I donno about that, but he stole a lot."—Baltimore American.

Nurse and Nursery Combined.

A recent visitor to Brittany describes in the New Orleans Times-Democrat the two story closed bed of the Breton peasant, in many cases a richly carved and ornamented heirloom and always highly prized.

One day the visitor was expressing her admiration of a certain "lit-clos," when madam pulled the sliding panels apart and revealed the figure of her husband sleepily rubbing his eyes and wanting to know what was the matter. She calmly explained to him that the visitor wanted to see the inside of the bed and then explained to the visitor that her good man had been out fishing since dawn and was very tired. The visitor begged him to close the panels and go to sleep again, which he immediately did, but not before she noticed that he was fully dressed. It seems that the Breton peasant always disappears into the "lit-clos" fully dressed and always emerges therefrom in the same condition. While her husband slept madam enlarged on the advantages of a "lit-clos" in bringing up a family.

"I have had six children," she said, "and when they were little I used to put three in the top story and three in the bottom, then close the panels and leave them with an easy mind."

WANTS HER LETTER PUBLISHED

For Benefit of Women who Suffer from Female Ills

Minneapolis, Minn.—"I was a great sufferer from female troubles which caused a weakness and broken down condition of the system. I read so much of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for other suffering women I felt sure it would help me, and I must say it did help me wonderfully. My pains all left me, I grew stronger, and within three months I was a perfectly well woman.

"I want this letter made public to show the benefit women may derive from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. JOHN G. MOLDAN, 2115 Second St., North, Minneapolis, Minn.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials like the above prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made exclusively from roots and herbs.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

If you want special advice write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. She will treat your letter as strictly confidential. For 20 years she has been helping sick women in this way, free of charge. Don't hesitate—write at once.

A Scotsman and his wife were coming from Leith to London by boat. When off the Yorkshire coast a great storm arose, and the vessel had several narrow escapes from foundering.

"Oh, Sandy," moaned his wife, "I'm na afeard o' deein', but I dinna care to dee at sea."

"Dinna think o' deein' yet," answered Sandy; "but when ye do, ye'd better be drooned at sea than anywhere else."

"An' why, Sandy?" asked his wife.

"Why?" exclaimed Sandy. "Because ye wouldnt cost sae muckle to bury."

With a smooth iron and Defiance Starch, you can launder your shirtwaist just as well at home as the steam laundry can; it will have the proper stiffness and finish, there will be less wear and tear of the goods, and it will be a positive pleasure to use a Starch that does not stick to the iron.

A Tonic For The Whole Family

This splendid tonic will keep every member of your family in good health. Adults suffering from dyspepsia, or indigestion, general exhaustion or breakdown will find in this natural tonic renewed health and strength. Delicate, rapidly growing children will find in this tonic the assistance their digestive organs need to get the proper nourishment and strength from their food.

DR. D. JAYNE'S TONIC VERMIFUGE

acts directly on the stomach and other digestive organs, toning them up and enabling them to do their work properly. In this way it brings about permanent health and strength. On the other hand, ordinary tonics, which give artificial strength by stimulation and by supplying food material, are only effective as long as they are taken.

Sold by All Druggists—2 sizes, 50c. and 35c.

FANS IGNORANT OF THE INSIDE PLAYS

CRITICISM OF AVERAGE FOLLOWER OF BASEBALL IS GENERALLY UNCALLED FOR.

IMPORTANCE OF THE CATCHER

His Position Behind the Bat and Facing the Rest of His Teammates Gives Him Best Command of Situations That Arise—Signals an Important Part of the Game.

If the average fan could realize how little he knows of baseball he might be less prone to criticism. There is nothing more refreshing to a student of the game than to sit through some pleasant afternoon in a hotbed of fans in stand or bleachers and hear the quips handed out on the play as these spectators see it.

Of course, the fan pays his good money to nourish the sport; then who has a better right than he to air his views?

While the layman doubtless is aware of the fact that baseball of today embraces far more than is shown on the surface, few, very few, realize the intricate complications of "inside" baseball. Far too often are such epithets as "bonehead," "lob," "ivory skull" and the like applied to the wrong party. The game is progressing with the times. The team manager of to-day is the one supreme power on whose judgment almost solely depends success or disappointment.

The captaincy of a major league baseball club of to-day is but a hollow honor. Indeed, there is virtually no such office except in case of a strictly bench manager, such as George Stallings or Connie Mack. In the latter cases a field captain is essential only so far as handing the umpires the batting list and in advising officials of changes that may be made from time to time.

Offensively the manager directs play. Defensively the team, if it works harmoniously, decides its strategies on the spur of the moment; that is, so far as accepting chances is concerned. The fielders concerned always try, but the one who is absolutely sure of the play calls for the chance, and is invariably allowed to stand or fall on his own judgment.

Naturally, the position of the catcher gives him best command of all the situations that may arise. He faces his other teammates and can keep strict tab on the bases. If a base runner stray too far from his station the catcher flashes the intelligence to both pitcher and infielder concerned. The fielder is ready for the throw when the pitcher wheels quickly to let the ball go. And if the baserunner is not equally alert he is caught napping.

The catcher signals the pitcher the nature of every ball he is to serve the batter. Sometimes the pitcher will not agree with his battery mate on the point. Then the backstop signals for different kinds of balls until he hits upon one the pitcher thinks will do the trick—that is, of course, if he has faith in the twirler's judgment.

But not alone the catcher profits by the sign language of the battery. The hawk-eyed infielders and outfielders must be familiar with every sort of ball delivered. Both infielders and outfielders have to play differently on a fast straight one to what they could on a curve. That is why one may often notice the gardeners shift their positions frequently while the same man is at bat. The center fielder can see the signal and he tips off his fellow gardeners. The second baseman and shortstop flash the third and first baseman if these are unable to see for themselves.

Of course, the catcher has to be guarded in his work. He must have several sets of signals at his command with which everyone is familiar. Otherwise a brainy opponent on second would get on to those signs and in turn tip off the various offerings to the man at bat. A catcher cannot use the same sign twice before a rival. Then, too, he must guard against the batsman peeking back to catch his code. That is why the backstop stoops in calling for balls. He covers the hands, which are used entirely for battery signals, with his gloves and his legs. By crouching he shuts out all possible vision of the batsman.

Of course, battery signals are but one phase of the situation. That is the defensive side, or rather part of it. Infielders often tip off catchers on chances to nail base runners. But the infielders in turn profit in knowing what is to be delivered by being able to "lay" for the batsman.

For example, the sort of ball thrown determines whether the second baseman or shortstop shall cover the bag in case of an attempt to steal by a base runner. The same tells the inner defense, in case a bunt is anticipated, the direction in which the ball is likely to go. Then the second baseman or shortstop is ready to cover first or third, as the case may be, while the first baseman or third baseman goes in for the ball.

His Preference.

Commander Maxwell of the navy enjoys telling of an unique complaint preferred by a recruit.

On every man-of-war the bar of justice is aft in front of the "stick," or mast. The recruit had gone to the stick to "state" his grievance. "Well, what do you want?" asked the executive officer.

"Please, sir, I want to complain of the breakfast this morning."

"What did you have?"

"Burgoo, crack-hash, hard tack and coffee, sir."

"What did you expect?"

"Please, sir, I always like to start my breakfast with a nice steak and a pair of eggs."—Illustrated Sunday Magazine.

Reputations.

"The Autocrat," remarked the Recondite Person, "made a remark the import of which escaped me until the other day. He said: 'Many a man has a reputation because of the reputnaito he expects to have some day.'"

"That's not a half bad remark," suggested the Practical Person, "but my son—just out from college, you know, and in the habit of thinking humpbacked thoughts, as it were—said something only this morning that appealed to me: 'Some men,' he said, 'get a reputation and keep it; other men get a reputation and make it keep them.'"

Tuberculosis Conference.

Under the auspices of the Swedish National League Against Tuberculosis, the International Tuberculosis conference held its annual meeting in Stockholm July 8 to 10. Among the American speakers on the program were Dr. Hermann M. Biggs of New York and Dr. John C. Wise, medical director of the United States navy, who was the official representative of this country. Two subjects of special interest discussed were: "Care of Tuberculous Families, Especially of Healthy Children," and "Tuberculosis and the Schools."

Privilege of English Husband.

A wife who complained at the Marylebone police court in London the other day that her husband used abusive language to her was informed by Mr. Plowden that this was one of a husband's privileges.

"You must put up with it," the magistrate told her. "Better an abusive husband than no husband at all."

"But I have had so many years of this kind of thing," she protested.

"I cannot give you any redress," Mr. Plowden replied. "You must expect a certain amount of abuse in this world."

"A Cheap Skate."

"Joel Chandler Harris," said an Atlantan, "used to write comic newspaper editorials. Sometimes he made fun of other editors in them, too.

"Simon Simpson, a rival editor in Mobile, having been made fun of, wrote angrily in his rage:

"'Joel Harris has been getting off some cheap wit at our expense.'

"Joel, on reading this, grabbed his pen and dashed off, quick as a flash, for next day's issue:

"'It must have been cheap, Simon, to be at your expense.'"

Doctor's Test of Food.

A doctor in Kansas experimented with his boy in a test of food and gives the particulars. He says:

"I naturally watch the effect of different foods on patients. My own little son, a lad of four, had been ill with pneumonia and during his convalescence did not seem to care for any kind of food.

"I knew something of Grape-Nuts and its rather fascinating flavor, and particularly of its nourishing and nerve-building powers, so I started the boy on Grape-Nuts and found from the first dish that he liked it.

"His mother gave it to him steadily and he began to improve at once. In less than a month he had gained about eight pounds and soon became so well and strong we had no further anxiety about him.

"An old patient of mine, 73 years old, came down with serious stomach trouble and before I was called had got so weak he could eat almost nothing, and was in a serious condition. He had tried almost every kind of food for the sick without avail.

"I immediately put him on Grape-Nuts with good, rich milk and just a little pinch of sugar. He exclaimed when I came next day 'Why doctor I never ate anything so good or that made me feel so much stronger.'

"I am pleased to say that he got well on Grape-Nuts, but he had to stick to it for two or three weeks, then he began to branch out a little with rice or an egg or two. He got entirely well in spite of his almost hopeless condition. He gained 22 pounds in two months which at his age is remarkable.

"I could quote a list of cases where Grape-Nuts has worked wonders."

"There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

"When about two and a half years old my daughter broke out on her hips and the upper parts of her legs with a very irritating and painful eruption. It began in October; the first I noticed was a little red surface and a constant desire on her part to scratch her limbs. She could not sleep and the eruptions got sore, and yellow water came out of them. I had two doctors treat her, but she grew worse under their treatment. Then I bought the Cuticura Remedies and only used them two weeks when she was entirely well. This was in February. She has never had another rough place on her skin, and she is now fourteen years old. Mrs. R. R. Whitaker, Winchester, Tenn., Sept. 22, 1908."

Law of Attraction.

The attractions of men to women and women to men are full of the most perplexing inconstancies and contradictions imaginable. It is, for instance, a phyiscal law that magnetism is not simple attraction of one thing for another, but the difference of two opposing forces of attraction and repulsion, of which the former is the greater. The same law holds in relation to the attraction of men and women for each other, in which, as a rule, the masculine is the superior force.—T. P.'s Weekly, London.

TARIFF MEASURE MAKES CUT IN MANY SCHEDULES

Fight for Lower Duties on Wood Pulp and Print Paper Is Won.

SLIGHT INCREASE IN RATES ON HOSIERY.

Metal Schedules Are Lower—Duty on Rough Lumber Changed from $2 to $1.25 per Thousand Feet—Sugar and Tobacco Schedules Remain Substantially as Under the Dingley Bill—Little Change in Wool Duties.

Washington.—Tariff rates under the new measure, on the most important articles of consumption, have been decided on as follows:

In the lumber schedule the only increases were those on shingles from 30 cents to 50 cents per 1,000, and on briar wood and laurel wood for the use of pipe makers from the free list to 15 per cent. ad valorem. The rate on sawed lumber was decreased from $2 per 1,000 to $1.25 per 1,000. There was also a diminution on timber from one cent. per cubic foot to one-half cent, and on sawed boards of white wood and kindred woods from $1 per 1,000 to 50 cents per 1,000. The reduction in the differential rates in favor of dressed lumber averaged about one-third of the Dingley rate. Paving posts, railroad ties and telephone poles are reduced from 20 to 10 per cent. ad valorem; clapboards from $1.50 per 1,000 to $1.25; laths from 25 cents to 20 cents per 1,000, while fence posts and kindling wood were taken from the dutiable list and placed on the free list.

The only change in the sugar schedule consisted of a reduction of five-hundredths of a cent in the differential on refined sugar.

In agricultural products broom corn was taken from the free list and made dutiable at three dollars per ton. Hops are increased from 12 to 16 cents per pound. There are also increases on lemons, figs, almonds, pineapples and chicory root. The reductions in the agricultural schedule covered bacon and hams from five to four cents per pound, lard from two to one and one-half cents, fresh meats from two to one and one-half cents, and starch from one and one-half to one cent per pound. Tallow, wool grease, dextrin, peas, sugar beets, cabbages and salt were also lowered.

The wine and liquor schedule was increased throughout to 15 per cent. over the Dingley rates.

The cotton schedule was reconstructed and readjusted to bring the duties up to those collected during the first four years of the operation of the Dingley law and to the rate then collected under that law. Since that time the rates have been lowered, in some cases from 60 to 6 per cent. by court decisions. These new rates are equivalent to an addition, on the whole, of three per cent. ad valorem increase over that collected under the present law for last year.

Cotton Hosiery.

Cotton hosiery, valued at not more than $1 per dozen is increased from 50 to 70 cents per dozen pairs; more than $1 and less than $1.50 per dozen pairs, from 60 cents to 85 cents per dozen pairs; more than $1.50 and not more than $2, from 70 cents to 90 cents per dozen pairs.

The remaining rates on stockings are the same as under the present law.

Hemp is increased from $20 to $22.50 per ton and hackle hemp from $40 to $45 per ton. The cheaper laces remain as in the present law, but there is an increase from 60 to 70 per cent. on some of the higher priced laces. In this schedule single coarse yarns are reduced from seven cents to six cents per pound and gill nettings from 25 to 20 per cent. ad valorem.

There was a general reduction in carpets and mats.

A reduction from 20 cents to 15 cents is made in hydraulic hose. Oil cloth, including linoleum, was reduced about one-third.

There was practically no change in the wool schedule from the rates of the Dingley law, but there was a readjustment between tops and yarns and a small decrease on cloths with a cotton warp.

Mechanically ground wood pulp was exempted from duty and placed on the free list with a provision for a countervailing duty against Canada. The lower grade of printing paper was reduced from $6 to $3.75 per ton and the higher grade from $8 to $3.75. There is an increase on surface coated paper and lithographing prints, including postcards and cigar labels.

Common window glass of the lower sizes, in which the imports are heavy, is given a reduction, and where changes were made in the chemical schedule there was a general decrease, except upon such articles as fancy soaps and perfumes, which were increased.

Probably the most marked reductions throughout any schedule in the bill as a result of the action of the two houses and of the conference committee are found in the metal schedule. Beginning with a decrease in the rate of iron ore from 40 to 15 cents per ton, there is a general reduction throughout that portion of the bill, pig iron going down from $4 to $2.50 per ton, and scrap iron from $4 to $1. The reduction on many of the items in this schedule amounts to about 50 per cent., and this reduction includes steel rails.

Other reductions in the metal schedule affect polished sheets, rolled sheets of iron, steel, copper, or nickel, steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms and slabs; round iron or steel wire; steel bars or rods, cold rolled, cold drawn, or cold hammered, or polished; anvils, axles; blacksmith's hammers and sledges, track tools, wedges and crowbars; bolts; cast iron pipes; cast hollow ware; chains; lap welded or jointed iron or steel boler tubes; cut nails and spikes; horseshoe nails; wire nails; spikes, nuts and washers; cut tacks; steel plates engraved; rivets; cross-cut saws, mill-saws, circular saws, pit and drag saws, steel band saws and all other saws; screws; wheels for railway purposes; aluminum; momazite sand and thorite.

Bituminous coal goes down from 67 cents to 45 cents per ton, and there are reductions on gunpowder, matches and cartridges. Agricultural implements are cut from 20 to 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Hides were placed on the free list, while the rate on band and sole leather is reduced from 20 per cent. to five per cent. ad valorem, on dressed leather from 20 per cent. to 10 per cent.; boots and shoes from 25 per cent. to 10 per cent.

Fireworks are increased from 20 per cent. advalorem to 12 cents per pound; wearing apparel made of fur from 35 to 50 per cent, and the higher class jewelry from 60 per cent. to 85 per cent. ad valorem; pencil lead is given specific rates instead of ad valorem rates with a slight increase. For the first time moving picture films are named specifically in a tariff law. The bill gives them a positive rate of 1½ cents per foot.

Petroleum, crude and refined, including kerosene, gasoline, naphtha, benzine and similar petroleum products are made free of duty and are left even without a countervailing duty.

The Dingley rates on women's and children's gloves are allowed to stand. The only change is a reduction on "schmaschen" gloves not over 14 inches in length on which the rate is made $1.25 a dozen pairs instead of $1.75.

Miscellaneous Provisions.

A provision is included in the bill which levies on all articles upon which any foreign country pays a bounty or grant upon its exportation, an additional duty equal to the amount of such bounty.

It is required that all imported articles capable of being marked without impairment of their value shall be stamped with the name of the manufacturer and the country of origin.

A very elaborate provision for the administration of the customs laws was adopted by the conferees. It is practically the same as that adopted by the senate. It is intended to prevent undervaluation of articles on which there is no foreign market by which true values may be ascertained.

Provision is made for the establishment of a customs court of appeals, with headquarters in Washington. It will comprise a presiding judge and four associate judges, at salaries of $10,000 a year. There are to be appointed to conduct government cases before this court a special assistant attorney general at $10,000, a deputy assistant attorney general at $7,500, and four attorneys at $5,000 each.

The internal revenue tax on tobacco is amended, making the rates on chewing and smoking tobacco eight cents a pound. No change was made in the tax on cigars, except those weighing under three pounds per 1,000, which were increased from 54 to 75 cents per 1,000. The rates on cigarettes were increased to $1.25 per 1,000. A prohibition against the use of coupons or special gift pledges is incorporated in the new law.

The provision granting farmers the free sale of leaf tobacco places a restriction on the retail dealer which requires him to record every sale amounting to two pounds or more to one person in one day. A number of other ironclad requirements are included in the redraft of this section adopted by the conference committee, by which it was intended to prevent any frauds upon the internal revenues, and at the same time give as much of a local market as possible to the tobacco grower. The grower had contended for unrestricted sale of amounts up to ten pounds.

Foreign-built yachts are subject to an excise tax of seven dollars per gross ton, which is to be collected annually on the first day of September. In lieu of the excise tax the owner of a foreign built yacht or pleasure boat may pay a duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem on his yacht. This will entitle him to American registry. The excise tax provision was adopted because of the fact that some question has been raised about the ability of the government to enforce collection of import duties.

Corporation Tax.

Every corporation, joint stock company or association organized for profit, and every insurance company is required to pay annually an excise tax of one per cent. upon its entire net income over and above $5,000. This feature was put into the bill to raise additional revenues to apply on the treasury deficit. The section was prepared by Attorney General Wickersham, assisted by other able lawyers in the administrative circle, and great care was taken to guard against double taxation. It provides a form of publicity which will enable the government to exercise supervision over corporations. The form of returns which must be made by corporations, and other features of the corporation tax law were made public in detail during its consideration in the senate. It is estimated that from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 a year will be collected under this form of federal taxation.

The secretary of the treasury is authorized to issue Panama canal bonds to the amount of $290,569,000, which sum, together with that already expended, equals the estimated cost of the Panama canal. It is not intended that the bonds shall be issued except as needed to provide money to carry on the work of canal construction. The bonds are to be payable 50 years from the date of issue, and will bear interest at a rate not exceeding three per cent. When the bonds are sold the secretary of the treasury will restore to the working balance the $50,000,000 paid originally for the canal property and the canal zone.

The re-enactment of the provision authorizing the issuance of treasury certificates for money borrowed to meet public expenditures, increases the amount of the authorization from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000. A large number of other provisions that are in force under the existing tariff law are included in the conference bill, with a few changes in phraseology in several cases.

The drawback provision of the Dingley law is incorporated in the conference bill in lieu of the drawback of the house bill which intended to permit the substitution of domestic material in the manufactured article for export to the same quantity that the imported material, upon which a drawback was obtainable, was used in the manufacture of similar articles for domestic consumption. An additional provision was adopted entitling users of domestic alcohol in the manufacture of perfumery and cosmetics to secure a drawback of internal revenue tax to the amount of alcohol used in an exported article.

Senate Ideas Accepted.

Practically all the administrative features of the bill which were adopted in the senate were accepted by the conferees. They include a new maximum and minimum feature, a corporation tax law instead of the inheritance tax adopted by the house, authorization for a bond issue to raise money to build the Panama canal, as well as numerous other features.

The maximum and minimum provision prescribes duties in accordance with the rates named in the dutiable list until March 31, 1910, when 25 per cent. ad valorem is to be added automatically as the maximum duty. The president is authorized to apply the minimum rates, however, to imports from a country which gives its best rates to the products of the United States and is made the judge as to whether a foreign country accords to the United States treatment which is reciprocal and equivalent. When he finds that this condition exists he is to issue a proclamation putting in effect the minimum rates and until the time of the proclamation the maximum rates will apply.

The president is empowered to employ such persons as may be required to secure information to assist the president in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him and information which will be useful to the officers of the government in the administration of the customs laws. The reciprocity treaty with Cuba is not affected by the maximum and minimum provision.

The president is empowered also to abrogate those reciprocity treaties which can be terminated by diplomatic action. It is made his duty to give 10 days' notice after the bill becomes a law of his intention to bring those treaties to an end. All other treaties which contain no stipulation in regard to their termination by diplomatic action shall be abrogated by a notice of six months from the president to those countries, the notice dating from April 30, 1909, on which date Secretary Knox notified foreign governments that the United States would soon ask them to enter into new tariff relations.

Great Northern Officials Interested in Movement for Better Farming—Exhibits to be Carried Free.

James J. Hill, chairman of the Great Northern, offers $2,500 in gold as prizes for small grains and grasses exhibited at the national corn exposition to be held in Omaha, Dec. 6 to 18, and grown in the "Great Northern zone."

The announcement that Mr. Hill would pay cash prizes at the corn show to those exhibiting the best samples of grain and hay was made, following a conference of James J. and L. W. Hill with T. F. Sturgess, general manager of the corn show, Will A. Campbell of the Commercial Club of Omaha, and Prof. C. P. Bull, of the Minnesota Agricultural College. The matter of arranging the classes was placed by Mr. Hill in the hands of Prof. Bull and Prof. Thomas Shaw, of the Dakota Farmer.

The zone from which these grains and grasses may come in order to win some of the Hill money comprises an area of 214,000,000 acres in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Montana, Idaho and Washington, through which the Great Northern runs. The railroad company will also assist the farmers in every way in taking exhibits to the national corn exposition at Omaha. Baggage cars are to be routed along the lines and pick up exhibits which will be carried to Omaha without expense to the exhibitors. The interstate commerce law permits the railroads to do this, and President L. W. Hill announced that everything would be done to encourage farmers in the "Great Northern zone" to make exhibits.

Compete for World Prizes Also.

While competing for the gold offered by Mr. Hill the exhibitors from along the lines of the Great Northern are also competing for the prizes offered in the world classes, which aggregate $50,000. Both James J. and L. W. Hill express the belief that the states in their zone will carry off some of the money and trophies offered for oats and barley, as well as standing a good chance for the wheat and hay prizes against the world.

The plan is to offer two first prizes for corn, oats, barley and wheat in each of the states and one first prize in each state for alfalfa, timothy, spelt, clover and peas. When $2,500 in gold is divided some two hundred prizes will be arranged, which will make it possible for a number to get into the prize-winning class.

James J. Hill is growing a field of prize-winning alfalfa himself, but says he will not make an exhibit. From seed corn obtained from the ten ears which won $5,000 at the 1908 exposition, President L. W. Hill and a number of his friends are growing some fine patches of corn. While Mr. Hill will exhibit this corn, it will be entered in the world classes and not compete against the entries made from the northern zone.

Prof. Bull is not only to assist Mr. Hill in arranging for the big "zone" contest, but as vice-president of the exposition from Minnesota, will be interested in the exhibit the state college will have.

Plans are being made to have a model mill, bakery, grain inspection outfit and electric bleacher installed, which will show exactly how small grains are graded and handled when they reach the primary market, as well as the mills. The small grain part of the exposition is to be as large and as important as the corn exhibits, according to Prof. Bull.

THIRD WINS SHOOT.

Total of 4,404 Makes Them Champions the Tenth Time.

Camp Lakeview.—The Third regiment rifle team won here the tenth time the annual regimental match shoot and will represent the state at the national rifle shoot at Dayton, Ohio, this coming fall.

The individual scores follow:

First Regiment—F. B. Rowley, 343; E. G. Falk, 349; F. E. Krembs, 390; C. O. Peterson, 338; P. L. McClay, 334; E. C. A. Lundeen, 356; Per Ramee, 348; T. E. Harrington, 332; H. H. Hall, 369; E. Gustafson, 350; Max Mathieu, 309; M. Baldwin, 342. Regimental total, 4,160.

Second Regiment—A. Mohn, 387; E. F. Juni, 374; C. A. Grussendorf, 369; H. D. Grussendorf, 345; A. R. Schmidt, 383; O. F. Lang, 352; W. Dodge, 326; J. Hildyard, 341; C. Johnson, 360; L. W. Inglis, 344; M. O. Ronningen, 345. Regimental total, 4,262.

Third Regiment—J. Thompson, 396; C. Simpson, 360; B. W. Perrigo, 378; F. J. Britton, 381; Carl Anderson, 387; Paul Schultz, 362; O. H. Sorenson, 324; E. H. Sellhorn, 364; H. D. Marshall, 356; A. G. Bemis, 376; William Sanford, 373; C. Helmet, 347. Regimental total, 4,404.

The scores indicate targets out of a possible 450, the skirmish fire running 100 shots, the other events 50 each.

When the totals were cast up the Third regiment was shown considerably in the lead. The events yesterday were the shoots at 200, 300 and 500 yards and the "timed fire." The day opened today with the skirmish fire, followed by the 600, 800 and 1,000 yards and skirmish shoots.

TUGBOAT SEIZED BY OFFICERS.

Alleged That Duties Were Unpaid on Logs Towed From Canada.

Fergus Falls.—The United States government filed a motion in the federal court in this city, notifying the owners of the tugboat "Nick" that this boat has been seized by the United States revenue officers, together with two large rafts of logs, containing several hundred thousand feet of lumber, and that the entire property will be confiscated to the government unless redeemed within a stipulated time. The boat in question is alleged to have been towing logs from the Canadian to the American side of the Rainy river, and it is alleged that the persons in charge have been failing to pay the tariff duties. The government brought similar proceedings here in the case of a large quantity of whisky that was seized on the White Earth Indian reservation a short time ago.

MINE IS WORTH MILLIONS.

Scranton at Hibbing Will Pay State Vast Sums in Royalties.

Hibbing.—The state of Minnesota has struck it rich at the Scranton location on the outskirts of Hibbing.

The property is controlled by Pickands, Mather & Co., and they have just awarded a contract for sinking a concrete working shaft. This mine will not only be the biggest the state owns, but it will be the biggest underground mine on the Messabi range.

Twenty-five million tons of ore have been shown up by drills and the state will pull down 25 cents a ton royalty. The state will receive more than $8,000,000.

The Scranton mine was formerly called the Elizabeth.

Beltrami Hearing Postponed.

Bemidji.—The hearing against Beltrami county officials, which was to have commenced here Tuesday before M. E. Ryan, has been postponed until Aug. 5. This was partly because of the term of court at International Falls, in which the Bemidji attorneys interested in the hearing were employed, and in part because of other work of Mr. Ryan at Brainerd.

Brakeman Killed at Superior.

Duluth.—Hurled through the air from a boxcar by the sudden stopping of a train, Julius Olson, aged 33, a Northern Pacific switchman, was crushed to death at Superior.

A SURE SIGN.

When It Appears Act at Once.

Trouble with the kidney secretions is a certain sign that your kidneys are deranged and that you should use Doan's Kidney Pills. They cure all irregularities and annoyances, remove backache and side pains and restore the kidneys to health. Charles Cole, 204 N. Buckeye St., Iola, Kans., says: "The kidney secretions were irregular, scanty and painful and contained sediment. My back was stiff and lame and my limbs swelled. I grew weak and discouraged. Doan's Kidney Pills removed these troubles entirely. I have been well for two years."

Remember the name—Doan's. Sold by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Widow to Widowers.

Mr. Robert Marshall, a well-known London police court missionary, recently received the following letter:

"Dear Sir: Reading of you sometimes in newspapers, I take the liberty of asking if you know off a very respeckable man wishen to get married again. I have bean a widow for years now and am all alone in the world. Trusting to your honor and remaining yours respeckable, Mrs. ——, middle age."

"I want you to prescribe for me, doctor," said the sallow-complexioned man. "I have cold feet; what would you suggest?"

"A ton of coal, promptly replied the witty physician. "Five dollars, please."

THE NEW WOMAN

Made Over by Quitting Coffee.

Coffee probably wrecks a greater percentage of Southerners than of Northern people for Southerners use it more freely.

The work it does is distressing enough in some instances; as an illustration, a woman of Richmond, Va., writes:

"I was a coffee drinker for years and for about six years my health was completely shattered. I suffered fearfully with headache and nervousness, also palpitation of the heart and loss of appetite.

"My sight gradually began to fail and finally I lost the sight of one eye altogether. The eye was operated upon and the sight partially restored, then I became totally blind in the other eye.

"My doctor used to urge me to give up coffee, but I was willful and continued to drink it until finally in a case of severe illness the doctor insisted that I must give up the coffee, so I began using Postum, and in a month I felt like a new creature.

"I steadily gained in health and strength. About a month ago I began using Grape-Nuts food and the effect has been wonderful. I really feel like a new woman and have gained about 25 pounds.

"I am quite an elderly lady and before using Postum and Grape-nuts I could not walk a square without exceeding fatigue, now I walk ten or twelve without feeling it. Formerly in reading I could remember but little but now my memory holds fast what I read.

Several friends who have seen the remarkable effects of Postum and Grape-Nuts on me have urged that I give the facts to the public for the sake of suffering humanity, so, although I dislike publicity, you can publish this letter if you like."

Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

The investigation that is being made by the Department of the Interior, by sending an agent to look over the eleven townships will undoubtly result to the advantage of the actual settlers.

It is estimated that the attendance on September 6th, at the Minnesota state fair, the opening day will reach 125,000. This is to be labor day, and all the labor organizations will attend in a body.

Gov. Johnson and official staff are taking in the big Seattle exposition this week. The governor will improve this oppretunity to get aquainted with the people of the west just so they will know him when he is called on to head the democratic party in the next presidential race.

No gambling games will be allowed on the Minnesota stat fair grounds during the great state fair, and about all you car bet on is which will draw the bigest crowd, on the opening day September the 6th; the opening address, of Senator Knute Nelson, or the great race between Dan Patch and Minor Heir, the two fastest trotting horses in the world.

DITCHES AND TELEPHONS.

Our north side of the river friends seems to be in a mix up over the location of a county ditch, and the ley— towns man has began to edit, and we expect Vrolson will soon begin to certify, and Swanson to "communicate.„ That's the stuff! Go it you old stockings. "Buck" any public improvement, to a stand still. Don't let us have any ditches, or bridges in this town, unless they pass right by your door, but don't try to do anything yourself to improve or build up the country, but just lay low until some one else starts, then "fight um." We don't know how Swanson is fixed for time just now, but we presume you can get him to get up "communications", as soon as he gets that continued story compleated; about the bog that got his head taken off by sour cream.

We have not taken much interest in this ditch matter up to the present time, but as our Erie friend took quite an active part in bridge building last winter, it gives us pleasure to get into the ditch and telephone business a little this summer, as it is a long road that never has a turn.

Our colums are open to anyone that wants to jump in and rip the Erie publisher up the back, for trying to get ditches and telephone lines through the country, the same as he did his on the bridge matter last winter. If any one of you want to soak it to him take a couple of cod fish and go down and see Swanson and get him to write a communication, and we will publish it. You can have them take for a text. "All telephone lines and ditches goes by Erie." Then have them stand up and sing. "But whether they be great or small, the farmers pays it all." That man Lattimore has a great head on him, for lathing the farmers, and we expect he will farm them pretty heavy on that telephone deal.

We advise the farmer to be very careful about making investments in county ditches and telephone lines at this time.

A MUTUAL SURPRISE.

The Meeting Between an Ambitious Hunter and His First Grizzly.

In "Sketches of Life in the Golden State" Colonel Albert S. Evans tells an amusing anecdote of an ambitious hunter who met his first grizzly bear—in procession. The incident occurred in the woods near the site of the present town of Monterey.

The hunter sat down to rest in the shade of a tree and unwittingly went to sleep. When he woke it was near sunset, and he sat up, rubbing his eyes and contemplating a return to his hotel, several miles distant.

Just then a rustling and crackling noise from a clump of chaparral about 100 yards away attracted his attention. Out walked a grizzly bear, a monarch of his kind. He yawned, licked his jaws and then advanced toward the tree where our hunter sat, but evidently was unconscious of his presence.

His grizzly majesty had proceeded about twenty paces when a female bear followed him, and an instant later a third grizzly followed her at a slow, shambling pace.

The hunter sat spellbound with terror as the procession came toward him until the forward grizzly was within thirty yards. Then, scarcely realizing what he did, he sprang to his feet and uttered a frenzied yell—yell upon yell!

The effect was magical. The foremost bear sprang into the air, turned sharply about, knocked the female down, rolled over her, gathered himself up and bolted "like forty cart loads of rock going down a chute" straight for the chaparral again, the other two bears close at his heels and never turning to see what had frightened them.

The hunter, seeing the enemy retreating, sprang to his feet and fled at top speed for the hotel, leaving hat and gun behind. The truth of his wild and startling tale was proved the next day by the numerous bear tracks of different sizes found in the marshy ground near by. But the three bears had gone off beyond pursuit.

THE NEW ORE.

One of Andrew Carnegie's Early Iron Experiences.

Andrew Carnegie once stated that a short time after the starting of his first plant in Pittsburg he had an odd experience with iron ore.

"I was offered some ore that sampled about the usual grade, so far as I was able to judge from appearances, at a reduced price," he said. "I bought several thousand tons—a big order for those days. The second day after we commenced to run it the foreman came to the office and told me the new ore was of no account, that it did not flow and that the furnaces were so choked they would have to be dumped unless some remedy was found. Those fires were built to last two years, and to dump them at this time would mean so heavy a loss as to practically put me out of business. A young chemist had called on me a few weeks before, and, while I had not paid much attention to him, I had kept his card. It occurred to me that he might possibly be of some help, though I confess I did not then see what chemistry had to do with the iron business. But I sent for him, and he came at once. First he examined the new ore and then the old that we had been running without difficulty, and finally he looked at the furnaces. To avoid delay he made a little test of the two ores right there. I had told him when he arrived that I felt sure the new ore was worthless and admitted my mistake in buying it. Of course I did this as I did not want him to think I was ignorant of the business. You can imagine my surprise, then, when at the conclusion of his test he quietly informed us that the new ore was so good we did not know how to run it. The fact was that the new ore contained 20 per cent more iron than the old, and all that it was necessary to do was to add a proportionate increase of flux to bring about reduction."—American Industries.

Heat Conductors.

Some substances conduct heat more freely than others, silver among the metals being the best conductor, and as a unit of measurement is taken at 1,000. Compared with silver as a conductor, gold is 981, copper 845, zinc 641, tin 422, steel 397 and wrought iron 436. Glass, wood, gases, liquids and resinous substances are bad conductors. Water is such a poor conductor that if heat is applied to the top it will boil at the top, while the bottom will remain cold.

A Caroline Islands Legend.

The Caroline Islands group includes, besides coral islands, five mountainous islands of basaltic formation, beautiful and fertile with rivers and springs. Among the many queer legends of these children of the Pacific there is none more highly improbable than their theory as to the origin of these islands and their inhabitants. They think they themselves were very strong in the water—in fact, they lived in it. The story goes that a woman and her children were floating around on the reef when a man appeared from the west with a basket of soil on his shoulders. He had started out to make an island with a mountain on it. One of the children cried out to him, "Give us a little soil to make a place for our mother to rest, for she is very weak and cannot swim." He took out a handful of the earth and threw it down, making an island. As the man was going on his way over the water the son slyly made a hole in the basket, so as he proceeded on his way he left a trail of land behind. Suddenly he became conscious that the basket seemed light, and, looking around, he saw the land. In his anger he turned about and trod upon it, and thus the islands were formed.

An Apt Answer.

The dangers associated with the fishing industry on the Newfoundland banks are many and grave. Foremost among them is that the dories may be upset while fishing, which involves almost inevitable loss of their occupants. Callous captains, secure themselves from the necessity of going, frequently order their men out when the weather does not warrant it, and disastrous are the results. One of these brutal skippers was aptly answered once by a bank man of whose courage or capacity there was no question.

"Out with you!" shouted the captain. "Hurry up there! It's a fishing day!"

"Oh, no, skipper!" replied the dory man. "It's too stormy today for a boat to fish."

"Nonsense, man!" rejoined the skipper. "If my old grandmother was here today she'd get her dory out."

"Then, skipper," said the man, "if her grandson will come out with me now I'll haul my trawl."

It is needless to say no dories were launched from that schooner on that date.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Doors In China.

In China doors are often round, leaf shaped or semicircular. In placing them the builder usually avoids having one opposite another lest evil spirits find their way from the street into the recesses of the building. The doorways separating the courts of a garden are usually of an elaborate kind, and the octagonal form is one of the most popular. Religious superstition asserts itself in Chinese architecture, and the universal sacredness of the numerals 3 and 9 is shown in the arrangement of temple doors. There is a triple gateway to each of the halls of the imperial palace, and the same order prevails at the Ming tombs. The Temple of Heaven has a triple roof, a triple marble staircase, and all its mystic symbolism points either to 3 or its multiples.

George Singer, the Rhoda dairyman's cream check amounted to a little over One hundred and thity one dollars last month. How is that for our peavine hay farmers? This is the second largest monthly cream check in the county.

We got mixed up in a broko runaway on Wednesday evening, in which we got seariously hurt and consider ourselves very fortunate to escape with out life. While assisting to fix up a hay stack, on the meadow the horses that had been left standing near by took fright and started to run, when we made the mistake of jumping in behind them to try to get hold of the lines that was tied on the ladder of the hay rack, but only got hold of one line and turned the team into a soft spot in the meadow, where they slowed down enough so Mr. Clark got on the wagon and got the lines and stored them. We was in a position where it meant death or seatious injury to drop under the wheels which we would soon had to have done if the team had not been stopped.

CLEARWATER LOCALS.

News are scarse this week.

Mr. John Buckstrand left for Northwood N.D. this week to take in the harvest and threshing season.

There is a revival of the timeworn style of going to Dakota for harvest and threshing. When will the settlers of eastern Red Lake County be relieved of having to do this kind of business? It seems to that all this ware and tear on men and horses going to Dakota threshing is not what it is "cracked up" to be.

Suburban.

Tragic Tale of a Tragedian.

"The awfulest and the funniest stage wait I ever lived through," said a sprightly English actress, "was when a certain well known London actor manager, whose name I dare not divulge, was doing a tremendous curse scene on a darkened stage. He had the audience spellbound with his sonorous declamation, which, of course, they didn't know depended largely upon his ample mouthful of false teeth. At the very climax of his bloodcurdling maledictions the entire dental collection dropped out suddenly in the excitement of the moment and bounded into some obscure hiding place. The tragedian's mighty voice died down to an unintelligible mumble as he groped about frantically in search of the missing masticators. We were all too helpless from laughter to be of much help in this critical situation. At last, after what seemed like half an hour of the most hysterical suspense, the stage manager located the teeth with the aid of a dark lantern and restored them to the frantic star, who clapped them into his mouth and began cursing again with redoubled earnestness. I never knew what the audience thought, and no one ever dared to ask the actor manager."—New York World.

Quicksilver.

The ore from which quicksilver is obtained is a brilliant red rock known as cinnabar. When of high purity it is actually vermilion in color. Cinnabar is the original source of the pigment known commercially as vermilion. It is a compound of sulphur and quicksilver, and in order to separate the latter from the sulphur the rock is roasted. Passing off in the form of a gas, the mercury is afterward condensed and flows out in a fine stream, like a continuous pencil of molten silver. Like gold and silver, mercury is occasionally found in a native or pure state. Sometimes the miner's pick penetrates a cavity that contains a cupful or more of the elusive and beautiful fluid. Miners suffer much from the poisonous effects of the quicksilver fumes. Extreme cleanliness is the best safeguard for workers in this dangerous occupation. Use is also made of a sort of lemonade which serves to a certain extent as an antidote, a strong acid taking the place of lemon juice in the composition of the drink.

Must Keep the Curtains Up.

"In London it is strictly against the law for the driver of any public conveyance to allow the curtains of his vehicle to be pulled down," said a man who has visited the English metropolis. "By day or night the windows of cabs, hansoms, carriages, or what not, whether drawn by horses or propelled by electric power, must be so open to public inspection as to allow a plain view of those occupying the interior. A closed rig wouldn't get a block before a London bobby would nab its driver and hale him to a magistrate's office, where he would get no mercy. The law is based on the theory that closed vehicles lend themselves easily to the commission of robbery or murder and that they may also assist a criminal to make his escape."—Baltimore American.

Their Troubles.

"You've got no grounds to envy me," said the millionaire to the beggar. "I've got just as many troubles as you have."

"No doubt yer right, boss," said the beggar humbly, "but the difficulty with me is I ain't got nothin' else."

BRIBERY IN RUSSIA.

An Incident of the Reign of the "Czar-Liberator."

An old and long retired Russian general, a man of the "old school," related the following story in illustration of the official bribery that prevails in Russia, the incident being one within his own personal knowledge:

During the reign of Alexander II., the "czar-liberator," the widow of a distinguished general endeavored to obtain an appointment in a certain ministry for her only son, a young man of superior education and intelligence. The minister promised the widow to reserve the first occurring vacancy in his department. She waited in vain for the fulfillment of the promise and twice repeated her appeal by letter. She learned, too, that in the meantime several vacancies had been filled by other candidates.

The widow then waited upon the emperor and told his majesty of the minister's broken promises and her own keen disappointment, and after a few moments' consideration the czar asked her if she had inclosed a gift of money to the minister with her written application.

"Why, certainly not, your majesty. I should not dare put such an affront upon his excellency."

"Do not trouble yourself about the affront, madame," replied the czar, "but renew your proposal to the minister and inclose £1,000 to him."

"But I have no such sum of money, your majesty," said the widow dolefully.

"Oh, as to that, I will lend you the money, and the minister will no doubt repay me, and you will inform me, please, of the result of your renewed application with the inclosure."

The widow sent her son to the minister with the £1,000 lent by the czar inclosed with a politely written note, the result being that the young man received the desired appointment the same day.

About a week later the minister had just concluded his customary official report to the czar when his majesty observed, "By the way, there is a very intelligent and promising young man, the son of the late General ——, for whom you can perhaps find a fairly prospective position in your department."

"But, your majesty," said the minister, "that young man is already in my department, and I should say that he is likely to make a career for himself."

"Tell me, please," quietly asked the czar, "how much did this youth's mother pay you for the appointment?"

The minister was too wily and tactful outwardly to manifest his surprise and chagrin, and he knew, too, that his safety demanded a perfectly candid reply to his sovereign.

"Would your majesty be interested," he said, "to hear what I myself paid for the influence which procured my portfolio from your gracious hands? The total sum was £22,500, and, relatively speaking, I do not think, with all humility, that this lady has paid at all dearly for the prospects of her son."

The minister repaid to the czar the £1,000 and was not unkindly dismissed from the audience, and he also retained his portfolio.—Odessa Cor. London Standard.

The African Buffalo.

A wounded buffalo is vastly more dangerous when he runs away than when he charges, for in nine cases out of ten after a dash that may be for a few hundred yards or a mile he will revengefully circle back to an interception of his own trail, stand hidden in grass or thicket until his pursuer comes plodding along the trail and then charge upon him. Despite the fierce temper of a lone bull, his savage cunning and his great, charging bulk, I believe him much less dangerous than the lion, for he has far less speed, lacks the lion's poisoned claws and is a much bigger target. This opinion is substantiated by the indisputable fact that at least ten men are killed or mauled by lion to one killed by buffalo.—Edgar Beecher Bronson in Century.

The Temple of Zeus.

All that remains of the great temple of Zeus, which was 700 years in building, is to be found about 150 yards from the foot of the Acropolis at Athens. The ruins consist of sixteen columns of the Corinthian order, six and one-half feet in diameter and sixty feet high. It was the second largest temple erected by the Greeks, one superior to it in size being the temple of Diana at Ephesus. According to a legend, its foundation was built by Dukalion, the Greek Noah, who from this point witnessed the waters of the flood subside. An opening in the ground is said to be the orifice through which the flood disappeared.

Amended.

In a book of musical criticism the author alluded in flattering terms to the works of his friend Herr Q. Unfortunately during the printing of the volume the two friends quarreled. Then the offended author had inserted in each copy of the book a slip of paper with the following note: "Erratum, page 94, line 21, for 'Herr Q., the eminent composer and distinguished musician,' read 'Herr Q., the pretentious violinist and impudent and clumsy plagiarist!'"—London Mail.

Testing Dear Little Fido's Milk.

"Algy, dear," remarked a young wife to her husband, "I wish you would taste this milk and see if it is perfectly sweet. If it's the least bit sour I mustn't give any of it to dear little Fido."—London Tit-Bits.

Barrie and Kipling.

Mr. Barrie was one day at Waterloo station in a hurry to catch a train. He was hastening from the bookstall laden with papers, "a good many sixpenny ones among them," he dolefully relates, when, in rushing around a corner, he fell into the arms of Rudyard Kipling, equally in a tearing hurry. They turned on each other with scowling faces, then smiled in recognition and asked each other whither he went. Then Kipling, exclaiming, "Lucky beggar, you've got papers!" seized the bundle from Barrie, flung him some money and made off. "But you did not stoop to pick up his dirty halfpence, did you?" queried one of Mr. Barrie's hearers amusedly. "Didn't I, though?" returned Barrie, and added ruefully, "But he hadn't flung me half enough."—St. James' Gazette.

Bonheur's Humor.

Mlle. Rosa Bonheur (Rosa stood for Rosalie) was not without a sense of humor, so it is told of her that when presiding over a school of design in Paris, the pupils being girls, the artist was disgusted with the class because, imitative of their teacher, the young women had cut their hair short. "Goodness," cried Rosa Bonheur, "how horrid you all look! This is not a class of boys. You silly creatures, let your hair alone and do your best so as to retain all the advantages of your sex."

Nurse and Nursery Combined.

A recent visitor to Brittany describes in the New Orleans Times-Democrat the two story closed bed of the Breton peasant, in many cases a richly carved and ornamented heirloom and always highly prized.

One day the visitor was expressing her admiration of a certain "lit-clos," when madam pulled the sliding panels apart and revealed the figure of her husband sleepily rubbing his eyes and wanting to know what was the matter. She calmly explained to him that the visitor wanted to see the inside of the bed and then explained to the visitor that her good man had been out fishing since dawn and was very tired. The visitor begged him to close the panels and go to sleep again, which he immediately did, but not before she noticed that he was fully dressed. It seems that the Breton peasant always disappears into the "lit-clos" fully dressed and always emerges therefrom in the same condition. While her husband slept madam enlarged on the advantages of a "lit-clos" in bringing up a family.

"I have had six children," she said, "and when they were little I used to put three in the top story and three in the bottom, then close the panels and leave them with an easy mind."

Style's Freakishness.

"I want to be dressed in the height of fashion," said Mr. Suddenroll.

"I'll see to it that your clothes fit you perfectly," replied the tailor.

"But that's what I'm in doubt about. Is it fashionable just now to have your clothes fit?"

Exceptions.

"You don't have to be enthusiastic to succeed in some things," said the boarding-house philosopher; "I once saw a man achieve a speed of a mile a minute sliding down a mountain side, without the slightest effort on his part and without having had any ambition to do it."

Always a Way.

"The cook has furnished rather small portions," said the hostess. "The woman guests won't eat much, but how about the men?"

"I'll circulate around and nominate each of 'em to make an after-dinner speech," responded the host. "That will effectually kill off their appetites."

Wonderful.

"This is a remarkable world!" exclaimed O'Brien. "I was walking down the street this morning and I met a man I hadn't seen for about twelve years."

"Yes," rejoined Murphy, "it is a remarkable world. I just had an experience much like that myself. I was walking down the street not ten minutes ago and I met two men—two, mind you—that I'd never met before."

CLEVER THIRD BASEMAN OF THE CUBS

Harry Steinfeldt, whose batting and fielding around the third sack has helped the Chicago team win three straight National league pennants and two world's championships, was severely grilled when he broke into the big league with the Cincinnati team when Owner Charles Murphy was a baseball writer in that city. This grilling seemed to have a good effect on Steinfeldt and transformed him from an ordinary player into a star. When Murphy obtained control of the Cubs one of his first acts was to secure Steinfeldt, and he has been with the team ever since.

JOSS KEEPS THE BATTERS GUESSING WITH NEW BALL

"Human Weather Strip" of Cleveland Uses "False Rise" with Success Against Hitters.

Addie Joss, the Cleveland twirling star, has batters guessing with his "false rise" ball. The "false rise" is not new. It was a favorite with Radbourne, and at various times since that star's day pitchers having great speed have had the "false rise" in their repertoire.

The "false rise" is delivered as a straight ball, thrown overhand and released when the hand is at the crown of the arc described in delivery. The ball is thrown with a sharp backward spin, caused by whipping the fingers downward as the ball leaves the hand.

For 55 feet the ball shoots down an inclined plane, headed for the batter's knees. But the descent ceases about eight feet in front of the plate and the ball travels to the catcher horizontally. In other words, the ball "breaks" from the downward to the horizontal.

Addie Joss.

The scientific explanation of this delivery is that the vertical spin given the ball at delivery produces air friction, and as the ball travels this friction packs the atmosphere beneath the revolving ball, until, following the line of least resistance, the ball loses its initial impulse and travels, not through the cushion it has formed, but over it.

When mixed with his curve, fast ball, fadeaway and slow one, the "false rise" gives Joss a box of tricks unequaled by any other man in the business. And when his calculating brain is added, the human weather strip becomes perhaps the most dangerous pitcher in baseball.

BIG "SWAP" BETWEEN CUBS AND BROOKLYN IS PLANNED

If Exchange Now Pending Is Brought About Four Players Will Be Involved.

One of the biggest baseball deals of the year is pending between the Chicago and Brooklyn National league clubs. The swap, if it goes through, will involve the transfer of four players—Johny Kling, the great catcher of the 1908 world's champions; Catcher Bill Bergen and Outfielder Al Burch of the Superbas and Heinie Zimmerman, the Cubs' utility man. If Kling can be secured by Brooklyn he will replace Harry Lumley as manager of the Washington Park athletes.

Though the trade would be a big thing for both clubs, it isn't at all certain that it will go through. Kling says he will never play for the Cubs again under any circumstances, and Charley Murphy seems just as determined to keep him on the Chicago reserve list. Murphy, however, needs a good catcher to alternate with Pat Moran, and in Bergen he would get one of the best in the business. The Chicago outfield, too, needs patching up, and Burch would fill it nicely. He is hitting hard, is fast on the bases and ranges over whole slathers of territory in the field. Jim Sheckard appears to be going back, and is neither hitting nor fielding as well as he did last year or the year before. If the Cubs secure Burch Sheckard will be benched in the present Superba's favor.

President Ebbets has not publicly found fault with Harry Lumley's work as manager, but he is not satisfied with the team's standing by a long shot. Before the season opened the Superbas looked like a sure enough fifth place outfit, with a fighting chance of landing in the first division. This promise was made good for a couple of weeks, but since then it has become a great deal of a joke except to the Brooklyn rooters.

Kling would jump at the chance to join the Superbas as manager. He has long wanted to run a team. Last winter he had it all cooked up with Garry Herrmann to manage the Reds, and Murphy had promised to release him. Charley, however, took it all back, and told Kling he would have to put in another season at least with the Cubs.

It is understood that if Kling is traded to Brooklyn he will go into partnership with Ebbets in the ownership of a bowling academy.

Donlin Demands High Price.

Mike Donlin, once the pride of New York baseball fans, but now a real actor man, may still be lacing out those much-needed runs for the Giants before the end of the season. It is all up to John T. Brush, and if he comes across with the price the star outfielder will postpone his trip to Europe for a spell. "If they will pay me the salary I asked for, $8,000, I will agree to finish the season with the club," said Mike. "They offered me $6,000, but I think I am entitled to what I have asked for. I have not heard a word from McGraw since February 1 and if they want me to play ball I will be glad to do so if they will come to my terms."

Unconditional Release for Bowerman.

Frank Bowerman, until recently manager of the Boston Nationals, has been given his unconditional release by President John S. C. Dovey. Rumors have it that it is unlikely he will soon be back in any uniform President Dovey has asked for waivers on Bowerman and if the other clubs in the big league waive claim the ex-manager will be a free agent

"I suffered from eczema on my hands, arms and feet for about twelve years, my hands and feet would swell, sweat and itch, then would become callous and get very dry, then peel off and get raw. I tried most every kind of salve and ointment without success. I tried several doctors, but at last gave up thinking there was a cure for eczema. A friend of mine insisted on my trying the Cuticura Remedies, but I did not give them a trial until I got so bad that I had to do something. A doctor was one day stopped in the streets by one of his woman patients whose malady was purely imaginary. The doctor, who was known for his intolerance of and nonsympathy with such invalids, after listening somewhat impatiently to the woman's detailed account of all her feelings and symptoms, told her to shut her eyes and put out her tongue. She promptly did so. On opening her eyes in a few seconds the doctor was nowhere to be seen, and the woman awoke to the fact that he had left her standing by herself in a busy thoroughfare with her eyes shut and her tongue hanging out.

THE SUNBEAM.

VOL. IX. SUNBEAM, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, AUG. 13, 1909. NO. 20.

COSTS HIGH TO RUN THE STATE

TREASURER DINEHART COMPUTES THE EXPENSE OF GOVERNMENT MACHINE.

TAKES $21.54 EVERY MINUTE

Disbursements Last Year $12,717,018.25, Leaving on Hand $2,773,250.75. Legislature Is an Expensive Luxury.

The State of Minnesota spends $21,54 a minute. It spends $1,292.52 every hour and $31,020.45 every day. The total is $943,539.08 every month.

These figures are shown in the preliminary report of the financial condition of the state as prepared by State Treasurer Clarence C. Dinehart for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1909. That is the average amount expended during the past year, not counting the money loaned by the state from the permanent trust funds.

Starting with a balance of cash on hand Aug. 1, 1908, the state treasurer took in during the year $12,521,980.02. The total expenditures amounted to $12,717,018.25, leaving on hand at present $2,773,250.41.

Legislature Came High.

The state legislature for 1909 cost $290,752.75.

The permanent trust funds of the state, which are invested in securities, state and local, bearing 3, 3½ and 4 per cent interest, amount to $16,273,298.91, of which there are loans to:

Minnesota municipal corporations	$7,814,298.91
New capitol certificates	2,300,000.00
University campus certificates	50,000.00
Bonds of other states	6,109,000.00
Total	$16,273,298.91

Aoubt two-thirds of the permanent trust funds are invested within the state. The state board of investment has loaned to school districts and other local municipal corporations during the fiscal year $1,229,454.99.

Various items of treasury receipts are as follows:

Railroads	$2,972,792.55
Insurance companies	370,665.43
General taxation	1,745,290.97
Receipts from royalty on iron ore	118,768.52
Receipts from mineral leases	20,900.00
Inebriate hospital taxes	65,242.29
Inheritance taxes	213,992.21
Hunter's licenses	15,941.14
Automobile licenses	12,850.00
Oil inspection	34,934.40
Telephone taxes	140,958.34
Incorporation fees	73,450.00
Mortgage registration taxes	18,889.61

Business Men Confident.

Mr. Dinehart says:

"It is interesting to note that the corporation fees received during May, June and July of 1908 were $14,890, while for the same period of 1909, a time when ordinarily business interests would be conservative inasmuch as capital is timid when any possible change in a nation's policy is being considered, the receipts were $22,250. This would seem to indicate that the financial men of the middle west were satisfied with the business outlook and security of their investments."

The figures showing the amounts expended for various state institutions include all of the money spent by the state for their general support, repairs, buildings, and so forth, are as follows:

Five normal schools, $397,989.94.

Five hospitals and asylums, $1,063,645.79.

Schools for blind, deaf, cripples and delinquents, $701,441.25.

State Reformatory, $167,715.72, State prision, $1,468,163.03.

This includes $1,119,490.25 paid on account of the twine plant. The receipts during the last fiscal year have been $1,263,874.35. At the beginning of the last fiscal year, the twine account had a balance of $51,604.83. This leaves a balance at the beginning of the new year of $195,988.93.

Fighting White Plague.

The state sanitarium for consumptives cost the state $35,524.49. The receipts from this institution during the last year have been $19,948.88.

The total amount of money expended on account of the state university was $897,291.95. For the agricultural college, $41,492.54; for the Crookston agricultural college and experimental station, $48,270.55; Grand Rapids experimental station, $8,818.85.

The amount expended in support of the Soldiers' home was $122,204,51; for the Inebriate hospital, $20,842.04; for Indian war pensions, $56,896.80; for all educational purposes outside the university, $2,339,218.20.

Moorhead.—The cornerstone of the new Presbyterian church was laid here with appropriate ceremonies.

ARMOUR MAKES CHANGES.

Legal Department of Chicago Concern Advises That Local Situation Is as Before.

St. Paul, Minn.—A desire on the part of Armour & Company to gather all of the Armour corporations in Minnesota under one head is advanced as the reason for the action of officers of the Armour Packing company in sending to the secretary of state a notice of surrender of its franchise rights in Minnesota and of its withdrawal from the state.

The action is said to have nothing to do with the plans of Armour & company to build a packing plant at New Brighton, and those plans remain unchanged, according to representatives of the Armour interests.

Attorney Urion, for Armour & company, states that the action of withdrawal was "a mere formality" and without significance beyond the fact that Armour & Company desired to bring all subsidiary corporations of the Armour interests within the state under one control.

"There was only one Armour Packing company, a New Jersey corporation, operating in Minnesota," said Mr. Urion. "The company thought it best to put the whole enterprise in Minnesota under the name of Armour & company. Hence, this formal, legal and technical action. That does not mean that Armour & Company have withdrawn from Minnesota by any means."

J. Ogden Armour is not in Chicago, so could not be reached for a statement, but J. W. Stratton of the legal department of Armour & company, said over the long distance telephone from Chicago:

"The withdrawal of the Armour Packing company from Minnesota will not affect the New Brighton establishment. Armour & company are proceeding with plans for that enterprise along the original lines. No change will be made at all."

SWEDISH VILLAGE AT FAIR.

New Attraction for Minnesota Show This Year.

There will be a Swedish Village, as well as an Indian Village, an Igorrote Village, at the Minnesota State Fair this year and the State Fair grounds give promise of becoming in large part a "street of nations," from Sept. 6 to 11.

In its search for innovations for the fiftieth annual Minnesota State Fair, the board of managers has settled upon a Swedish Village as the most novel and most attractive feature available and has entered into contracts with representatives of various Swedish societies in the state by which a Swedish Village, somewhat suggestive of the Chicago World's Fair will be installed on "Machinery Hill."

A special feature of the Swedish Village will be a registration system by which all visitors will be permitted and requested to register their present address and also the place of their nativity or the province from which their immediate family came. Use of this system by the thousands of visitors will enable many to relocate friends or relatives whose addresses have long been lost and will undoubtedly result in many happy reunions.

MORE LAND FOR MINNEOPA.

Purchase of Thirty Additional Acres Authorized by Iverson.

Mankato.—As a result of a visit to the state public park at Minneopa by State Auditor Iverson, several improvements will be made. His visit was for the purpose of investigating the purchase of about thirty acres additional land, which will increase the size of the park to a trifle over one hundred acres. The park never looked prettier, and Mr. Iverson left orders for the purchase of the additional land. An attempt will be made to secure the old roadbed of the Omaha railway for an auto track to the park, and it was decided to pipe the water from a flowing artesian well half a mile distant into the park for the use of visitors.

NEW ULM HOLDUPS SENTENCED.

Sons of Minneapolis Woman Given 5 Years Each.

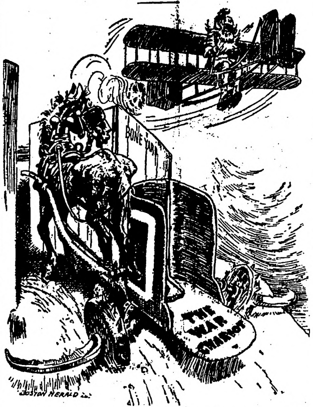
New Ulm, Minn.—Floyd Bertrand and Harold Rogers, sons of Mrs. Bertrand, of Minneapolis, pleaded guilty here to grand larceny in the second degree and each was given the limit of punishment for the offense, five years in the penitentiary. Neither is over 21 years of age.

William Nichols, an alleged accomplice and leader of the Minneapolis men, was also indicted for grand larceny in the first degree, but as he is known to be an old offender he will be kept in jail until the December term, when he will be tried.

Three Burglars Sentenced.

Hastings.—James Conners, W. R. Smith and G. H. Lee, arrested by Chief Lewis, of Farmington, for burglarizing the store of Nicholas Gores, in Hampton, and taking goods to the amount of over $400, on June 5, pleaded guilty, and were sentenced to 18 months in prison.

ABANDONED!



KILLING FOLLOWS BANK THEFT

ROBBER AND ONE PURSUER DIE IN BATTLE.

Several Others Wounded — Bandit Holds Up White Bear (Minn.) Cashier and Steals $565.

White Bear, Minn.—In a pitched battle with rifles and revolvers following the robbery of the First State bank of White Bear, Robert Pohl, said to be an ex-convict, and Edward Larken, chef at the Five Forks, a Bald Eagle lake cottage, were killed, and four others were wounded.

The dead:

Robert Pohl, the robber.

Edward Larken.

The wounded:

Thomas Skeith, grazed by spent bullet.

William Butler, shot through abdomen; at hospital in critical condition.

Richard Doran, shot through arm.

John Christie, shot through fleshy part of thigh.

Pohl, who had been working at White Bear for a week, and who is believed to have been a professional cracksman, took a check for seven dollars to the bank at 8:30 a. m., and while the cashier, Alfred Auger, was examining it he produced an automatic rifle and told him to hand over all the cash in the bank. Auger complied.

As the robber dashed out of the bank with $565 in cash Auger raised the alarm, and citizens pursued the man to the Interstate lumber yards, where he hid.

Larken entered the yards and was shot through the heart. The robber then ran to a pile of lumber a short distance beyond the lard and hid under it. A desperate battle with the posse, during which at least 500 shots were exchanged, followed.

John Brachvogel, one of the posse, who was armed with a repeating rifle, finally shot the robber in the arm. The man dropped his weapon, but picked it up again, and as he turned to fire Brachvogel shot him dead. Fifteen bullet wounds were found in the man's body.

MOB WITNESSES BEHEADING.

Great Excitement in French Capital As Murderer's Head Is Cut Off in Public.

Paris.—A sudden official announcement that a public beheading would take place at 4:30 o'clock Thursday morning in the boulevard fronting the Sante prison, created a sensation in Paris, which had not seen an execution in 15 years.

Immediately immense crowds gathered at the scene, but were kept back from the guillotine by heavy details of police and municipal guards.

The victim was one Duchemin, aged 23, a butcher. In 1908 he stabbed his mother and this not resulting in her death quick enough he finished her by strangulation. The motive for the crime was robbery.

More Apples This Year.

Buffalo, N. Y. — An apple crop in the United States slightly is excess of that a year ago and 50 per cent. larger in Canada is the estimate made by Secretary Rothwell before the International Apple Shippers' association. The association elected W. L. Wagner, Chicago, president.

SWEDEN'S CRISIS IS PASSING

Many of Strikers Resume Work—Dissension Apparent in Ranks of the Idle.

Stockholm. — The tense situation arising from the general strike proclaimed a few days ago seems to be relaxing. The grave-diggers have returned to work and dissension is apparent in the ranks of the other strikers. The employers of the largest plants in Stockholm announce that their men will return to work Monday.

It is reported that the Central Federation of the Trades unions has requested the government to mediate in the present crisis, but this is denied by the chairman of the federation. M. Von Sydow, president of the Employers' federation, declared that intervention by the government would be without result as the differences between the men and the employers were too great to be settled in such a manner. The National Labor union published a statement in the newspapers disapproving the strike of the electric light and gas workers.

As the strikers have been preventing farmers from bringing provisions into the city, troops have been detailed to patrol the country roads. The military authorities continue to dispense milk from the railroad stations for the use of children.

The authorities have forbidden the sale of methylated spirits, as it has been found that the workmen, unable to obtain their usual drink, are resorting to drinking this liquor.

KENOSHA JURIST IS FOUND

Judge Clarkson Discovered Working in a Button Factory at Sabula, Ia.

Kenosha, Wis.—Judge Joseph R. Clarkson, who disappeared from his home here on July 14, was found working in a pearl button factory at Sabula, Ia., by John Burns, one of his close friends, who has been searching for him since he left Kenosha. Judge Clarkson, in company with Burns, is expected to arrive here Saturday.

It was only a few miles from Sabula that Judge Clarkson was found 28 years ago when he disappeared from Omaha under circumstances similar to the present case. After returning home to Omaha more than a quarter of a century ago, Judge Clarkson could remember nothing of the weeks during which he was walking about the country.

One of the strange features of the case is the influence which caused him to retrace the steps which he took on his first disappearance.

The clew which led the searchers to Sabula was received in Kenosha Thursday and Burns at once set out to find his friend. Clarkson was judge of the superior court here for several years.

International Typographical Union.

St. Joseph, Mo.—The annual convention of the International Typographical union opened here Monday with a full attendance of delegates and many others. President John M. Lynch was in the chair. The union's health campaign, the label propaganda, the old age pension and the proposal to establish an insurance feature are the chief matters that are before the convention for action, which closes on Saturday

TARIFF BILL PASSED

NOT PERFECT, BUT A STEP FORWARD, IS TAFT'S COMMENT.

CONGRESS CLOSES SESSION

President and Members Leave Capital for Their Summer Homes—Gore and Johnson Give Opinions of New Law's Effect.

Washington.—Whether for weal or woe, the United States now is under a new tariff law, the extraordinary session of congress adjourning Thursday evening, after fighting since March 15 over the bill.

The president left Friday afternoon for the "summer White House" at Beverly, Mass., and all but a few of the members of congress have gone to their homes. The members of the conference committee and cabinet were dinner guests of the president Thursday night.

The conference report on the bill was agreed to by the senate by a vote of 47 to 31, and the concurrent resolution making certain changes in the leather schedule was adopted by both houses.

Following is the vote in detail:

Yeas—Aldrich, Borah, Bourne, Bradley, Brandegee, Brown, Bulkeley, Burkett, Burnham, Burrows, Burton, Carter, Clark (Wyoming), Crane, Crawford, Cullom, Curtis, Depew, Dick, Dixon, Dupont, Elkins, Flint, Frye, Gamble, Guggenheim, Hale, Heyburn, Johnson, Jones, Kean, Lodge, Lorimer, McCumber, Oliver, Page, Penrose, Perkins, Pisles, Root, Scott, Smith (Michigan), Smoot, Stephenson, Sutherland, Warner, Wetmore—47.

Nays—Bacon, Bailey, Bankhead, Beveridge, Bristow, Chamberlain, Clapp, Clay, Culberson, Cummins, Daniel, Dolliver, Fletcher, Foster, Frazier, Gore, Hughes, La Follette, McLaurin, Martin, Nelson, Newlands, Overman, Paynter, Raynor, Shively, Simmons, Smith (Maryland), Smith (South Carolina), Stone, Taliaferro—31.

Senator McEnery of Louisiana (Dem), who was absent, was paired on the bill. He was the only Democrat favoring the measure.

The bill received all the Republican votes except those of Bristow, Clapp, Cummins, Dolliver, La Follette, Beveridge and Nelson.

The following are the new appointments made by Speaker Cannon for house committee chairmanships: Vreeland of New York, banking and currency; Rodenberg of Illinois, industrial arts and expositions; Mann of Illinois, interstate and foreign commerce; Weeks of Massachusetts, post offices and postroads; Alexander of New York, rivers and harbors; Parker of New Jersey, judiciary; Prince of Illinois, claims.

President Taft arrived at the capitol at 4:45 p. m., and 20 minutes later signed the bill, which became a law Friday.

Bending over the president as he affixed his signature were Secretary Knox, Secretary MacVeagh, Attorney General Wickersham, Postmaster General Hitchcock, Secretary Nagel and Secretary Wilson. Standing about the table were Senator Aldrich, Representative Payne and many other members of the senate and house. Mr. Payne got the pen. Taft also signed the Philippine tariff measure and other bills.

After signing the tariff bill President Taft gave out a statement embodying his views of the new act, which he designates officially as the "Payne bill," in accordance with past custom of giving first recognition to the framer of the measure in the house of representatives.

The president declares that, while the bill is not perfect by any means, nor "a complete compliance with promises made, strictly interpreted," it is, nevertheless, a sincere effort on the part of the party to make a downward revision and to comply with the promises of the platform.

The statement in part follows:

"I have signed the Payne tariff because I believe it to be the result of sincere effort on the part of the Republican party to make a downward revision, and to comply with the promises of the platform as they have been generally understood, and as I interpreted them in the campaign before election.

"This is not a perfect tariff bill, or a complete compliance with the promises made, strictly interpreted, but a fulfillment free from criticism in respect to a subject matter involving many schedules and thousands of articles could not be expected.

"The corporation tax is a just and equitable excise measure, which it is hoped will produce a sufficient amount to prevent a deficit and which, incidentally, will secure valuable statistics and information concerning the many corporations of the country, and will constitute an important step toward that degree of publicity and regulation which the tendency in corporate enterprises in the last 20 years has shown to be necessary."

BIG G. A. R. PARADE

REVIEW IS MAIN FEATURE OF THE ENCAMPMENT IN SALT LAKE CITY.

THRONG CHEERS VETERANS

Living Flag of Children Sing as the Old Soldiers Truge By—Other Events That Mark the Grand Army's Gathering.

Salt Lake City. Utah, Aug. 11.—Forty-four departments of the Grand Army of the Republic, escorted by the Fifteenth United States infantry and the National Guard of Utah and followed by the Naval Veterans, the Ex-Union Prisoners of War, the Army Nurses in carriages, the Sons of Veterans and the women's organizations allied to the Grand Army, marched to-day in the parade that was the culminating feature of the forty-third national encampment. Many military bands and fife and drum corps made the music to which the old warriors kept step. The procession formed at Eagle Gate, which is one of Salt Lake City's many picturesque features.

When Seventh South street was reached the paraders themselves broke out in mighty cheering, for there they turned in front of the most beautiful feature of the day, the "Living Flag." On an immense stand were 2,600 children dressed in the national colors and so arranged that they made a perfect representation of a waving American flag.

Reviewed by Notables.

Countermarching the parade now moved north on Main street back to South Temple street. Here, just to the left of the Brigham Young pioneer monument and close to Temple square, the reviewing stand had been erected. It was occupied by Commander-in-Chief Henry M. Nevius, Gov. William Spry of Utah, the chief executives of other states, and a large number of other officials and distinguished guests. The parading bodies all passed in review, saluting those in the stand, and at once disbanded. All the bands as they arrived here were massed close to the stand and as the culmination of the parade, 4,000 school children marched by, the united bands playing and the children singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

After a good rest, the city's guests all turned out again this evening and witnessed the magnificent display of fireworks on thetop of Ensign peak, just north of the city.

Big "Greetings" Meeting.

Monday evening came the first public event on the program—a great camp-fire in the assembly hall in the Temple grounds. All that night and throughout Tuesday the stream of arrivals continued, but by Tuesday evening practically all the visitors had been received and distributed. That night the greatest function of the encampment tok place. This was the "Greetings" meeting in the Mormon Tabernacle. The immense building easily seats 10,000 persons, and it was filled to its capacity.

Col. Frank H. Starrett, the executive director of the encampment, called the vast assemblage to order an dintroduced William H. King of Salt Lake City, who acted as temporary chairman. He made a brief address and was followed by Gov. William Spry of Utah, Mayor John S. Bradford of Salt Lake City, and L. H. Smythe, commander of the department of Utah, all of whom told in eloquent words how proud they were to welcome to the state and city the Grand Army and their friends.

Mr. King then introduced Commander-in-Chief Nevius, who was received with wild cheering and the waving of hats and handkerchiefs. As soon as the tumult had subsided, Commander Nevius delivered a graceful response to the welcoming speeches and took the chair.

Ate the Ribbons.

A visiting young man recently ate the ribbons tied around the sandwich served to him at a party. He was very polite, and didn't like to ask what the ribbons were for, and so he ate them. As he had at least four sandwiches it is estimated that he ate fully three yards of ribbon. We have so often had occasion to point out the blunders made by visiting Topeka people that we charitably refrain from saying where this unfortunate young man was from.—Atchison Globe.

Coffee and Cigarettes.

Sillies often talk of the temperance of Mediterranean peoples. As a matter of fact, many men in Latin America die in middle life from heart and circulation diseases—of a type rarely seen here—from excessive and continuous consumption of coffee and cigarettes.

Daily Thought.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam' Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

We are in reciept of Congressman Steenersons speech on the tariff, which shows that he is in accord with the wishes of his Constituents and the people of Minnesota. in fact all the representatives from this state are doing their best, except congressman Tawney, who is loading himself into a Cannon's Cannon, and will be fired bodily at the next election.

We sometimes wonder if men of the stamp of congressman Tawney and Miller are of the opinion, that the people are not "onto them." Their names and records have been the by-word of every socialist orator in northern Minnesota for the past six months, and if the republicans expect to stay in power, they must not continue to elect men of this kind to office.

A Millionaire Factory.

Farm Stock and Home, one of the largest circulated newspapers in Minnesota has billed our big; dignified;U. S. Supreme court a "Millionaire Factory." This was occasiond by their amazing decision setting aside a recent law passed by congress, regarding the ownership of coal lands. F.S. and H. says: "This patriotic and otherwise good intent of the peoples law making representatives in Congress is made abortive by a majority of nine men whom the people do not elect, have no power over, and whose tenure of office ends only with their life; a little handful of men, just human beings, subject to the prejudices and other failings common to the finite mind; men that we are taught to revere, and the infalibility of whose judgement we can question only at the risk f the taint of treason, at least."

The law repeald by the supreme court was passed by congress or the relief of the coai consumers, and the repeal of it by our supreame court was for the relief of the Deleware, Lackawana Western Railroad company, nd raised the stock in that Co. om $100 to $580 per. share.

At about the same time the upreme Court of Pennsylvania which state the railroad herewith is located, declared the two cent-a-mile passenger rate law enacted in that state was onconstitutional because confiscatory railroad property It is decisions of the kind citeded above, nded down by our Supreme urts, that are beginning to ake the American people sit and iquire, where we are at? These questions are not now ing dicussed by a few socialist itators and socialist newspapers, but are beginning to attra the attention of some of the oing newspapers and magans of this country, and if the esent pace of manufacturing llionairs and socalists, by our preme courts continues it will ly be a few years before the ople of this country will step to the ballot box and say: Ve will no longer tolerate hav our laws passed, by our repentatives set aside by a small ly of men." It will be done so letely and peacefuly that you l hardly note the change untii rything is over. It will not be o by the. so called socialists, by the great middle class, o are only out looking for a are deal"and are going to it, if they have to change the er.

PAPER FOR MONEY.

Extreme Care and Secrecy Used In Its Manufacture.

The various great nations devote much study to the improvement of their secret processes of manufacturing paper for money and banknotes, the principal object being, of course, to render counterfeiting more and more difficult.

Our own government guards with extreme care every detail of the manufacture of this paper, laying special importance upon its secret of getting silk thread into the composition of the paper itself.

The efforts of this government, however, are not nearly so painstaking as those put forth in making the flimsy paper used for Bank of England notes, which are probably the finest paper money in the world. These notes are manufactured from fine Irish linen, and the peculiar properties of the Test water (so called from the river of that name) produce paper of a purity and texture unsurpassed. The secret of the security of the Bank of England note against forgery and counterfeiting is said to be entirely in the paper itself and not in the printing.

In addition, the notes show a watermark so cleverly devised that an expert from the mill can tell by a glance at the date of manufacture the very name of the employee who made it. The watermark is produced by a design countersunk in the woven wire bottoms of the trays in which the hot paper pulp is poured and dried. It has never been successfully imitated.

Extraordinary precautions are taken for the security of the mill where these notes are made, as well as of everything in the mill. There is, of course, a staff of police constantly in attendance and a private wire to police headquarters, nine miles away.

The watchmen who patrol the mill corridors every night must pass at each quarter of an hour clocks of wonderfully ingenious construction, the revolving dials of which are pierced with holes, which at the precise moment the watchman is due before them pass over a slot. The watchman pushes through a peg he carries, and the clock ticks on. Should he not present himself at the moment scheduled for him to appear, however, the timepiece immediately sounds an alarm.—New York Tribune.

ARAB SCHOOLS.

Their Peculiar Methods In Teaching and Studying.

"An Arab school," said a traveler, "is one of the most interesting places in Cairo to visit. The children, with the schoolmaster, sit upon the floor or the ground in a semicircle, and each has a tablet of wood which is painted white and upon which the lessons are written. When the latter are learned they are washed out and replaced by other lessons.

"During study hours the Arab schools remind one of the Chinese, for the children all study aloud, and as they chant they rock back and forth like trees in a storm, and this movement is continued for an hour or more at a time. The schoolmaster rocks back and forth also, and altogether the school presents a most novel appearance as well as sound. Worshipers in the mosques always move about while reciting the Koran, as this movement is believed to assist the memory.

"The desks of the Arab schools are old contrivances of palm sticks, upon which is placed the Koran or one of the thirty sections of it. After learning the alphabet the boys take up the study of the Koran, memorizing entire chapters of it until the sacred book is entirely familiar.

"A peculiar method is followed in learning the Koran. The study begins with the opening chapter, and from this it skips to the last. The last but one is then learned, then the last but two, and so on in inverted order, ending finally with the second chapter.

"During the student's progress it is customary for the schoolmaster to send on the wooden tablet a lesson painted in black and red and given to the father, who returns it after inspection with a couple of piasters pasted upon it. The salaries of the schoolmasters are very meager indeed."—Washington Herald.

A Lunatic's Repartee.

Some visitors were being shown through Kew Lunatic asylum, Victoria, one day, and, coming opposite the clock in the corridor, one of them, looking quickly at his watch, said, "Is that clock right?"

"No, you idiot," said a patient standing by. "It wouldn't be in here if it were right."

The Color of Lakes.

Some lakes are distinctly blue, others are of various shades of green, so that in some cases they are scarcely distinguishable from their level, grass surrounded banks. A few, too, are almost black. The Lake of Geneva is azure hued, the Lake of Constance and the Lake of Lucerne are green, while the color of the Mediterranean has been called indigo. The Lake of Brienz is greenish yellow, and its neighbor, Lake Thun, is blue.

An Apt Answer.

The dangers associated with the fishing industry on the Newfoundland banks are many and grave. Foremost among them is that the dories may be upset while fishing, which involves almost inevitable loss of their occupants. Callous captains, secure themselves from the necessity of going, frequently order their men out when the weather does not warrant it, and disastrous are the results. One of these brutal skippers was aptly answered once by a bank man of whose courage or capacity there was no question.

"Out with you!" shouted the captain. "Hurry up there! It's a fishing day!"

"Oh, no, skipper!" replied the dory man. "It's too stormy today for a boat to fish."

"Nonsense, man!" rejoined the skipper. "If my old grandmother was here today she'd get her dory out."

"Then, skipper," said the man, "if her grandson will come out with me now I'll haul my trawl."

It is needless to say no dories were launched from that schooner on that date.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Special school meeting has been called to meet at the school house in this district next Saturday evening August 21st, at 7 o'clock p. m. Impotant business to transact, and all taxpayers should attend.

We are in receipt of a communication from Highlanding, about a private party held at that place last week, which we must decline to publish, as we do not consider it good policy to stir up putrid matter.

The weather has been a little more dicourageing than usal for haying the past week, with rain, rain, and somemore rain, and if there is not a let-up pretty soon the fields will get to soft to get on them to cut the grain.

It is reported that some of the runners of ferry boats have got careless about letting down their cables when the ferry is not in use. This is a very dangerous habit for a river boat striking one of those cabels, going at full speed is sure to kill or seariously injure. When leaving the ferry drop the cable to the bottom of the river, is the safe way.

A Singular Meal.

One of the most singular meals ever eaten was that given to a select few by an antiquary named Goebel in Brussels some years ago. The bread was made from wheat grown before the children of Israel passed out of Egypt, and it was spread with butter made when Elizabeth ruled England. For fruit there were apples which ripened before the Christian era, and the wine was older than the white man's knowledge of the new world. The bread was made from wheat taken from a chamber in one of the pyramids, the butter (of which there were several pounds) had been found in an earthen crock on a stone shelf under the icy waters of a well in Scotland. A pantry in the ruins of Pompeii had furnished the jar of apples (which were as sweet and finely flavored as if only a few months old), and the flagon of wine had been recovered from an old vault in Corinth. Six guests enjoyed this amazing meal.—Chicago News.

FOILED THEIR PLOT.

The Way Mme. Alboni Frustrated a Scheme to Hiss Her.

"Once upon a time, when Mme. Alboni was at Trieste," writes Henry C. Lahee in "Famous Singers of Today," "she was informed of the existence of a plot to hiss her off the stage. Having ascertained the names of her detractors and where they were to be found, she donned male attire, to which her short hair and robust figure helped to complete her disguise, and went to the cafe at which the conspirators met. Here she found them in full consultation, and, taking a seat at a table, she listened to their conversation for a time. After awhile she addressed the leader, saying: 'I hear that you intend to play a trick upon some one. I am very fond of a little practical joke myself and should be glad if you would allow me to join you on this occasion.'

"'With pleasure,' was the reply. 'We intend to hiss an opera singer off the stage this evening.'

"'Indeed! And of what is she guilty?'

"'Oh, nothing, except that, being an Italian, she has sung in Munich and Vienna to German audiences, and we think she ought to receive some castigation for her unpatriotic conduct.'

"'I agree with you, and now please tell me what I am to do.'

"'Take this whistle,' said the leader. 'At a signal to be given at the conclusion of the air sung by Rosina the noise will begin, and you will have to join in.'

"'I shall be very glad to do so,' said the singer and put the whistle in her pocket.

"In the evening the house was packed—every seat was occupied—and the audience warmly applauded the opening numbers of the opera. In due course Mme. Alboni appeared, and at the point at which she was about to address her tutor a few of the conspirators began to make a disturbance, not waiting for the signal.

"Without showing any concern Mme. Alboni walked down to the footlights, and, holding up the whistle, which was hung to her neck by a ribbon, she exclaimed: 'Gentlemen, are you not a little before your time? I thought we were not to commence whistling until I had sung the air.'

"For a moment a deathly stillness prevailed; then suddenly the house broke into thunders of applause, which was led by the conspirators themselves."

A GRATEFUL PATIENT.

The Coin That Was Measured by a Famous Surgeon.

Dr. Greufell, an old London hospital pupil, in a sketch of Sir Frederick Treves in the Pall Mall Gazette tells the story of a tiny sovereign gold piece given by a grateful patient to the famous surgeon and guarded by him as a priceless treasure. A sailor from Norway had been operated on by Sir Frederick in hospital. His life had been saved, and he had gone his way. Late one evening a timid knock brought Sir Frederick himself at that unusual hour to his door in Wimpole street. A tall, gaunt sailor in threadbare attire asked if this was where "Mr. Treves lives." At his earnest request, though somewhat under protest, he was allowed to enter. He at once proceeded to get out a jackknife, and from the lining of the belt of his trousers he cut out a small gold piece and offered it to Sir Frederick. On his refusal to accept it the man was so hurt that Sir Frederick listened to his story, and an interesting one it was.

The man had on leaving hospital sought a berth at the London docks, but, being a stranger, had been unable

CLEVER ART FORGERS

They Flood the Markets Abroad With Their Wares.

PARIS THE CLEARING HOUSE.

The French Capital Is the Chief Mart For the Disposal of Imitation Antiques—Italy Leads In the Production of the Spurious Articles.

Italy has always been the classic soil for fabrications, but in some departments Holland and Paris run her close. Vienna has a specialty for rock crystal and thirteenth century gold work, Florence and Lucca for fourteenth century armor, London imitates the pate tendre of Sevres, Constantinople makes oriental weapons, Madrid Damascus swords, Dresden sculptured ivories, Aix-la-Chapelle pewter plate, Berlin Roman potteries, Amsterdam wrought iron, Rotterdam Indian porcelains, Odessa tiaras and antique jewelry, while Paris is the chief mart and clearing house for all these products.

Italian bronze statuettes, now so much sought, are turned out with dexterity and taste in Tuscany. It is said that it was from one of these foundries there issued the group of virtue oppressing vice, assigned to Gian Bologna, which is now the choice treasure of a celebrated French collection. Switzerland makes a specialty of Louis XV. repousse work.

As for renaissance and mediaeval jewelry, hardly a bit is real except what is in museums. It is not to be bought. In the disturbed epochs that followed the renaissance precious stones were broken from their settings and sold to meet urgent needs. The same need for extreme diffidence applies to the pretty bibelots of the eighteenth century, watches, chatelaines, bonbonnieres. Of modern fabrication, too, is the enameled jewelry of the sixteenth century. Vienna turns it out to perfection. And so cunning are the makers that, for example, they take care that the ring on which a locket is suspended should show signs of friction, well aware that the buyer who thinks himself cute will look for this indication.

As for the peasant jewelry, now so much bought and sought in Florence on the old bridge and elsewhere, the genuine is long ago exhausted, for, after all, peasants own but a limited stock. It all consists of clever copies or more often tasteful combinations of old designs. The stones, too, despite their fine designations, are rarely anything else but those marvelously clever tinted rock crystals so ingeniously made in Switzerland and sold by the ton if desired.

Venice is the great depot for ebony inlaid with ivory, and cabinets incrusted with tortoise shell, once its glory and now in their decadence, are still the joy of traveling Americans on the lookout for bargains. Buy if the object pleases you, but do not when you pay your dollars imagine you are exchanging new lamps for old. As for old clocks, grandfather or other, there is not one genuine in a hundred Ware ivories! They are generally bone or, worse still, celluloid aged by the help of tobacco or of that invaluable handmaiden, licorice juice.

Nor does even glass defy the artificer. In the Museum of St. Germain can be seen Roman goblets, their outsides incrusted with dirt, whose iridescence has been obtained by fish scales fixed upon their surface. Sometimes real bits of iridescent glass film are transferred upon a modern framework. Cologne turns out lachrymatory vases by the gross, not even troubling to copy the old shapes, but using the long narrow bottles in which cheap sweets are sold. These are buried in dung after being smeared with some concoction of which the secret is guarded, and in a little time they issue from retirement patinated and iridescent. Old German and Bohemian glass is also excellently copied in Hamburg and Paris. Venice, too, has not forgotten its traditions and turns out its own old wares.

Sevres and Dresden innocently helped the counterfeiter by selling their not yet decorated pieces, if imperfect, for a trifle. On this genuine ground the forger worked with ease. This traffic has been stopped. Still the forger knows no obstacles or overcomes them, and false Sevres and Dresden are supplied by all dealers, and the purchaser rarely has the minute knowledge that will save him. In the eighteenth century oriental porcelains were openly made in England and Holland and sent to China for decoration, when they returned as real China porcelain, or the reverse process obtained. The porcelain was made in China and decorated in what was presumed to be the Chinese style in Europe. Paris at the present moment makes and exports old China porcelain, and many a tourist who buys a find at Hongkong or Shanghai merely brings back coals to Newcastle. Rhodian plates are made near Paris in absolute perfection. Except as a matter of sentiment there is no need to seek the old. Be cautious, too, in buying Greco-Roman pottery. It is mostly made at Naples.

Most of the genuine things were snapped up long ago or else are owned by museums or by the heirs of those for whom they were made and who do not need to part with them.—London National Review.

Nurse and Nursery Combined.

A recent visitor to Brittany describes in the New Orleans Times-Democrat the two story closed bed of the Breton peasant, in many cases a richly carved and ornamented heirloom and always highly prized.

One day the visitor was expressing her admiration of a certain "lit-clos," when madam pulled the sliding panels apart and revealed the figure of her husband sleepily rubbing his eyes and wanting to know what was the matter. She calmly explained to him that the visitor wanted to see the inside of the bed and then explained to the visitor that her good man had been out fishing since dawn and was very tired. The visitor begged him to close the panels and go to sleep again, which he immediately did, but not before she noticed that he was fully dressed. It seems that the Breton peasant always disappears into the "lit-clos" fully dressed and always emerges therefrom in the same condition. While her husband slept madam enlarged on the advantages of a "lit-clos" in bringing up a family.

"I have had six children," she said, "and when they were little I used to put three in the top story and three in the bottom, then close the panels and leave [illegible]

Died in Good Company.

A clergyman, who was not averse to an occasional glass, hired an Irishman to clean out his cellar. The Irishman began his work. He brought forth a lot of empty whisky bottles, and as he lifted each one looked through it at the sun. The preacher, who was walking on the lawn, saw him and said: "They are all dead ones, Pat." OWES HER LIFE TO

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Vienna, W. Va.—"I feel that I owe the last ten years of my life to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Eleven years ago I was a walking shadow. I had been under the doctor's care but got no relief. My husband persuaded me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it worked like a charm. It relieved all my pains and misery. I advise all suffering women to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Emma Wheaton, Vienna, W. Va.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases of any similar medicine in the country, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every such suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

WANTS TO DIE POOR

Dr. Pearsons About to Give Away Last of His Wealth.

Has Donated $4,000,000 to Smaller Colleges and Universities During Last 25 Years—Won Riches in Real Estate.

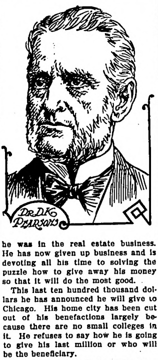
Chicago.—Dr. Daniel K. Pearsons is going, in a way, to outdo Andrew Carnegie. He is going to give his last million dollars away before the fourteenth of next April, when, nothing happening, he will celebrate his ninetieth birthday. He will keep only a sum which he thinks is sufficient to pay his simple way for the few years longer he expects to live.

When he gives away his last million he will have disposed of $5,000,000 in the last 25 years. The greater part of it has been unloosened in the last 15 years. His policy is to give to the small college. The wealthy institutions, with powerful alumni associations, receive none of his money. He believes the small and needy denominational colleges throughout the country are doing more for the poor boy and turning out a better class of American citizens than the more celebrated universities.

For 60 years Dr. Pearsons has been a noted character in and about Chicago. He is more than six feet in height, and not even his 89 years have eradicated the atmosphere of physical and mental power which he carries. His early education was limited to a short college course which proved of great value to him in his subsequent successful career.

He has no family, and but few distant relatives. So far the only objection to his philanthropy has come from institutions that for one reason or another failed to get his money.

In a quaint, ancient house in the suburb of Hinsdale Dr. Pearsons lives. It is embowered in massive trees, with a wide sweep of lawn studded with flowers. For scores of years he was a daily passenger on commuter trains to and from the city. That was when he was in the real estate business. He has now given up business and is devoting all his time to solving the puzzle how to give away his money so that it will do the most good.



This last ten hundred thousand dollars he has announced he will give to Chicago. His home city has been cut out of his benefactions largely because there are no small colleges in it. He refuses to say how he is going to give his last million or who will be the beneficiary.

In all 47 colleges in 24 states have shared Dr. Pearson's money. All he asks is that they be Christian colleges. There is no discrimination because of denomination or creed. Whitman college has received $300,000, Beloit college $500,000, Mount Holyoke college $150,000, Chicago Theological seminary $280,000. These represent his largest four gifts. From $25,000 to $100,000 has been given to small and comparatively unknown colleges in Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, Missouri and many other states.

Dr. Pearsons made his money in real estate in the early days of Chicago. He not only dealt in city real estate, but made a specialty of farm lands. He represented the Illinois Central railway in disposing of millions of fine farms in its land grant, given by the state when the road was constructed. For almost 60 years Dr. Pearsons has been active in real estate. Investments that he made in Chicago in the early years increased a thousandfold and have now been sold.

Mr. Pearsons gives the credit for his philanthropic interests largely to his wife, who died three years ago. "It was her idea," he said. "She was a keen business woman and she wanted what money we had to be spent as wisely as possible. Therefore we began a systematic study of the regions which seemed to be most in need of better facilities for the making of citizenship."

More than $4,000,000 has been distributed among 47 institutions. Among the colleges which have benefited are Lake Forest university, Beloit college, Knox, Chicago Theological seminary, McCormick Theological seminary, Drury college, Yankton college, Colorado college, Fargo college, Mount Holyoke seminary, Berea college, Marietta, McKendree, Grand Prairie seminary, Whitman college, Olivet college, Fairmont college, Carleton, and Anatolia college in Turkey, which has received over $100,000. At one time Mr. Pearsons has more than $150,000 loaned to needy students.

AN EASY WAY.

How to Cure Kidney Troubles Easily and Quickly.

It is needless to suffer the tortures of an aching back, the misery of backaches, rheumatic pains, urinary disorders, or risk the danger of diabetes or Bright's disease. The cure is easy. Treat the cause—the kidneys—with Doan's Kidney Pills. H. Mayne, Market St., Paris, Tenn., says: "Weak kidneys made my back stiff and lame. The urine was cloudy and irregular and I had to get up many times at night. I lost energy, became weak and could not work. Doan's Kidney Pills removed all the trouble and restored my health and strength."

Only Cure for Consumption.

With the present rapid growth of the anti-tuberculosis movement the number of so-called "cures" for consumption is being increased almost daily. Hundreds of quack "doctors," "professors" and "institutes" are advertising that they can cure consumption for small amounts, with the result that thousands of dupes are yearly cheated out of their lives as well as their money. Besides these, "cures" and medicines of all sorts, numbering now several hundred, are sold for the deception of the public.

The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis brands all these institutes, doctors, professors and cures as frauds and deceptions. The only cure for consumption is fresh air, rest and wholesome food.

A Sunday Sermon.

One must accept life as it is. It gives us great happiness if we are wise enough to see it, and it balances the scales by sending great sorrows, too.

But that is life.

If you would make the world brighter try to forget your hurts, dry your eyes and turn to help those who need the pressure of a friendly hand, the encouragement of a smiling look.

Sorrows and troubles of all kinds should teach one a great lesson—the lesson of universal kindness.—New York Times.

Pleasant for Mr. Bennett.

William S. Bennett, a representative from New York city, went to address a political meeting in his district one night, when he was much younger than he is now.

"The chairman," said Bennett, "was a very literal person. He looked at the gallery, where one woman was sitting, and said: 'Lady and gentlemen, this is a most momentous campaign. There are grave issues to be discussed. Later we will hear from our best speakers, but, for the present, we will listen to Mr. Bennett.'"

ON FOOD
The Right Foundation of Health.

Proper food is the foundation of health. People can eat improper food for a time until there is a sudden collapse of the digestive organs, then all kinds of trouble follows.

The proper way out of the difficulty is to shift to the pure, scientific food, Grape-Nuts, for it rebuilds from the foundation up. A New Hampshire woman says:

"Last summer I was suddenly taken with indigestion and severe stomach trouble and could not eat food without great pain, my stomach was so sore I could hardly move about. This kept up until I was so miserable life was not worth living.

"Then a friend finally, after much argument, induced me to quit my former diet and try Grape-Nuts.

"Although I had but litttle faith I commenced to use it, and great was my surprise to find that I could eat it without the usual pain and distress in my stomach.

"So I kept on using Grape-Nuts and soon a marked improvement was shown, for my stomach was performing its regular work in a normal way without pain or distress.

"Very soon the yellow coating disappeared from my tongue, the dull, heavy feeling in my head disappeared, and my mind felt light and clear; the languid, tired feeling left, and altogether I felt as if I had been rebuilt. Strength and weight came back rapidly and I went back to my work with renewed ambition.

"To-day I am a new woman in mind as well as body, and I owe it all to this natural food, Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason."

MIKE DONLIN TO MANAGE THE PHILADELPHIA TEAM

Former Giant Traded for Magee and Moore and Will Succeed Murray.

Mike Donlin will play at the Polo grounds in New York city again this year after all. But it will not be in an effort to help the Giants in their stern chase for the National league pennant, for he will wear a Philadelphia uniform, having been secured as playing manager of the National league team there, according to the latest report. The story says that Felix Isman, the real-estate operator and theatrical man, has bought an interest in the club, having acquired his stock from the estate of the late Israel W. Durham, and that he had dismissed Billy Murray, who went to Philadelphia from Jersey City to manage the team two years ago.

Some sort of trade has been made with the New York club, and it is understood, although no official confirmation of this can be obtained, that Sherwood Magee, the hard-hitting left fielder of the Quakers, one of the best outfielders in the game, and Earl Moore, the old Cleveland and Yankee pitcher, who has shown signs of recrudescence this year under Murray after spending some time playing with the minor leagues, are to finish the season in New York uniforms.

Murray was asked to accept Donlin as a member of the team and as manager. On his refusal he was asked to resign, according to Mr. Isman, and, as he would not do so he was dismissed. Murray is a stockholder in the club, but his stock constitutes a minority holding. There have been many rumors as to the prospective change in ownership of the club, some reports having it that Murray was to be full owner, while others said that Lew Moren, the pitcher, was to acquire control.

Murray said that he had a three-years' contract with the club to serve as manager, and Mr. Isman, admitting this to be true, said that a contract had no force unless its terms were met. It is thought likely that Murray will take his case to the national commission, and possibly to the courts.

CHESBRO HOLDS A RECORD

New York American League Twirler Pitched Fourteen Straight Victories for Highlanders in 1904.

Pitcher Jack Chesbro of the New York Highlanders holds the American league record of consecutive victories. In 1904, the year the Highlanders lost the pennant on the last day of the season, Happy Jack won 14 games. Chief Bender of Philadelphia has 12 straights to his credit. Chesbro's record:

Troubles Cured by Cuticura.

"When my little Vivian was about six months old her head broke out in boils. She had about sixty in all and I used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment which cured her entirely. Some time later a humor broke out behind her ears and spread up on to her head until it was nearly half covered. The humor looked like a scald, very red with a sticky, clear fluid coming from it. This occurred every spring. I always used Cuticura Soap and Ointment which never failed to heal it up. The last time it broke out it became so bad that I was discouraged. But I continued the use of Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent until she was well and has never been troubled in the last two years. Mrs. M. A. ALASKA AND THE YUKON

FORT WRANGLE, ALASKA

DOG TRANSPORTATION COPPER RIVER VALLEY

The old saying, "Familiarity breeds contempt," does not hold good with Alaska; on the contrary, it begets a fondness which swells into enthusiasm as one fact after another is discovered and demonstrated. In some way or other the country has a drawing and winning effect upon most persons who have lived there, if only for a short period. Some are attracted by the beauty and magnificence of the scenery, and others find rest and returning vigor in the mildness and evenness of the climate; some, again, attracted by the wonders of the vegetable and animal kingdoms, and others, the majority perhaps, delve into the richness of the mineral treasuries, writes John G. Brady, ex-governor of Alaska in Independent. The adventurers into British Columbia, the Yukon territory and Alaska are a hardy and buoyant stock.

Those who have gotten up our physical geographies were pumping from dry wells when they came to treat of the northwest coast of America. Much that was given was erroneous. For instance, Mount St. Elias in one edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica is spoken of as a burning volcano. Many well educated people well along in middle life become impatient when the deficiency is revealed to them. It is well that this is so, for by a reasonable amount of diligence they can make good the loss and have much pleasure in acquiring information so much at variance with preconceived ideas. The Yukon is one of the mighty rivers of the globe. Captains who have had their training on steamboats upon the Mississippi and who now have been a number of years on the Yukon believe that during the months of navigation as great a volume of water is discharged into Bering sea as into the Gulf of Mexico. Its headwaters begin in the mountains east of Skagway, in British soil, somewhat south of the sixtieth parallel, and flow in a generally northwest direction. Two branches, the Lewes and the Pelly, unite at Selkirk, at which point it takes the name Yukon. On its northern trend it receives the volumes of other large tributaries before Dawson is reached, near the mouth of the Klondike. Keeping a still northerly course it crosses the boundary line in latitude 141 degrees, 90 miles from Dawson. Holding still its main direction at Circle City, it widens into numerous channels and great flats till a few minutes north of the arctic circle, where it is joined by the Porcupine, coming in from the northeast. Here is bend and takes a generally southwest course, gathering as it goes the Tanana, coming up from the southeast, and farther on the Koyukok, a mighty meanderer from the north, and at last discharging through numerous channels over an immense delta into Bering sea. It is navigable for large steamboats as far as Dawson, a distance of 1,600 miles. From that point smaller steamers ply to White Horse, 112 miles by railroad to Skagway. The summit is but 20 mile from this town and is at an elevation of 2,700 feet. This river drains a mighty basin.

Many good things are stored therein, and it does seem as though the Creator intended it for the use of his creatures. Gold has been found on most every stream throughout the length of the valley where men have made an effort to reach bedrock, even far beyond the arctic circle on the headwaters of the Koyukok. The production of this metal, which influences mankind so powerfully, Nature's mills have been grinding and reducing and sluicing in past ages; what has been separated from the lodes has been gathered and frozen securely in her safe deposit vaults. Nearly every camp has its own peculiar gold. There is a wide difference in regard to shape, size, color and firmness. Dealers and miners become wonderfully accurate in these matters. Gold production in the north called for new methods and these were introduced and improved year by year.

The possibilities for stock raising and dairy farming are almost beyond calculation. Sunlight and moisture sufficient for plant life are unfailing. The limits of this article will not allow even a brief discussion of other rich resources—furs, copper, lead, silver, tin, gypsum, marble, iron, coal, fish and timber.

Surely Alaska is a goodly heritage, and we now hold in grateful memory William H. Seward, Charles Sumner, N. P. Banks, yea, Andrew Johnson, because what was called "folly" has proved to be wisdom. The present population is small, possibly 35,000 natives and about the same number of whites. The aborigines are a good stock, and with fair treatment and encouragement will do their full share in labor and development. They are doing it to-day in the fisheries, the logging camps and in the mines. We can hardly contemplate the history of our ownership of the vast possession for the past 41 years with pride.

The next need is railway transportation. The whole southeast and southern coast has good harbors, which are accessible at any season, and for the most part rates are reasonable. But when one leaves the coast and starts inland the unit is no longer the ton, but the pound. At the road house 50 miles in from Valdez the price of oats and hay for your horse is 20 cents per pound. Alaska needs railroads, and it cannot develop without them. Trails and wagon roads serve their purpose, but how can such mighty resources be developed and distributed by such frail means? The world needs butter and beef, coal and copper, and railroads are a necessity in dealing with these things in Alaska.

Resorted to Duplicity.

One night I sat at the right of Lord Randolph Churchill, who was only one chair removed from the host, and the conversation between them turned on the difficulties of public speaking. "Have you ever been embarrassed by finding that after telling your audience there were three points to which you particularly wished to call their attention, and after elaborating the first two you could not remember a word of what you meant to say on the third?"

The question was asked by the host.

"Yes," Churchill replied; "that has happened to me more than once, but it never gave me any trouble. I found an easy way out. 'Gentlemen,' I have said to them, 'I told you that there were three things which I desired to emphasize. I have mentioned two. Much more, very much more, could be said, but I appeal to your intelligence. Is it necessary for me to go any further; to waste any more of your time or my own on a question the answer to which is so obvious? Haven't I said enough to convince you as fully as I am convinced myself?' They have been quite satisfied with this, and while they were applauding I have swung into another part of the subject. Gross duplicity, but it has saved me as, sometimes, only duplicity will do."—W. H. Rideing in McClure's.

DOINGS AT THE CAPITAL

Employes to Found "Bungalow Town"

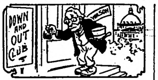
WASHINGTON.—Although not at all Utopian in any of their ideas nor intent upon carrying out a sociological experiment, a group of officeholders in the capital, most of them government clerks, has practically completed plans for the execution of one of the most novel schemes in the history of real estate trading in the capital. Their primary object is to escape the burden of paying rent in the city and to substitute suburban life for urban life, and with this end in view they intend to found a bungalow town, in which the limits of cost of nearly everything necessary to household upbuilding and maintenance will be held to the lowest possible level.

Just where "Bungalow Town" will be located has not yet been definitely determined, but it will comprise an area of 15 to 20 acres, convenient to some of the suburban trolley lines. This land can now be secured at a cost not to exceed $1,000 an acre, and when it is subdivided there will be no effort to secure profit upon the money invested, because the purchase will be distinctly a co-operative affair,

This joining of interests in the acquisition of property is in itself considerable of an innovation in Washington, but by far the most novel feature of the proposition lies in the "building restrictions." In a majority of the newer suburbs assurance is given to the purchaser of each lot that the character of the section will always be maintained by the writing of a covenant into his deed that each house built in the vicinity shall cost not less than a stated number of thousands of dollars. In "Bungalow Town" this proposition will be exactly reversed, for it will be specifically provided that no bungalow shall cost in excess of $1,000. This will reduce the maximum expenditure of each property holder to $2,000, because it will be provided in the original subdivision that each bungalow must be surrounded by one acre of ground. Subsequently it will be permissible to further subdivide and build additional bungalows, although at no time will the projectors of the enterprise permit a house to stand upon less than one-half acre of ground.

"Bungalow Town" will make its nearest imitation to a sociological colony in its purchases of supplies of all sorts from the outside world. In the first place there will be co-operation in buying the land and then there will be a determined effort to save expense in building by the letting of contracts to build the little homes in blocks of two or more to each contract. When "Bungalow Town" is settled it is proposed that the women folk shall join in the formation of a central purchasing committee so that all forms of food stuffs and supplies may be secured at wholesale rates.

Retirement of Wilson Is Intimated

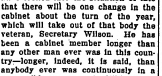


THAT the Taft official family will begin about January to be rounded into its permanent form and membership is the opinion entertained now. It is strongly believed by those who have looked into the situation of late that there will be one change in the cabinet about the turn of the year, which will take out of that body the veteran, Secretary Wilson. He has been a cabinet member longer than any other man ever was in this country—longer, indeed, it is said, than anybody ever was continuously in a responsible government. With his retirement Mr. Meyer of the navy will be the only remaining representative of the Roosevelt cabinet.

Early in the career of the new administration Secretary Wilson and Secretary of the Interior Ballinger had a sharp disagreement, which at one time looked like an impasse. It was suspected that one or the other of them would retire. President Taft smoothed over the differences, only to have them break out at a new place, and now, in this last entanglement, Mr. Ballinger has won his point. It related to the jurisdiction over forests within Indian reservations, and Mr. Ballinger gets the jurisdiction, taking it away from the agricultural department's bureau of forestry.

It is known certainly that close friends of one man who is a likely aspirant for the Wilson seat at the cabinet table have been informed that there is altogether likely to be a change, and that the work of getting support organized is quietly on in behalf of this man. He is Representative Charles F. Scott of Kansas, chairman of the house committee on agriculture.

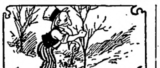
Willow Farm Conducted by Uncle Sam



ONE of the many activities of the department of agriculture at Washington is the conduct of a willow farm. The purpose of the department is to encourage willowcraft, an industry little followed in this country, but extensively practiced in Europe. There, willow is largely employed in the making of baskets and furniture.

When the reclamation of Potomac Park from the flats and shallows of the Potomac river at Washington had proceeded far enough the engineering department planted Lombardy poplars and willows along the retaining walls. These willows spread over many acres of the land that had been dredged from the river bottoms. The northwestern half of this reclaimed land has been beautified with driveways, lawns and flower plots, but the improvement of the southern part has not been begun. The department of agriculture secured the use of this land as an experimental farm. The growth of the willow trees probably suggested the utility of promoting willowcraft in the United States and cuttings from many species of willows (there are 170) were set out in nursery form. To-day the department has a willow plantation of many acres' extent.

District of Columbia Seeks Lost Domain



CONGRESS will have its hands full at the next session. The particular matter which will be agitated will probably not disrupt the union, although it has been the subject of contention since the states got together.

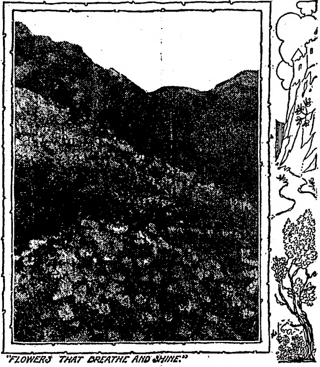
It all came about through an incipient insurrection on the part of citizens of the District of Columbia. They got up a dinner at the New Willard hotel in Washington and invited President Taft. Then they "sprung it on" him that they wanted representation in the government; wanted representation on the floor of the house and senate; wanted a voice in electing the president and a few other little things.

President Taft told them that if they wanted little things like that they ought not to crowd their demands into social affairs. He suggested that it would be more to their credit if they started a movement to get back the slice of the original District of Columbia, which a too generous congress had given back to the state of Virginia.

That the getting back of this chivalrous gift of land is somewhat of a hot coal is shown by the fact that the supreme court of the United States evaded passing on its constitutionality, and congress, which has picked it up twice, has dropped it in two different ways.

That President Taft was prophetic in his suggestion the lost third should be recovered is generally conceded. It is felt that it will not be long before this government will need it for various institutions. Already it has bought back part of it for Arlington National cemetery, Fort Myer and other projects. And as soon as the beautifying of the north side of the Potomac river is finished eyes will be cast to the other shore with a view to making it less unsightly.

PAGEANT OF ENGLISH FLOWERS



"FLOWERS THAT BREATHE AND SHINE."

Those who only visit the country at week-ends, or other intervals, cannot help being struck with the fact that there is nearly always a dominating flower; that is to say, one which in full bloom takes posession of the landscape and attains a temporary mastery over all others. On a comparatively small but definite scale, this is witnessed in the garden. "This is daffodil time," we exclaim one day in our joy at seeing the ground become yellow with the blooms of this flower. But in a little while "we weep to see you haste away so soon." The life of a flower has long been used as a metaphor for all that is most fair and transient. For a little while only does the fresh purity of the color remain. Seed-pods are formed, the petals wither, the beauty passes. It is part of a procession, and in the very act of breathing a sigh of regret that what is so fair should be so evanescent, attention is caught by a new set of florets that swell out till they occupy the place of those that have faded. The daffodil, either in the mass or the individual, possesses a kind of wistfulness such as might come from gazing from the outside of some impassable gate over those fabled plains whereon the ancient dreamed it grew. But the tulip when dominant is of an opposite character. An emobidiment of color without fragrance, it combines with the butterfly to show gayety unmixed with sentiment. The daffodil is a romantic maiden, the tulip a tripping ballet girl, exquisitely dressed, satisfying the taste for color, but touching no emotion. How different with the rose. "Age cannot wither nor custom stale her infinite variety." In the rosary of the rich, in the garden plot of the poor, embellishing a pergola or covering the cottage walls, it tells the same tale, and suggests the same old song, "Oh, my luve is like a red, red rose that's newly sprung in June." Odor and color and form all unite, and when we speak of what transcends life, there is no simile finer than that of the "unfading" rose.

Its mention carries us back to the fields. A garden close is well, but "a diviner and more pellucid air" hangs over the wild thicket and hedgerow where the dog rose is in its glory. The wind blowing over grass and half-grown corn when the wild rose is at its height, dissipates the garden sentiment. It is a dominating flower in early July, and so we appear to be taking our pageant backward almost. But, indeed, the best of a procession is not always to be seen from a fixed point. Instead of watching all the flowers of a season file past in order, as though they were soldiers at a review, it is more interesting to take a bit here and a bit there according as caprice or interest may dictate. And the wild sweet summer, as Wordsworth says, "flaunts" all its beauty on the wild rose. It bursts out on the thicket, it takes possession of the hedgerow, it blossoms on the waste place. Like a million small and happy faces its buds open, till the earth is glowing with their beauty. Yet the fragile bloom will scarcely bear to be plucked, and its stay with us is as brief as that of the daffodil. But a very little while and the petals flutter down and the rank grass and summer's dark green reassert themselves.

Of wild flowering shrubs there is none more dominating while it lasts than the broom. Its rough predecessor, the gorse, only gives a taste of the effect it produces. The gorse is always throwing out blossoms, but even at its best it is as bronze to gold compared with the great yellow mass of the broom in flower. On the Surrey commons it makes a brave show, but is not so commanding as on the great wastes of the north, where it spreads out into vast stretches of blazing and shining gold. In the days of our youth old men remembered, or of them their fathers had told them, the huge fields of broom, the bushes of which were taller than the tallest man, that stretch over what is now a cultivated area of hedged fields and red-tiled farmhouses where the Cheviots slope to the Till. But those noted agriculturists, the brothers Culley, had more appreciation of the homely turnip than "the burning bush," and it was their grubbing and plowing that transformed a region so wildly picturesque into a fruitful land. What it was like before their operations began may be known from the appearance of the land that has proved irreclaimable. How familiar and yet how impressive the broom was may be judged from the frequency with which it finds a place in the old ballads. Long after its petals have fallen to the ground in the south it continues in Highland strath and glen what time the angler penetrates them in search of trout.

There are several white flowers that sweep past like visionary clouds in the procession. First, the "wee modest crimson-tipped" one that spreads over meadow and golf course till, in the sunny days of May when the nightingale is in full song, they rest like sheets of snow on the warm ground. Following close upon them is that truly English flower, the hawthorn. It is unobtrusive in the thicket and well-trimmed hedge; but when the bushes have been allowed to grow tall for the sake of shelter, or where individual trees abound, it assumes for a brief period an unquestioned dominion. The garlands of pure soft white it hangs out make the color of the landscape while they last, and the fragrance it diffuses has no equal, save it be that of an orchard when the apple trees are in bloom and resonant with the humming of innumerable bees. With the decay of the hawthorn comes a feeling of sadness. It was with unmixed joy that we hailed the early figures in the long procession. The maids of January whitening the woodland while the trees are bare are greeted as heralds, cowslips in the meadow and primroses on the steep sides of the dene are still but harbingers. We have no thought of the end when the marsh-marigold shines like fire on swamps and hollows gray, nor when "the faint sweet cuckoo-flower" spreads nodding over the low-lying meadows, till by force of numbers its exquisite and delicate shape and color master those of its companions. But the fading of the hawthorn tells of spring's early expiry, and when the wild rose has blossomed and faded we know that another "pretty ring time" has been added to the past. No other occurrence in the year strikes an equal note of sadness, especially among those of riper years. It is the enviable privilege of youth to live in the passing hour and enjoy the mystic "Now," and to be ever looking forward to some new discovery or adventure. But as we grow old and lose our illusions, we gain the dismal knowledge that the flight of time is much more likely to discover the disagreeable than the pleasant, and we also become more keenly alive to the transient character of most things.

In this age of realism why not renovate some of the old saws? How about "The typewriter is mightier than the repeating rifle?"

Here is a powerful argument for the more-daylight plan: It would give the human race two extra hours in the afternoon to see the baseball game.

With the capable flying machine cutting high jinks the Dreadnoughts are beginning to wonder if a more modest name would not be a better fit.

Baseball was never before so big a business, and it was never so big a task to keep the business going just right, but there is never a hint of crookedness in that sport. No wonder it is the national game!

In various European and American magazines and other publications we see a great many articles under such titles as "Why England Fears Germany," "Why France Fears Germany," etc. It seems that there is hardly a nation in Europe that doesn't fear Germany.

New York continues the good practice of letting poor people sleep in some of the parks these hot nights. An extra police guard is detailed and everything is orderly. Some of the victims in stuffy hotel chambers must be filled with longing to be poor "for one night only."

If you see a rattlesnake in your summer peregrinations, do not run to the faithful flask. Modern science declares that those who recovered through its agency in the past must have owed their lives to a lively imagination, as the remedy is without merit.

There are dried apples—why not dried potatoes? Germany is trying practical experiments in the direction of the latter economy, and several potato drying plants are in operation, in different sections of the empire. It takes 830 pounds of potatoes in their normal condition to make 220 pounds when dry. A brisk market is found for the product, owing to the advancing price of grain.

How wealth may be piled up quietly and amazingly is instanced in England, where the death of a comparatively unknown resident of Reading, where he lived practically as a recluse, reveals that he left an estate of $50,000,000 to $75,000,000, from which the government will collect about $10,000,000 in death duties and succession taxes. The most successful men are not always those who make the greatest stir in the world.

The German company which is building a non-rigid dirigible balloon with a lifting capacity of 54 persons has evidently not been frightened by the fate of the big non-rigid California dirigible which broke under the weight of a large load of passengers and dropped them to the earth. Unless the weights beneath a non-rigid airship are carefully adjusted the strains are apt to be dangerous to the envelope when the ship is driven through the air by her propellers.

One of the Zeppelin airships is to be permanently stationed at Metz. That town is a fortress in Alsace-Lorraine, which Germany acquired from France at the close of the Franco-Prussian war. The German government gets its supply of war balloons from Zeppelin, and there you are. France has been indulging freely in airships for military purposes, but a glance in the direction of Metz, once a French stronghold but now a German possession, will be sufficient to show that there are others.

AMERICA TO WARN JAPAN

UNCLE SAM TO CALL HALT IF CHINA'S DOORS CLOSE.

Crisis Seems to Be Near—European Powers Also Watching Actions of Mikado's Government.

Washington.—The United States will call Japan to task if any attempt is made to close the doors of China to the trade of this country. Such a step has been definitely decided upon and Japan knows it.

The "open door" was insisted upon by the United States ten years ago, when Russia was dominant in China, and when Japan was clamoring for trade. The action of the United States at that time was highly pleasing to Japan, and contributed to the success of the Japanese in expelling Russia, although that was far from the purpose of the Washington government.

Because the United States insisted on the "open door" at that time the Japanese government regarded it as an act of friendship to Tokyi and not a firm and irrevocable stroke of American policy. Now Japan is to learn that the American contention for the "open door" in China was not directed at Russia, but at all powers that attempt to dominate China to the exclusion of United States commerce.

Russia to-day is occupying much the same position that Japan did ten years ago, when Secretary Hay insisted on the "open door."

The Bear is watching Japan's conduct very closely for any breach in Manchuria that would justify protest. Not only Russia is watching Japan's conduct, but so are Germany, France, Holland, Italy and Austria, throughout continental Europe, as well as in the United States, to see whether Japan in any way violates the principles contended for by the powers, and for this reason her actions will be watched closely by them. Should such probability become evident, the time will be ripe for some very pertinent questions directed to the Japanese government as to her motives and intentions.

The government is considering the appointment to this office of Chao-Erh-Hsun, formerly governor of Mukden.

"MISS SANTA CLAUS" SUICIDE

Had Letters to "Kris Kringle" from Children Sent to Her and Sent Gifts.

Philadelphia. — Miss Elizabeth A. Phillips, known widely as "Miss Santa Claus," committed suicide by inhaling illuminating gas. She was found in a room at her home with a gas tube in her mouth.

Miss Phillips enjoyed almost a national reputation by reason of her work at Christmas time among the poor children. For weeks prior to Christmas of each year she collected funds which she expended for toys and clothing for the needy and on Christmas eve she visited the homes of the children in a big automobile.

Two years ago, at her request, all the letters written by children and mailed to Santa Claus were delivered to her and the requests of the children, as far as possible, were complied with.

TIPTON BANK RE-OPENS

Gets $200,000 Cash and Prepares to Resume Business Monday Morning—Markers' Successors Chosen.

Tipton, Ind.—Two hundred thousand dollars were placed upon the counter of the First National bank of this city by a special express messenger Friday preparatory to the re-opening of the institution Monday morning.

The bank has been closed since Noah Marker, assistant cashier, disappeared and since it was learned that the funds were short. The money was the first installment of $600,000 which was in the vault before the bank opened.

The following notice was placed in the bank window:

"Stockholders have put up cash to cover all shortages and bad accounts. Cash is now on hand to pay every depositor in full and any obligations of any kind. The bank expects to open for business Monday morning."

George Shortle, Jr., and John B. Shirk were elected cashier and assistant cashier, respectively.

IRRIGATION MEET CLOSES

National Congress Endorses Both Pinchot and Newell and Elects New Officers.

Spokane, Wash. — With the election of officers, the selection of Pueblo, Col., as the next meeting place, the passage of resolutions commending both the efforts of Pinchot and Newell in the forestry and reclamation bureaus, asking a $10,000,000 irrigation fund from congress and commending the Mississippi deep waterways, the seventh National Irrigation congress has ended.

The officers are B. A. Fowler of Phoenix, Ariz., president; Arthur Hooker, Spokane, secretary; Ralph Twitchell, New Mexico, vice-president; R. W. Young, Utah, second vice-president; L. Newman, Montana, third vice-president; F. W. Flemming, New Mexico, fourth vice-president; E. J. Watson, South Carolina, fifth vice-president.

THAW WILL APPEAL

MOTHER'S WEALTH WILL BACK SLAYER IN NEW FIGHT FOR LIBERTY.

GOES BACK TO MATTEAWAN

Justice Mills Declares Stanford White's Murderer Is Still Insane—Declares Wife's Story False—Believes Prisoner Whipped Girls.

White Plains, N. Y.—Backed by his mother's great wealth, Harry K. Thaw, who was taken back to the Matteawan insane asylum under the decision rendered Thursday by Justice Mills, will soon begin another fight for his liberty, this time in the court of appeals.

Justice Mills in dismissing the habeas corpus declared "the release of the petitioner would be dangerous to the public peace and safety."

There is no crumb of comfort for Thaw in the 7,000-word opinion handed down by Justice Mills. All the contentions of his old adversary, District Attorney Jerome are supported, and it is declared that Thaw is still insane, still suffering from persistent delusions, and still as much a paranoiac as on the day he shot Stanford White.

Thaw, waiting in the White Plains jail, at the rear of the courthouse, where the decision was filed, received the news with an outward calmness which appeared, however, more forced than real.

The members of his family and his attorney seemed stunned by the thoroughness of their defeat. Thaw declined to give out any extended statement, contenting himself with the assertion that he was not disheartened and would at once continue his fight for liberty.

"My next effort," he said, "will be centered upon the court of appeals, through which I expect to secure a hearing before a jury in my effort to have my commitment to Matteawan set aside."

Justice Mills in his opinion reaches these three formal conclusions:

That Thaw was insane when he killed White.

That he has not yet recovered.

That public peace and safety would be endangered by setting him at large.

He upholds District Attorney Jerome's contentions that Thaw still cherishes delusions regarding the practices of Stanford White and his associates.

Justice Mills characterizes Evelyn Thaw's tale of the Madison Square tower room, and similar stories about White told at the sanity hearing, as "wild and grossly improbable, evidently to any normal mind grossly exaggerated."

He asserts his belief in the testimony of Susan Merrill regarding Thaw's alleged whipping of girls, and points out the contrast between Thaw's chivalrous attitude as a protector of young American womanhood, and his private life.

Justice Mills expressed deep sympathy for Mrs. Mary Copley Thaw, the prisoner's mother, and her exposition of the "horrors of Matteawan" on the stand evidently prompted his recommendation that Thaw be allowed greater privileges at that institution. At the same time he gently chided Mrs. Thaw for her censure of District Attorney Jerome, of whom he said: "I find no evidence of any heartlessness or undue zeal on his part."

Not the least significant sentence in Justice Mills' decision, in the opinion of lawyers here, is one which declares that Thaw's delusions had become fixed and established before the time of his marriage."

It is pointed out that this sentence may, if desired, prove grounds for proceedings by Mrs. Evelyn Thaw for the annulment of her marriage.

HAS "POSTAL CARDOMANIA"

Cincinnati Man Gives This as Reason for Slapping Wife and Court Releases Him.

Cincinnati.—William Schenck of Elwood place offered a novel excuse for slapping his wife when he faced Judge Hoffman in the police court Wednesday. He claimed that he was a victim of "postal cardomania," and charged his wife with sending them. He presented several cards to the court.

On one was written, "All in and down and out;" another showed a handsome young woman with outstretched arms, yawning. Underneath the picture was printed the words, "I do not care if he never comes back." Another had written on it, "Come in, the water is fine."

The wife claimed that Schenck had slapped and then punched her in the face while he was talking with her Sunday night. He was released.

ASK $5,000,000,000 FUND

THAT SUM TO BE USED IN PUSHING IRRIGATION.

Other Resolutions Are Made at National Congress in Session at Spokane, Wash.

Spokane, Wash.—An issue of $5,000,000,000 in three per cent. bonds for irrigation of arid lands, improvement of waterways and public roads and drainage, is the plan of the National Irrigation congress in session here. Arthur Hooler of Spokane, secretary of the board of control, introduced the resolution requesting this great sum at Wednesday's session.

It is proposed to use this fund in five portions, as follows:

One billion for drainage; one billion fro irrigation; one billion for deep-waterways; one billion for good roads and one billion for forest preservation.

It was asked that a committee present the request to congress.

A resolution also was introduced planning that where settlers of arid lands have been deprived of the right to reclaim their lands by the action of the reclamation service in cutting off water rights such settlers may gain the right to their lands by the reclamation of one acre in their tracts by means of a well.

J. N. Teal of Oregon introduced a resolution condemning the use of the plumage of birds for the decoration of women's head-gear and asking further protection of birds in the west, where their activities are a relief from the savage insects in the forests.

George Otis Smith, director of the geological survey, spoke on the classification of public lands. Irrigation in South Dakota was discussed by S. H. Lea, state engineer of South Dakota. Howard Elliott, president of the Northern Pacific railroad, spoke on the opportunities of the west.

Mr. Elliott, with a note of bitterness in his voice, said that while the railway is second only to the farmer as a developer of the nation's resources, "but few arose to say, 'well done, thou good and faithful servant.'"

FRENCHMAN FLIES OVER ALPS

Reach Height Exceeding Three Miles While Passing over Mount Blanc—Danger Not Over.

Chamonix, France. — The balloon Sirius has succeeded in flying over the Alps. The airship left here last Sunday under the pilotage of M. Spelterine, who had with him three passengers. Fears were entertained for the safety of the voyagers, but they have landed safely at a point near Locarno at an altitude of 5,400 feet. The four men, however, still had a dangerous path to cover on foot from the place where they landed into Locarno.

The Sirius traversed Mount Blanc and soared over the Aiguille du Dru and the Aiguille Verte. The highest altitude attained on the voyage was 5,600 meters, equal to 18,373 feet.

A successful balloon trip over Mount Blanc and the Alps was made in November of 1906 by two Italian aeronauts in the balloon Milano. The greatest altitude reached on this trip was 20,500 feet, and the rarefied atmosphere made it necessary for the men to resort to their supply of oxygen to keep alive. The Milano, which went up from Milan, came down at Aix-le-Bains after having covered a distance of 175 miles in three hours.

ROBS ILLINOIS BANK OF $2,500

Lone Desperado Holds Up Cashier and Brother and Flees with Large Amount.

Jacksonville, Ill.—A daring bank robbery occurred at Franklin, Morgan county, a lone bandit securing $2,500 in currency from a cashier of the Farmers' & Merchants' bank.

One suspect has been arrested, but his identity has not been proven.

Between one and two o'clock in the afternoon a man clad like a farmer appeared at the cashier's desk and asked to exchange some bills of small denominations for larger ones. The cashier went to the vault to get the bills.

When he emerged the robber was inside the railing and covered him with a revolver, demanding the bank's cash.

Aid Fight Against Tuberculosis.

At the recent meeting of the National Association of Bill Posters, held in Atlanta, Ga., it was decided to donate to the campaign against tuberculosis $1,200,000 worth of publicity. The bill posters in all parts of the United States and Canada will fill the vacant spaces on their 3,500 bill boards with large posters illustrating the ways to prevent and cure consumption. The Poster Printers' association has also granted $200,000 worth of printing and paper for this work. This entire campaign of billboard publicity will be conducted under the direction of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis in co-operation with the National Bill Posters' association.

The Artless Boy.

The boy bowed politely to the grocer.

"I understand," he said, "that you want a boy, sir. Will you kindly look me over."

"I only pay $3," said the grocer, abruptly.

"I understood," said the boy, "that you paid four."

The grocer nodded.

"I did pay four," he said, "until I saw in the paper the other day that Millionaire Rogers began his business career on $3 a week."

The boy smiled,

"But I don't expect to be a millionaire," he said. "I don't care to be rich—I'd much rather be good."

The grocer was so much pleased with this artless reply that he compromised with the boy for three and a half.

BAD DREAMS
Caused by Coffee.

"I have been a coffee drinker, more of less, ever since I can remember, until a few months ago I became more and more nervous and irritable, and finally I could not sleep at night for I was horribly disturbed by dreams of all sorts and a species of distressing nightmare.

"Finally, after hearing the experience of numbers of friends who had quit coffee and were drinking Postum, and learning of the great benefits they had derived, I concluded coffee must be the cause of my trouble, so I got some Postum and had it made strictly according to directions.

"I was astonished at the flavour and taste. It entirely took the place of coffee, and to my very great satisfaction, I began to sleep peacefully and sweetly. My nerves improved, and I wish I could wean every man, woman and child from the unwholesome drug—ordinary coffee.

"People really do not appreciate or realize what a powerful drug it is and what terrible effect it has on the human system. If they did, hardly a pound of it would be sold. I would never think of going back to coffee again. I would almost as soon think of putting my hand in a fire after I had once been burned.

"A young lady friend of ours had stomach trouble for a long time, and could not get well as long as she used coffee. She finally quit coffee and began the use of Postum and is now perfectly well. Yours for health."

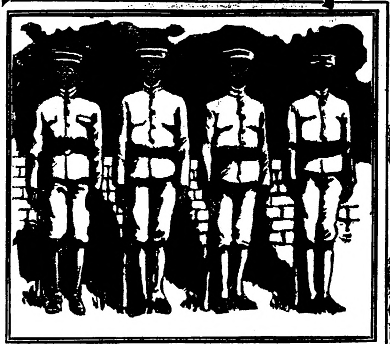
FROM SAVAGERY to MINIONS of the LAW

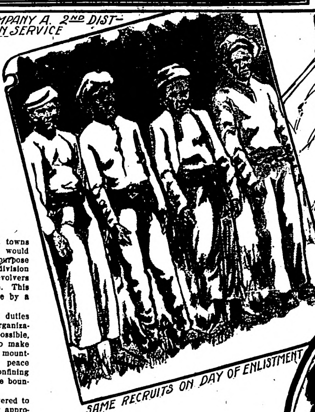
BY WILL P. SHAFTER

THE mutiny of 30 members of the Philippine constabulary at Davao has brought to notice that splendid organization, founded on the remnants of Aguinaldo's insurrectionary army in the early days of the American occupation. For the last eight years they have given to the islands a season of law and order and to various tribes of our newer domain a respect for the majesty of the great nation of whose army they form, though indirectly, an important part.

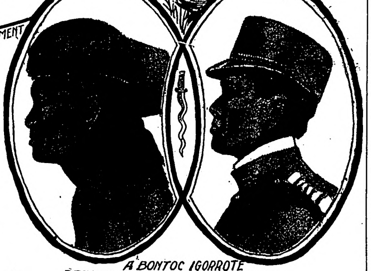
The mutiny, in itself, amounted to little. One American planter was killed by the bullets of the mutineers and there were two or three men wounded. Then the loyal members of the constabulary, with the backing of small detchments of the Twenty-third and Twenty-fifth United States infantry, chased the would-be revolutionaries back into the fastnesses of the Davaoan hills and, within 48 hours of the first notice of the difficulty reaching headquarters the first internal serious trouble since the organization of the corps was at an end.



PART OF COMPANY A. 2ND DIST— ONE YEAR IN SERVICE



SAME RECRUITS ON DAY OF ENLISTMENT



A BONTOC IGORROTE BEFORE AND AFTER

The Philippine constabulary was organized just nine years ago. At the conclusion of the insurrection of 1899-1900 the military governor of the Philippines, Gen. Arthur McArthur, issued the following order:

"In order to encourage among the people the idea of self-protection against robbers and roving bands of criminals, with which the country abounds, department commanders are authorized to arm the local police in towns where such action, in their judgment, would be prudent and expedient. For this purpose requisitions may be submitted to the division headquarters for caliber .45 Colt's revolvers and an adequate supply of ammunition. This arm will be replaced at an early date by a more suitable weapon.

"For the better performance of the duties contemplated it is desired that the organization of police be systematized and, if possible, the scope of action extended so as to make these constabulary bodies, by means of mounted detachments, conservators of the peace and safety of districts, instead of confining their operations to areas limited by the boundaries of towns and barracks.

"Department commanders are empowered to enforce the provisions of this order by appropriate instructions."

By the autumn of 1900 some organization of the constabulary had been effected and in February, 1901, the Philippine government had, in addition to the army and the native scouts then on duty, an embryo of the present efficient constabulary force numbering 2,571 men.

The newly organized body had an amusing complexity of personnel and diversity of armament. It included every race and every color, every language and every degree of civilization, from cultured Castilians of the Malecon drive to the dusky savage of Mindanao and Negros. The catalogue of their weapons was fully as mixed as their racial affiliations.

The organization grew in numbers and in popularity. At first the ill-disposed were prone to take chances with the little "coppers." They had seen them as soldiers of the army of Aguinaldo driven from point to point by the husky soldiers of the United States until they had become imbued with the idea that running was their chief and only accomplishment. It took but a few brushes with them to show that they had gained something of Uncle Sam's determination to do things in his own way and when the way of the preserver of order and the native disorganizer ran counter something had to drop, and drop hard. Gradually the good work of the constabulary became understood and with the spread of their reputation for keeping things straight the minor disorders of the urban and agricultural communities became fewer and fewer.

When at the last pacification of the civilized and semi-civilized portions of the islands became an established fact the constabulary took up the work of teaching the hill tribes, the head hunters and professional ladrones that the plying of their various forms of nefarious business or pleasure anywhere near a constabulary post was a highly unwholesome pastime. When the hillmen and others got enough of going out on trouble hunts the constabulary organized little trips on their own account and went back into the woods to drag out the real bad men and teach them the art of behaving themselves even under their own vines and banana trees.

One of the most remarkable things about the organization of the constabulary has been their extreme amenability to discipline and their readiness to assimilate western ideas of conduct and deportment by the members of the force. In the illustrations will be noticed photographs of a detachment of Moro and Subano recruits. These pictures of the same group of men were taken only four months apart. In the first the barefoot, disheveled, turbaned band had just entered the service as the veriest of rookies. In the second picture, straight, trim, clean, well-drilled and set up fit to make even a regular look to his laurels, they are presented again. In a third of a year they have been converted from semi-savagery and are representative members of one of the best disciplined bodies of troops in the world.

The Philippines have been divided into districts by the constabulary and each of these districts—there are five in all—contains about a thousand of these soldier policemen. The force numbers, in addition to the subdistrict of Palawan and the Constabulary school at Intramuros, Manila, something over 5,000.

They are under the command of Brig.-Gen. Henry H. Bandholtz, who holds the title of director. There is an assistant director, two inspectors and a staff of about a dozen officers attached to the headquarters at Manila. There is a director for each of the general districts of the archipelago and these districts in turn are divided into subdistricts and minor stations, some of the smaller stations having only half a dozen policemen in charge.

In the early days of the force the officers of commissioned rank were all Americans. A large percentage, a majority, in fact, are still natives of the States, but there is always opportunity for the ambitious and educated Filipino to reach a promotion if by diligence, fidelity and good hard work he desires to accomplish it.

The force at first appeared in a great variety of uniforms, everything from the cast-off blue and white drill of their former conquerors, the Spaniards, to the rusty blue flannel shirts and khaki breeches of the American volunteers, who put Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo out of business. To-day they are all uniformed alike and their appearance is distinctly natty. Khaki for service and general wear, with shoulder cords and facings of artillery red, caps or campaign hats, in accordance with the season, wool puttees and comfortable canvas shoes complete the rig.

For dress occasions the officers wear snowy duck and the enlisted men are privileged to provide themselves with a similar costume for fiesta days and Sundays if they so desire. The Mahometan members of the organization wear the tarboosh or fez instead of the cap, as may be seen in the picture of the Moro detachment, which is known officially as Company A. Fifth district constabulary. The fez is of crimson felt and the tassel which hangs to the eyebrows is of yellow silk.

A portion of the force is mounted. It is the hope of the Philippine government that, as the islands become more and more orderly and the necessity for the retention of regular cavalry has passed, they will be able to make nearly the whole constabulary a mounted organization. Horses or the little Philippine ponies have been used most of the time, one of the pictures shows what the men have been put to at times of flood, the carabo, the unique Philippine beast of burden, having been used as a cavalry horse on more than one occasion. When on land his progress is perhaps a trifle slow, but he is a mud horse of high degree, a splendid wader and an even better swimmer. Some of the Americans who have had occasion to use the carabo as a means of locomotion say that they would be almost willing to attempt the crossing of the Pacific astride his bony shoulders.

As a supplement to the army of occupation and a go-between that is not military in anything save arms and discipline and which the insular government can use as it will and when or wherever it is needed the Philippine constabulary stand comparable to any irregular force in the world. They have much in common with the Indian police maintained for much similar purposes by the viceregal government of British India, but they are more the soldier than even that famous body of conservers of the law. Their discipline has improved with rapid strides and has kept pace with their efficiency and usefulness.

The constabulary maintains the finest military band in the islands. It was their band which participated in the inauguration of President Taft and which later toured the United States, giving concerts.

CURIOSITIES OF BIRD-NESTING

An authority says: "It is not at all an uncommon thing to find the first and sometimes second egg of a young bird abnormally small, but I came across a case some few years ago which was quite unique. In April, 1901, I was hunting for a few clutches of the carrion crow in some small woods, which were their favorite nesting places in that district. I walked right through the first wood without success, but on leaving it I saw, perched on a tree some distance away, two crows. Guessing that I had disturbed them and that they were watching me, I walked on for some distance, still keeping my eye on them. Sure enough, as soon as they were satisfied that I was leaving, one of them made off straight for a large oak tree at the extreme end of the wood I had just left. On returning I discovered the nest and the reason I had missed it. It was built out on the extreme end of the lowest limb of the tree, within 10 feet of the ground, and hidden by the undergrowth below—a most unusual position. I climbed to the nest and was much astonished at the contents. In it were four miniature crow's eggs, very little larger than blackbird's eggs, and in shape almost round. On blowing them I found the shells were abnormally thick and tough for the size of the egg and they contained no yolk. Knowing that crows invariably remain in the same locality year after year, the following season I went to look for my friends again and to my great delight found the nest in a very similar position in another oak tree within 30 yards of the first nest. It contained five eggs, four exact counterparts of the first clutch and one of normal size, the only one to contain any yolk. The following season I found them for the third time again quite close to the previous nests; this time there were four eggs, only one small one and three full size."

IN AGONY WITH ECZEMA.

Whole Body a Mass of Raw, Bleeding, Torturing Humor—Hoped Death Would End Fearful Suffering.

In Despair; Cured by Cuticura.

"Words cannot describe the terrible eczema I suffered with. It broke out on my head and kept spreading until it covered my whole body. I was almost a solid mass of sores from head to foot. I looked more like a piece of raw beef than a human being. The pain and agony endured seemed more than I could bear. Blood and pus oozed from the great sore on my scalp, from under my finger nails, and nearly all over my body. My ears were so crusted and swollen I was afraid they would break off. Every hair in my head fell out. I could not sit down, for my clothes would stick to the raw and bleeding flesh, making me cry out from the pain. My family doctor did all he could, but I got worse and worse. My condition was awful. I did not think I could live, and wanted death to come and end my frightful sufferings.

"In this condition my mother-in-law begged me to try the Cuticura Remedies. I said I would, but had no hope of recovery. But oh, what blessed relief I experienced after applying Cuticura Ointment. It cooled the bleeding and itching flesh and brought me the first real sleep I had had in weeks. It was as grateful as ice to a burning tongue. I would bathe with warm water and Cuticura Soap, then apply the Ointment freely. I also took Cuticura Resolvent for the blood. In a short time the sores stopped running, the flesh began to heal, and I knew I was to get well again. Then the hair on my head began to grow, and in a short time I was completely cured. I wish I could tell everybody who has eczema to use Cuticura. Mrs. Wm. Hunt, 135 Thomas St., Newark, N. J., Sept. 28, 1908."

The Terrebonne Chees Factory paid over $2,700 to its farmer milk patrons for the month of June, another indication that our Red Lake county farmers are on the prosperity road.

Is Taft going to make good, as the successor of Roosevelt? Ask any leading republican this question and you will notice that his attention has just been attracted in an other direction.

The Committee that have exhibits of Red Lake County to prepare for the state fair, should see to it that the dairy interests receive proper attention. Minnesota has been rightly named the "Bread and Butter State," but in past years it has been the costome of allowing the northern part of the state to have part of the credit for produceing the bread, and the southern part all the butter credit. It is now time for northern Minnesota to advertise the fact that we can not only produce the bread, but can produce the butter for the bread, and a big chunk of cheese to eat with the bread and butter.

It seems that our shot of two weeks ago rather warmed up the two gentelmen from Erie and Deer Park, but as we have had about all the fun we can with them we will tell them the facts, which are these: If the legislature had not made that "pork barrel" agreement to not allow any bills asking for any state appropriations, to come out of the Committee, and we could have got our bill before the legislature, it would have passed and the bridge been built, and your opposition would not have amounted to as much as a little fly, that tried to stop the progress of a big ox Just put these facts in your pipe and smoke them, for they are facts

Olden Tea Table Etiquette.

Tea table etiquette was somewhat complicated in the days of that "hardened and shameless tea drinker," Dr. Johnson, when many people thought nothing of drinking ten or twelve cups at a sitting. It was considered proper for the cups and saucers of a party of tea drinkers to be all passed up to the hostess in one batch when replenishment was considered necessary, and in order that each person might be sure of getting back the right cup the teaspoons were numbered. When the cups were passed up those who did not require any more were supposed to place the spoon in the cup. And this writer remembers a very ancient dame teaching a small boy to place his spoon in his cup after the first cup had been emptied. He wondered for the reason. Now he knows that tea was once very expensive, and little boys were not expected to ask again.—St. James' Gazette.

His Air Tight Compartment.

The passenger who was crossing the Atlantic for the first time timidly approached the pompous purser.

"Is it true, sir," he said, "that this whole ship is divided into air tight compartments?"

"True as gospel," replied the purser in surprise.

"Then," remarked the passenger gloomily, "I guess I'll have to put up with the one I'm occupying if I can't better myself!"

"A Matter Of Form."

Judgeing from the published article of W. A. Swanson in the last weeks leven towns, the poor nullity writer seems to be under the delusion that his wonderful opposition to our efforts to try to get a bridge across Red Lake River was defeated by him. He does not seem to know that all the road and bridge money was lost in the pork barrel, decision of the supreme court, and now Swanson has an idea he is the man that done the business in the leven towns. Of course if he was writeing for an up-to date news paper the editor would tell him of his mistake, but the runner of that sheet is kept so busy fighting bed bugs to keep them from sucking the last drop of blood out of his old dried up carcass, that he does not get time to note any of the passing events. So desperate was the battle last week, that he did not notice that our Highlanding creamery got the first premium for butter at the County fair.

Oh no Mr. Swanson; we don't want any more of your "matter of form" assistance in any public enterprise that we are intersted in, for we prefer your opposition, then we know where we are at. At the time the farmers was trying to raise money to build a boat Swanson was the bigest toad in the puddle, running arround saying: "Come on boys and sigh, "it is only a matter of form." They signed, and the other farmers paid, the boat was built, but it was a "matter of form" with Swanson, who never paid a dollar. Again when Thief River Falls circulated a petition for county seat removel, Swanson was ready to sign: Oh yes! "Only a matter of form" About three weeks after he had signed the Thief River Falls petition, Red Lake Falls circulated a petion of withdrawel, and of course Swenson was ready to sign it; sure thing; "only a matter of form," We could tell more of the "matter of form" tricks of Mr. Swanson, but whats the use, as no one whow knows him pay any attention to anything he may say or do, as he is only considerd a "wiffle" by those who know him best.

Private Hospital Guests.

"Hello, old man! Didn't know you were in New York? Where are you stopping?"

"Glad to see you. I'm at a private hospital uptown."

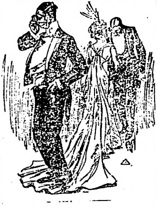
"Private hospital! Why, I'm sorry. What's the trouble?"

"No trouble at all myself. My sister went there for an operation, and I'm staying with her. There are plenty of patients there with relatives or friends. We pay high prices, of course, but the rooms are light, comfortable and clean, and we can order anything on earth we want for meals and get it. Things are served to us as though we were invalids, and there's no kick coming, I'll tell you that. And we can have as much company as we wish for meals at a dollar and a half a head."—New York Press.

The Sneeze.

There exists an ancient semi-medical statement which tells us that the sneeze is healthy and should not be suppressed. It is one of those stock sayings which are always uttered by laymen on the vague authority of some traditional doctor whose name is suppressed in favor of the adjective "eminent." It is one of the things about which you mentally pledge yourself to ask your own doctor, but when it comes to the point you never do. Either you do not get the opportunity or if a chance does present itself an inner voice seems to warn you to let it be until some future occasion. To our own mind the odds are that sneezing is a wholesome habit, for it is an unpleasant one. Of course there are people who can sneeze and not look ridiculous, but they are few. Any one caught in the act of trying to suppress a sneeze is a terrible addition to the landscape, and if you want to sneeze and cannot what gargoyle could hold a candle to you? That hideously contorted face, that quivering mouth and that deflected nostril—why, your countenance is something worth building two cathedrals round! It is as though some mad potter were gripping your facial clay and wrenching it this way and that to amuse his frenzied humor. Have you ever heard a succession of half a dozen sneezes? It is an experience that has an extraordinarily irritating effect.—London Globe.

He Caught the Train All Right!



A Spa's Curious Origin.

The discovery of the famous Woodhall spa in Lincolnshire was very curious. Just about a hundred years ago a shaft was sunk in search of coal, but the effort had to be abandoned owing to a rush of water. In time the water found its way into a small brook, and in due course the inhabitants began to speak of the curative powers of the stream. Science investigated the mystery and discovered that the water in the coalless shaft was richly impregnated with various salts and bromine and iodine. Geologists expressed the interesting opinion that ages ago the place was the sandy bed of a shallow lagoon or bay of a tropical sea where seaweeds of giant growth abounded. A mighty convulsion of nature lowered the sea bed, a great river flowed over the place, and in time its debris was formed into a mass of spongy rock or sandstone. Forcing itself through this mass at great pressure some 600 feet below the ground, the water now extracts the constituents of the original seaweed.—London Family Herald.

An Apt Answer.

The dangers associated with the fishing industry on the Newfoundland banks are many and grave. Foremost among them is that the dories may be upset while fishing, which involves almost inevitable loss of their occupants. Callous captains, secure themselves from the necessity of going, frequently order their men out when the weather does not warrant it, and disastrous are the results. One of these brutal skippers was aptly answered once by a bank man of whose courage or capacity there was no question.

"Out with you!" shouted the captain. "Hurry up there! It's a fishing day!"

"Oh, no, skipper!" replied the dory man. "It's too stormy today for a boat to fish."

"Nonsense, man!" rejoined the skipper. "If my old grandmother was here today she'd get her dory out."

"Then, skipper," said the man, "if her grandson will come out with me now I'll haul my trawl."

It is needless to say no dories were launched from that schooner on that date.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A party of miners calling at an inn in Llangollen during the absence of the landlord were shown into the best room, which, on his return, caused him to remonstrate. His wife, however, explained that a lot of money had been spent and that seven bottles of claret had already been drunk.

Salad Rolls.

Materials.—One dozen fresh Parker House rolls, one cupful of cold chicken, one cupful of chopped celery and enough mayonnaise to mix well.

Way of Preparing.—Open the rolls and scoop out a pocket in each. Brush with butter and run in the oven for a few minutes. Cool and fill with a mixture of the other ingredients. Place on a bread plate and garnish with fringed celery.—National Food Magazine.

He Got the Chair.

On a very hot afternoon a number of around town chaps who didn't seem to have much to do were lounging in the chairs in front of a leading hotel. Several traveling men came out of the hotel and, finding all of the chairs occupied, looked and spoke things that wouldn't go well in polite society.

"Let's dump a few of them out," suggested one.

"Hold on a minute," replied another. "Watch me get a chair." With that he walked over to one of the loungers and in the most courteous way said, "Will you please tell me whether that is a drug store across the street?"

"No," replied the lounger; "that's a bank."

"Oh, is it? Well, say, what is that nice big building just down the street there, two corners away?"

"That's the postoffice," was the reply.

"You live in this charming city, then?" asked the drummer.

"I do," said the lounger.

"Well, then," replied the traveling man, "I'm a guest at this hotel and paying for accommodations. Suppose you get up and give me that chair."

He got the chair.—Kansas City Journal.

Varieties of Humor.

The Temple of Art, devoted to that peculiar form of entertainment yclept "polite vaudeville," was crowded to suffocation as Messrs. Biff and Bang, the refined sketch team and sidewalk conversationalists, stepped jauntily to the footlights. In response to the deafening applause Messrs. Biff and Bang bowed condescendingly, as though it hurt them.

Without further preliminary Mr. Biff hit his partner on the rear of his ample trousers with a stuffed club, remarking, "It's a wise man that knows his own mind."

And Mr. Bang, not to be outdone in this little exchange of pleasantries, promptly buried an ax in the skull of Mr. Biff, remarking the while, "It's a wise man that minds his own nose."

Whereupon the intelligent audience screamed with delight and voted Biff and Bang the best ever. "And yet they were a frost in the London halls," commented a man in the front row. "The English have no appreciation of real humor."—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Singer

I shelter me behind my song
  From grief and care and pain,
That all unlovely things may throng
  Across my way in vain.

Gay tunes I sing for those who weep,
  Sad tunes for passers gay;
And ever on the road I keep,
  Be rough or smooth the way.

What matter if no hearth be laid
  To warm my weary feet
And if there wait no wistful maid
  To give me welcome sweet?

Since ne'er so lonely are the hours
  Nor paths so steep and long
But what I find through sun or showers
  A shelter in my song!

A Would-Be Prisoner

By Elliott Flower

(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

Policeman Barney Flynn felt that the time had come for him to assert himself. He had told the man to move on, and the man had retorted by making various sarcastic and otherwise objectionable remarks. The comparatively new man on the "force" is always the one who prizes his dignity very highly, and Policeman Flynn resented the insinuations that the that the man made.

"Get a move on ye, now, or I'll run ye in," he said.

"Well, run me in," retorted the man. "Don't stand there talking about it but do it."

"I will," said Policeman Flynn.

"Well, why don't you?" demanded the man.

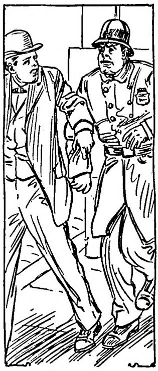
"I will," said Policeman Flynn again, and he took the man by the shoulder. "There's no man on the beat can give me any back talk. Will ye go quiet-like, or will I take the club to ye?"

"Oh, I'll go along all right," answered the man. "I was thinking of dropping in on the sergeant anyway, and we'll just go together. I haven't seen him in 'most a year."

Policeman Flynn hesitated. Men who want to see the sergeant are a rarity, and there is always a chance that they have "infloo'nce" somewhere.

"Av ye'll g'wan about yer business now I'll l'ave ye go," suggested the officer of the law.

"But I won't," said the man. "I'm under arrest and I'm going to the station. If I've violated the law, you have no right to compromise the matter with me. It's your duty to lock me up."



"L'ave Me Loose!" Exclaimed Policeman Flynn.

"Come along with ye, then!" exclaimed Policeman Flynn. "I'll lock ye up fast enough, an av' ye don't come willing I'll call the wagon."

Nevertheless, he wasn't exactly satisfied. The prisoner was too willing, and it is extremely disconcerting to have charge of a man who wants to be arrested. Still, Policeman Flynn made a great show of representing the majesty of the law while they traversed a block. Then he stopped.

"G'wan, now," he said. "I'll not be bothered with ye any more. G'wan home."

"I won't," said the man. "I'm your prisoner, and if you connive at the escape of a man you've placed under arrest, I'll prefer charges against you. I'm going with you."

"Ye'll be sorry for it," suggested Policeman Flynn. "Ye'll find no featherbeds at the station, an' there's rats in the cells."

"I'm taking my chances," answered the man. "Come on."

"I won't," said Policeman in his turn, for it was beginning to dawn upon him that he might have some difficulty in making a case against his prisoner. His threat of arrest had been only a "bluff" anyway, and the "bluff" had been called.

"Oh, come on," urged the man. "Come on to the station. What's the use of standing here in the street?"

"Oh, g'wan about yer business!" exclaimed Policeman Flynn. "Get off me beat an' don't bother me no more. I'm tired."

The prisoner caught the policeman by the arm and pulled him along.

"Hang it all!" he cried, "why don't you do your duty?"

"L'ave me loose!" exclaimed Policeman Flynn. "D'ye think yer the whole police foorce? I'll not arrest anny man on compoolsion."

"But you've already arrested me," urged the man.

"Then I let ye go."

"But I refuse to be liberated. Come on, can't you?" And he almost dragged the reluctant officer along the street.

"L'ave go my arm!" cried Policeman Flynn, "or I'll bat ye over the head. I'll not have anny man makin' me lock him up ag'in me will. L'ave go, I tell ye."

"Then come along peaceably," said the man. "You've no right to let me go, and I won't go. A police magistrate is the only man who can free me, and you're trying to usurp his functions."

"I'll not take ye," insisted Policeman Flynn. "Jest g'way from me; that's all."

"I won't do it," said the man. "If you don't take me to the station now, I'll stick by you until you are relieved and have to go in to report. I don't want any imitation arrest. I want the real thing, and it's only fair to me that I should have it. The way you're acting makes me feel mighty small and of no account. Ain't I worth arresting?"

"Av coorse ye are."

"Then run me in."

"But I don't want to. I've troubles enough now."

"But you must; I insist."

Policeman Flynn drew a long breath.

"Be a good felly, now," he said, "an' g'wan about yer business."

"My business is to go to the station with you."

"What for d'ye want to be contrary?" persisted Policeman Flynn. "Can't ye do a good turn for a man?"

"Do you ask it as a favor?"

"I do that same. I ask ye to plaze g'wan home an' don't bother me. Could I spake fairer than that?"

"Oh, well, as a favor to you," returned the man, "possibly I might consent not to be arrested on this occasion."

"'Twould be a great favor. I don't want ye. I've no use for ye at all. G'way from me, won't ye?"

"Sure," said the man. "As a matter of personal accommodation to you I will leave you."

Five minutes later Policeman Flynn was leaning against a lamp-post fanning himself with his helmet and solemnly shaking his head.

"Bad luck to me!" he muttered. "When I went on the foorce I thought I might have trouble kapin' a prisoner, but I never knew 'twould be so hard to lose one."

Florida's 70-Foot Bamboo.

Possibly the tallest bamboo in America grows in Arcadia, Fla., and is about 70 feet high. The clump has a spread of 50 feet and the diameter at the ground is 12 feet. The specimen is only eight years old.

This is common bamboo of India, probably brought to south Florida from the West Indies. In Jamaica it has become naturalized and is popularity supposed to be indigenous.

This bamboo makes an astounding growth during our rainy season, the canes often attaining their full height in six weeks, after which they begin to put on leaves. The canes are from four to five inches in diameter at their base.

Unfortunately this species cannot stand low temperatures and the specimen in Arcadia has frequently been damaged by cold.—Garden Magazine.

Pity the Poor Horse Fly.

Every purchaser of a motor car discourages the life of the horse fly. Some sort of a bug or fly will have to be invented to bite autos and make them stamp, switch their tails, and kick up. We don't know what effect a cinder beetle would have on autos. The question is referred to Judge Adna P. Gristlebone for an expert opinion.—Ossawatomie (Kan.) Globe.

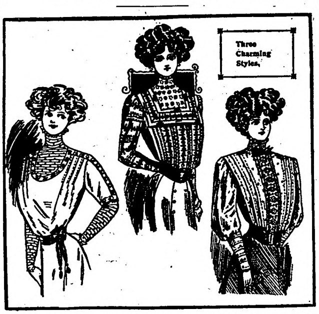
Blouses and Bodice



Three Charming Styles.

THE first illustration gives an over-bodice which is, of course, made of the same material as the skirt it is worn with. It is a pattern suitable for linen, silk or woolen material. Three tucks are made at each side back and front; those at back are stitched to waist, but the front ones only to the bust. The neck is outlined with galloon or insertion, and a strap of the same is carried over the shoulder and down outside sleeve. The under-slip is of tucked spotted net.

Materials required: for over-bodice, 1¼ yards trimming.

The second is made in some plain material, that is tucked in sets of threes, bands of braiding or embroidery being worked between the sets of tucks. The yoke may be of piece lace or broderie Anglaise. The square that outlines the yoke is trimmed to match the rest of blouse.

Materials required: Two yards 42 inches wide, ½ yard 18 inches wide for yoke.

The third is in spotted lawn, with a band of muslin embroidery down center; a frill of Valenciennes lace trims each edge of band.

Materials required: Three yards 28 inches wide, 1 yard insertion, 2 yards narrow lace.

VOGUE OF THE PICTURE RUG.

Gay Summer Floor Coverings Are Simply the Washable Home-Made Rag Carpet.

Among the coolest summer floor coverings are the washable home-made rag carpet rugs that make their way through the world under an assumed name, borrowed from the "mother" of our country.

Martha Washington may have made rugs or may not have (she probably did toil and spin, being a dame of the olden time), but whether she did or not they bear her name.

Annually they take on new colors and patterns in a shamelessly modern fashion, and some of them are now so gay as to be better fitted for the nursery than the serious and full-grown domicile.

The gray-mixed rugs are bordered with a whole village scene, showing an array of houses, fences and weeping-willow trees. Thirty-six inches of scampering rabbits in dull colors are woven across the ends of red rugs, and a pageant of squawking white geese, the border of a delicate blue one, would amaze any baby seated suddenly in the center of this barnyard scene. A quaint blue painted pump by the wayside, with a little landscape, has made its appearance on one of the newest.

The rag-carpet rug is quite apparently in a state of evolution. It also has been noted that differences in the weave are now beginning to crop out, but the inventive powers of woman are not on the wane, and we probably shall have still others to amuse us and, incidentally, the children in the nursery.

Popular Amethysts.

For day wear amethysts are undoubtedly the fashion. The really well-dressed woman has sets of these, hat pins, long watch chain and brooch to match. In most of the hat pins the stone is elongated or spherical.

There are some of the prettiest long chains in which the amethysts are cut square and quite flat, and the links of the chain are gold and about half an inch in length. This is a smart design and looks equally well when worn with either a tailored or lingerie waist.

Lapis lazuli is also popular and becoming for brooches. Large square or diamond-shaped ones, set in silver, are very stylish worn at the throat to hold one's jabot in place.

If Your Hands Perspire.

She whose hands perspire knows how costly a luxury is her infirmity; ruined gloves are a sorry monument. When so afflicted try dusting the hands with a little borax before putting on gloves.

There are several tried preparations for checking perspiration that can be applied to the palms of the hand. These must be well rubbed in or the gloves will suffer from grease.

If a bit of absorbent cotton is slipped into the palm of the hand after the glove is on it will absorb perspiration and save much damage.

Powdering the hands with lycopodium sometimes helps perspiration. It is well to try this with an old glove, as a yellow stain might result.

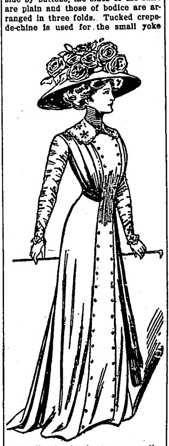
Parisian Hats.

Immense outstretched wings of white are seen on colored and black hats. They are handsome as well as durable, for, as a rule, summer millinery is all that is cheap looking and perishable. All kinds of black flowers are appearing. Some buttercups with yellow centers are being put on big black net hats in a modish house, and they will be becoming and most attractive, for black and yellow look well on almost anyone.

USEFUL AND SIMPLE DRESS.

Style That Would Look Well in Cream Serge, Trimmed with Much Crepe-de-Chine.

This useful and simple style would look well in cream serge, the panel down center of front is trimmed each side by buttons, the sides of the skirt are plain and those of bodice are arranged in three folds. Tucked crepe-de-chine is used for the small yoke and collar band; the turnover collar is of crepe-de-chine, embroidered and scalloped at the edges. The sleeve is slightly rucked and set to embroidered crepe-de-chine cuffs at the wrist. A sash and tie of golden brown satin are worn.



Hat of white chip lined with brown chiffon and trimmed with masses of brown roses and foliage.

Materials required: Six yards serge 48 inches wide, 4 dozen buttons, one yard crepe-de-chine.

All-White Frock.

Is there any frock to which we turn with such entire satisfaction when the really hot days come as that which is all white?

Colors are always pretty and we must have them, but they never have the charm of pure white on a sultry day.

Black Hem on Frocks.

There has come about a method of trimming a light frock by adding a three-inch hem of black satin, taffeta, or watered silk. This is done with sheer white frocks. It is quite smart on frocks of white and black foulard.

DISCOURAGED WOMEN.

A Word of Hope for Despairing Ones.

Kidney trouble makes weak, weary, worn women. Backache, hip pains, dizziness, headaches, nervousness, languor, urinary troubles make women suffer untold misery. Ailing kidneys are the cause. Cure them. Mrs. S. D. Ellison, N. Broadway, Lamar, Mo., says: "Kidney trouble wore me down till I had to take to bed. I had terrible pains in my body and limbs and the urine was annoying and full of sediment. I got worse and doctors failed to help. I was discouraged. Doan's Kidney Pills brought quick relief and a final cure and now I am in the best of health."

A PROPOSAL.

Mr. Hardup—Good morning, Miss Aughtumn—ahem! There is something I have been wishing to ask you for some time, but—er—the fact is, I haven't been able to screw up enough courage to—er—come to the point.

Miss Aughtumn—A proposal at last!

Mr. Hardup—Could you, my dear Miss Aughtumn—could you lend me five dollars?

TROUBLE IN ROYAL PALACE.

Tidings Borne by Amateur Actor Sufficient to Lead Hearers to Expect the Worst.

The Shakespeare club of New Orleans used to give amateur theatrical performances that were distinguished for the local prominence of the actors. Once a social celebrity, with a gorgeous costume, as one of the lords in waiting had only four words to say: "The queen has swooned." As he stepped forward his friends applauded vociferously. Bowing his thanks, he faced the king and said, in a high-pitched voice: "The swoon has queened."

There was a roar of laughter; but he waited patiently, and made another attempt:

"The sween has cooned."

Again the walls trembled and the stage manager said in a voice which could be heard all over the house: "Come off, you doggoned fool."

But the ambitious amateur refused to surrender, and in a rasping falsetto, as he was assisted off the stage, he screamed: "The coon has sweened."—Success Magazine.

And Ma Fainted.

"Why did she refuse you?" she asked her son, with fine scorn.

"Well," the boy replied between his sobs, "she objects to our family. She says pa's a loafer, that you're too fat and that everybody laughs at Dayse Mayme because she's a fool and talks about nothing but the greatness of her family." (Chauncey threw water in his mother's face, but at three o'clock this afternoon she was still in a swoon, with four doctors working on her.)—Atchison (Kan.) Globe.

Self-Made.

"I might say to you, young men, that I am a self-made man."

"In what respect?" asked an impertinent youth.

"In this respect, if you must know," replied the orator. "I made myself popular with men who had a pull and thus obtained my present lofty position."

GAVE HER AN IDEA.

Cycle Dealer—Here is a cyclometer I can recommend. It is positively accurate; not at all like some cyclometers, which register two miles, perhaps, where you have only ridden one.

Miss de Byke—You haven't any of that kind, have you?

Severe.

Samuel Gompers was talking in the smokeroom of the Baltic about a recent newspaper attack on a rich corporation.

"It was a cruel attack," Mr. Gompers chuckled. "It was as cruel as the Jonesville Clarion's paragraph about old Deacon Hiram Ludlow.

"This paragraph headed the Clarion's obituary column. It said:

"'Deacon Hiram Ludlow of Frisble township, aged 82, passed peacefully away on Thursday last from single blessedness to matrimonial bliss after a short but severe attack by Maria Higgins, a blooming widow of 37 summers.'"—Detroit Journal.

The Newer Way.

Many ideas in regard to women have entirely changed, and among the better and wiser changes is that old thought that the women who were given to good works must needs be dowdy. It is undeniable that "good" women used to wear dowdiness as a sort of hall mark of virtue. As a matter of fact, dowdiness is merely a mark of bad taste and a sign of some lack in the mind. Women are no longer lacking in the wisdom that chooses pretty rather than ugly clothing, and those who do not make the best of their appearance are losing a golden opportunity of giving pleasure.

Your Salary.

The universe pays every man in his own coin; if you smile, it smiles upon you in return; if you frown, you will be frowned at; if you sing, you will be invited into gay company; if you think, you will be entertained by thinkers; and if you love the world and earnestly seek for the good that is therein, you will be surrounded by loving friends, and nature will pour into your lap the treasures of the earth. Censure, criticise and hate, and you will be censured, criticised and hated by your fellow men.—N. W. Zimmerman.

They Were Good Mothers.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton is quoted as saying that a woman's first duty is to develop all her powers and possibilities, that she may better guide and serve the next generation. Mrs. Stanton raised seven uncommonly healthy and handsome children, says an admirer of hers, and the children of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe testify to the virtues of the noted woman as a mother. The eagle may be as good a mother as the hen or the goose.

Never Satisfied.

Her—Oh, oh! Something's crawling down my back!

Him—Well, you'd make just as much fuss if it was crawling up your back. Let it alone.—Cleveland Leader.

Ought to Be.

"Is the man you recommend to us capable of good head work?"

"Well, he's a barber."

An Argive Cowherd.

Argus was boasting of his 100 eyes. "Think of putting on 50 pairs of goggles when you want to motor!" we cried.

CITY TO WAR WITH DISEASE

WINONA TO SPRINKLE STREETS IN BATTLE WITH INFANTILE PARALYSIS.

ORIGINATES FROM THE HORSES

Deposits on Streets Held Accountable for Destructive Plague, Which Is More Prevalent Than Ever Before.

Winona.—Confronted by thirty-one cases of infantile paralysis and a rapidly increasing epidemic throughout the suburban parts of this city, the city council convened in extraordinary session and ordered the streets of Winona to be sprinkled day and night.

Members of the health department and physicians of the city generally agreed that the present epidemic appears to originate from the blown deposits of horses on the dry streets. Twelve years ago a sweeping epidemic of a disease of almost the same diagnosis affected horses in this vicinity and has appeared since. From this source it is believed the infection of the city has resulted.

The health department here was in communication by wire with the authorities at Eau Claire, Wis., where an epidemic was suffered last year. Eau Claire said that they had sprinkled the streets when confronted with the epidemic, which included about 100 cases, but were not prepared to say that the sprinkling stayed the epidemic.

The city health department presented a map indicating where the thirty-two cases in the city are located, demonstrating that only one case was within the daily sprinkling districts.

Sprinkling Permits.

Thirty of the cases are in the outlying districts, some outside the city limits, and the local health board used this coincidence as an argument that sprinkling of the streets seemed to prevent the disease.

There has been no rain in this city for a month, and the streets are dry and dusty, the wind catching the rubbish on the pavements and blowing it over playing children and even into homes. It is the intention to sprinkle the streets day and night until rain falls.

The disease here seems to appear in the evening when the child is going to bed as a fever. This fever turns to a chill. The child is naturally given much water. In the morning the lower limbs are paralyzed. The disease here has attacked only children under sixteen years of age and appears only in July and August.

MILLION FOR LOCOMOTIVES.

Hill Roads Place Record-Breaking Order for Engines.

Minneapolis, Aug. 12.—Louis W. Hill, president of the Great Northern, announces that contracts for fifty-seven locomotives, for which the Hill lines had been figuring with the Baldwin Locomotive works of Philadelphia had been closed. The Great Northern road will get thirty-five, the Northern Pacific seventeen and the Burlington five. Of the Great Northern's purchase, twenty-five will be of the ten-wheel passenger type and ten of the large Mallett type of freight engine. The Northern Pacific will get seventeen of the Pacific type of passenger engine, while the Burlington has ordered five of the Mallett freight locomotives.

The order is one of the largest placed for some time. It represents expediture of approximately $1,000,000, but its significance is greater, as it reflects the expectation on the part of the roads of the need for greater motive power in the near future as traffic increases.

Vermillion Ore Strike.

Duluth.—The Vermillion Steel & Iron Company, Duluth, of which T. J. Walsh of this city is president, has met with unusual success in exploring for iron ore on the Vermillion range, where mines are few but very valuable. The ore has been shown up with diamond drills and they have proven a body of Bessemer grade of several million tons extent. A shaft will be sunk immediately. Two drills are bottomed in the mineral, after showing 300 feet of ore each, and a third drill entered the ore after passing through 30 feet of surface. The depth of the ore is unknown, and heavier drills will replace the present ones to explore to 1,000 feet or more. The big strike will be hailed with satisfaction by furnace men, for new mines on the Vermillion are exceptionally desirable.

ENTIRE STAFF IS RE-ELECTED.

Directors of Soldiers' Home Approve Present Management.

Minneapolis.—The directors of the Minnesota Soldiers' Home, who held their their annual meeting unanimously re-elected the entire staff of officers that served last year.

They are as follows: Commandant, F. H. Barnard; surgeon, Dr. E. J. Davis; adjutant, J. F. L. McKusick; quartermaster, M. L. Williams; chaplain, Leland D. Smith.

BELTRAMI INQUIRY PRESSED

County Auditor First of Accused Officers to Face the Fire.

Bemidji.—The hearing of the charges against County Auditor Wilmann and Commissioners Wright, Sibley and Danaher began before Commissioner M. E. Ryan, of Brainerd. Assistant Attorney General Smith was present, having been appointed by Governor Johnson to see that the facts were properly developed.

The first matter taken up was charge No. 1 against County Auditor Wilmann for nonfeasance in office through neglect to record properly the proceedings of the county board. The books were introduced by the state to substantiate its claims. E. E. McDonald, of Bemidji, is attorney for Wilmann and Danaher, and P. J. Russell represents Wright.

M. F. Kain, deputy public examiner, was the first witness, and stated that four roads had been established in 1907, none of which had been recorded in the road record books of the county, although books for this purpose were kept on hand.

When cross-examined by Mr. McDonald an attempt was made to show that the large amount of work required of the auditor made it impossible for him to keep this record, and that it was not the duty of the auditor to record the work according to the statutes of 1897 and the code of 1905, which prescribes that commissioners may pay not to exceed 10 cents a folio for this work.

M. D. Stoner, former county surveyor, testified that the roads in question had been properly laid out and the work done according to law.

STATE PRISON IS PRAISED.

Warden Jones, of Ohio, Speaks Highly of Minnesota's System.

The manufacture of binder twine in the state prison at Stillwater is the finest means of employing prisoners that I have ever seen," said T. H. B. Jones, warden of the state penitentiary at Columbus, Ohio, who is at the West Hotel while stopping on his way to the convention of prison wardens at Seattle. Mr. Jones spent a day at the Minnesota state prison last week.

"The work of making the twine is not physically hard upon the prisoners," he continued. "It makes excellent labor for them. It is also a great thing for the state, as I was told at the prison that the twine mill received more orders than it could fill. It is unusual for a state penitentiary to get such good returns for the labor of its prisoners. The warden, Mr. Wolfer, appeared to be a very proficient man, and the whole establishment showed the results of his care and ability.

"In Ohio we are having all kinds of trouble to find employment for the inmates of our penitentiary, as the legislature has just ruled against all prison products that interfere with the articles manufactured by union labor. We had about 1,700 prisoners when I left, and it was a great problem to find work to keep them busy.

"There is hope that conditions will soon be better, however, as the legislature will let us supply a great many of the needs of the other state institutions. In addition to this we will be allowed to manufacture desks for public schools, which will keep a large number at work.

KILLED IN SIGHT OF CROWD.

Young Electrician Shocked Painting Bridge—Falls into River.

Winona.—While painting the high bridge which spans the Mississippi here, Ernest Lampe, 19 years, touched an electric wire carrying 6,000 volts and was instantly killed.

The young man was moving cautiously at the highest point directly over the channel while an awestricken crowd in Levee park looked on.

Suddenly a spark at the apex of the framework burst with a mass of fire. Lampe reeled and plunged, turning several somersaults into the river, 140 feet below. The body has not yet been recovered.

Loring Is President of Pillsbury Co.

Minneapolis.—When the receivers for the Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Company, Limited, have been finally discharged the company's mills will be operated by the recently organized Pillsbury Flour Mills Company, under a twenty-year lease in accordance with the new plan of reorganization.

The new company has organized with the following new elected officers: Albert C. Loring, president; Charles S. Pillsbury and Alfred F. Pillsbury, vice presidents, and John S. Pillsbury, secretary and treasurer. These officials also constitute the board of directors.

Three Burglars Sentenced.

Hastings.—James Conners, W. R. Smith and G. H. Lee, arrested by Chief Lewis, of Farmington, for burglarizing the store of Nicholas Gores, in Hampton, and taking goods to the amount of over $400, on June 5, pleaded guilty, and were sentenced to 18 months in prison.

GIRL OF 14 A FIREBUG.

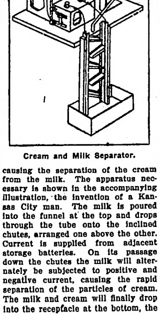
9nna Dingfelter Makes a Startling Confession to Winona Officers.

Winona.—Anna Dingfelder, a young girl only 14 years of age, is guilty of the crime of arson, having confessed to starting several of the small fires here the past week. She has also been found to have committed several petty thefts, and it is believed at least one of the fires was started to destroy evidence of theft.

ELECTRIC CREAM SFPARATOR

Recently Invented Process Requires Much Less Time Than Costly Machines Now In Use.

It is now possible to separate cream from milk by the employment of electricity, the process requiring much less time than with the costly cream separators now in use. The process consists in passing an electric current through the milk to be treated, the passage of the current causing the separation of the cream from the milk. The apparatus necessary is shown in the accompanying illustration, the invention of a Kansas City man. The milk is poured into the funnel at the top and drops through the tube onto the inclined chutes, arranged one above the other. Current is supplied from adjacent storage batteries. On its passage down the chutes the milk will alternately be subjected to positive and negative current, causing the rapid separation of the particles of cream. The milk and cream will finally drop into the receptacle at the bottom, the cream collecting upon the surface, where it can be readily removed by skimming. The inventor claims that the alternating current is preferable, effecting a quicker separation of the cream than can be obtained by currents passing in one direction.



Cream and Milk Separator.

NOTES OF THE DAIRY.

Clover ensilage contains more than twice as much more available protein as corn ensilage.

The dairy cow uses practically three-fourths of her ration for bodily maintenance and energy.

It doesn't pay to buy stock or machinery just because it is cheap, never did and probably never will.

If skim milk is added to the ration fed to young chickens it will increase the consumption of other foods given.

Handle the cows in such a way that they will be gentle. The gentle cow almost invariably gives the most milk.

Feed which has been allowed to get wet will ferment or sour readily and cause intestinal disorders. Don't feed it to your stock.

A feed of roots, especially carrots, is greatly relished by the colt, if, when they are cut up, a little oatmeal is scattered over them.

Don't worry about the breed. Perhaps she is only one-eighth Jersey or Holstein but if the rest is good dairy cow she is all right.

The dairy cow needs exercise but she will get it working over the large amount of feed she will consume. She will not need running to get it.

A good many dairymen are feeding skim milk to their cows. The animals seem to relish it and as it is not a fattening food it does them no harm.

Remember that flies breed in filth and dust and carry more disease than rats. Clean up every breeding place and screen them out of the house and dairy.

Whether or not it pays to grind corn for fattening pigs depends upon the price of corn and the facilities and cost of grinding, which vary with the seasons and the conditions on the farms.

The Babcock test for ascertaining the percentage of butterfat in milk and cream is reliable but dishonest or incompetent hands can make it a delusion and a snare.

Milking Tubes Often Dangerous.

Many a valuable hard milking cow has been ruined, owing to the fact that the milker has been compelled to use a milking tube, and by the use of the milking tube the cow has become infected, oftentimes losing one or more quarters. It is not advisable to use a milking tube if one can possibly get along without it, says a writer in the Baltimore American.

The proper method of handling or overcoming hard milking in cows or heifers is by the use of a teat plug. The teats should be washed with a germ-killer solution and the teat plug dipped in the same solution, then dipped in a little healing ointment and passed into the point of the teat. The teat plug, being self-retaining, should be permitted to remain in the teats from one milking to another. This will positively overcome hard milking in cows and heifers.

This same treatment is exceedingly valuable in the treatment of sore teats where the sore is at the point of the teats and interferes with milking.

What is Castoria.

CASTORIA is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. It destroys Worms and allays Feverishness. It cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. It relieves Teething Troubles, cures Constipation and Flatulency. It assimilates the Food, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. The children's Panacea—The Mother's Friend.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. F. Gerald Blattner, of Buffalo, N. Y., says: "Your Castoria is good for children and I frequently prescribe it, always obtaining the desired results."

Dr. Gustave A. Eisengraeber, of St. Paul, Minn., says: "I have used your Castoria repeatedly in my practice with good results, and can recommend it as an excellent, mild and harmless remedy for children."

Dr. E. J. Dennis, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have used and prescribed your Castoria in my sanitarium and outside practice for a number of years and find it to be an excellent remedy for children."

Dr. S. A. Buchanan, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have used your Castoria in the case of my own baby and find it pleasant to take, and have obtained excellent results from its use."

Dr. J. E. Simpson, of Chicago, Ill., says: "I have used your Castoria in cases of colic in children and have found it the best medicine of its kind on the market."

Dr. R. E. Eskildson, of Omaha, Neb., says: "I find your Castoria to be a standard family remedy. It is the best thing for infants and children I have ever known and I recommend it."

Dr. L. R. Robinson, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria certainly has merit. Is not its age, its continued use by mothers through all these years, and the many attempts to imitate it, sufficient recommendation? What can a physician add? Leave it to the mothers."

Dr. Edwin F. Pardee, of New York City, says: "For several years I have recommended your Castoria and shall always continue to do so, as it has invariably produced beneficial results."

Dr. N. B. Sizer, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I object to what are called patent medicines, where maker alone knows what ingredients are put in them, but I know the formula of your Castoria and advise its use."

DEFIANCE STARCH never sticks to the iron.

IN THE TWELVE-INCH TURRET

BY RICHARD BARRY

FAMILIARITY, 'tis said, breeds contempt; but I have an extreme respect for a 12-inch gun on a battle-ship. The very last thing I care for in that connection is either familiarity or contempt. The men who work it, who some day will fight with it—let those men explain how innocent such a gun is, how facile its management, how bland its temper, how exquisite its adjustment. Not I. Listen to those men a while and you will believe that it is less dangerous to be locked inside the turret while a big gun is being fired than it is to cross Broadway at Twenty-third street. Perhaps it is, but I prefer Broadway.

And yet, the fascination! A great gun has for the imagination the potency of evil itself. Emblem of force, symbol of destruction, it stands serene, majestic, while round its muzzle gather all the forces of the race's struggles, and through its breech march hate, pain, grief, ambition, power and death.

"The torpedo," said the captain of a battle-ship to me one night at a dinner, "is more or less of an experiment, a toy. It would be practically impossible for one to sink a big ship. The only thing I am really afraid of is a 12-inch gun."

The next day I went into the after-turret when the ship was on the range and in full and sympathetic accord with the captain stood beside the breech of one of those guns while it dropped four shots into a target a mile away; stood there with my cap in my hand, ready to clap it over my face in case of accident, cursing the curiosity that led me to that lethal chamber. Then the wonder of it came over me—the silence of the gun-crew; the stealthy leap of the rifle barrel, like the spring of a grasshopper; the quiet, dull report which scarcely trembled that stately moving fortress; the sour-egg smell of the nitrocellulose stimulating the nerves; the sweet, sick subtlety of ether lulling the overwrought brain.

When they shut the steel door that caged us in I slipped into a funk and until the first shot was fired my nerve was gone. The sides of my courage account footed up:

Debit: (1) Imprisonment in an oval case the shape of a coffin, the sides formed of solid steel nine inches thick and the top of steel just as solid and five inches thick; (2) filling a quarter of that case the back third of a 12-inch rifle barrel, ready for action; (3) below, an open chute, with a steel car bringing the shells and powder from the magazines still farther below; (4) the stern, silent faces of the gun-crew, which exactly resemble those faces seen at places of execution; (5 to 100) memory—the knowledge which you cannot fight away that in just such a situation as this the turret-crew of the Georgia went to death, and that no one has ever found out how it happened; that in precisely the same way the Missouri burned to death 29 men, and that not one in that steel cage escaped.

Credit: (1) The face of the umpire. Stop-watch in hand, he stands behind the breech, looking down into the powder-magazines. You know he is there to prevent recklessness. Though these men are firing against time he will let them do nothing foolhardy; if he errs 'twill be on the side of caution. (2) The knowledge that thousands of times guns like this have been fired from turrets like this—and all came out alive. You do not enter railway trains timidly because a dozen people were killed on one a year before five thousand miles away. Yet, when you enter the turret of a 12-inch gun—

They lock you up. There is no escape. You stand there nervously by the trunnion and somehow it is not like a factory or a railway coach or a street car or any other modernly approved limb-mangling device. These things were built to kill and presently these fellows are going to touch an electric spark which will loose enough anxious and determined gas to drive an 850-pound shell 10 miles and put it completely through a steel plate as thick as the one that is supposed to protect you

Yet, there you are, the Thing before you, and you can reach out and pat it on the shiny, cold haunch. If it wobbles or a spring breaks or a trunnion has mistakenly got itself rusted or the rifle barrel refuses to accommodate the shell, you will be fit brother for a detected cockroach. If there is a flare-back you have the slightest possible chance of escape: hold your cap over your face, don't breathe, hurl yourself under the barrel and fall into the handling-room. You may break a few bones, but if the burning gas gets to no more than 30 per cent. of your skin you will live; that is how the single midshipman who escaped from the Georgia saved himself. Yet no one can tell how that gas gets in its work. Sometimes it burns away the flesh and never touches the clothing; again, it singes off all the hair and never touches the flesh; again, it burns the clothing off clean and leaves you naked, but safe.

So! They have locked you up in this steel cage. The others have some reason here. With them it is work, duty, contest. If killed they die nobly, get brass tablets in the wall with their names inscribed, pensions go to their families, the newspapers call them heroes. If you die they will cut on your obscure tomb:

"The Fool
Who Looked on Forbidden Things."

We are on the range. Some one calls, "Starting-buoy," and you know that in another minute this double-twisted, original imitation of billy-blue hell will commence. You reflect that a blast pressure of 12 pounds to the square inch will kill a man. You know that the pressure on the air near the muzzle of this gun whose breech you are beside, when it is fired, is several tons to the square inch. You remember that only a few years ago a green sailorman stood offside 16 feet, that some one called to him to lie down just as the gun was fired, that he was in the act of lying down when it was fired, but that the suction of the air going with the shell drew his head from his body and broke his neck. This does not add to the pleasure of your situation, for you can easily reach out there—if you dare!—and pat that cold haunch.

You look about and observe your companions in the lethal chamber. They are eleven: two trainers, two pointers, one hoistman, one tripper, two loaders, a rammer and a plugman. And the eleventh, the unnecessary one, the other outsider—he is the umpire; he wears the single stripe of the ensign, a commissioned officer, and he is just about as keen as you are to keep things straight, to omit flare-backs, side-step the bursting of powder-bags and lasso over-speed. You pin your faith there; let this umpire be the sky-pilot of the turret!

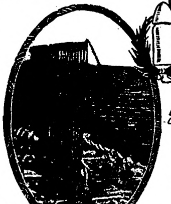
The tripper is a slight lad, a boy of perhaps 18 years. Neither has he ever seen a big gun fired and yet he is to stand there and pull the lever that thrusts the shell and its following powder-bags into the carrying-case before the breech. In an undershirt, a pair of trousers and a thin smile he waits the word. He was caught only a year ago on the streets of Minneapolis, whither he had come fresh from the farm.

Far up on the left of the barrel, encased in a leather head-dress, is the turret-trainer, his right eye locked to the telescope that projects from the hood above him. He might be a diver, with that curious jumble of intricate wires and the green speaking-tube trailing aft. He grasps a big wheel, as a chauffeur his steering-gear, and moves easily on its barbette the 130-ton turret. Below him, between his legs, his assistant sets his sights. They might be riding pickaback, these two, up there along the slope of that sleek steel haunch.

On the other side the pointer, with his assistant, also rides pickaback. Here is the eye for which this whole ship was built: here the nerve and quickness for which the 16,000 tons, the seven millions of dollars, the five years of making, have spread their august being. His accuracy may sink a warship; his weakness ruin a nation. To find him and his like half a million dollars has been spent in a single month. In three minutes now he can qualify and have $10 a month added to his pay for a year. For we have penetrated to the very viscera of war's nature. Here is the man behind the gun. He does the trick. His eye searches the telescopic sight, his left hand turns the wheel that raises and depresses the muzzle of his gun.

THERE IS SOMETHING UNSPEAKABLY SUBLIME IN THE FULL-GROWN CRY OF A GREAT GUN

EXPLOSION OF A TWELVE-INCH SHELL



TARGET FOR TWELVE-INCH GUN PRACTICE

The whistle! Time begins. The umpire snaps his stop-watch and grasps firmly in his hand the little red book which defines to the farthest nicety the rules that govern this expensive foolery. In the following three minutes this crew will try to put five shots through that flimsy canvas target a mile across the quiet water. And the mill-pond is worthy of its name—the bay of the Magdalene—a haven of refuge. The ship glides along like steel through flesh.

"Silence!" The gun-captain, one of the loaders, speaks!

What a word it is—"silence!" It precedes and closes every vital action in the navy. In it lies such potency of command, such suggestions of obedience, as is needed in the anteroom of death. Once a recruit saw fit to chaff his mate after that command "Silence!" had been given. The gun-captain stepped to him, without anger, and struck him a heavy blow across the face, with a gnarled, wet hand; the recruit carried the welt for a week; by no one was a word said.

Now, until you hear again that command "Silence!" you will hear only two words:

"Commence firing!"

Rumbling from below. With a grating crash the automatic shutter drops in the ammunition-hoist and the shell-car climbs its grinding, steady way to the top. Suddenly you realize that the machine is working of its own accord. You saw no movement on the part of anyone to set it going. Except for that umpire, who, like the man that the fool-killer will doubtless some time get, has really no business there, the turret contains but one officer, a midshipman, and he is with the other gun; all here are enlisted men. The officers are aloft spotting the shells as they strike, or below setting the ranges, with intricate instruments and delicate adjustments. About the gun itself the men and the machinery move automatically, drilled to a precision. Their last instructions were "to take it easy;" consequently they work like buttons in a shirt.

The plugman pulls open the breech; the hoistman locks the car; the loader completes the passage from car to open breech with a ring of pounded brass; the boy tripper jerks down his lever, and the huge shell, nearly half a ton in weight, drops to its all but final resting-place. The rammer holds down on his long release, as a cable gripman throws back his lever, and the smooth brass head forces the shell up till its soft copper rim "takes" on the rifling of the gun. (When a shell is not properly "placed," in this way—if its collar does not "take"—it will surely be a miss. And if the powder-bags are placed wrong end to there is grave danger of a hang-fire, and a hang-fire is worse than a miss-fire—almost as bad as a flareback—and a flareback, as every-one knows, is what, probably did up the Georgia's turret. One of these shells is about the size of a three-year-old boy, and the powder-bags look very much the same as a hundred-pound sack of flour, cylindrical in shape and studded with lumps where the sticks of nitro protrude.) The tripper pulls the lower lever from his car, the first powder-bag falls; another lever, and the second is in. The brass rammer forces them behind the shell. The plugman gives a huge wrench to the breech, and its mushroom head slides up on the powder-bags. The loader slips a primer in the touch-hole, then folds down a tiny piece of steel that forms the electrical connection.

All is ready. These are the hard moments. You clasp your cap tightly in your hand. You become rattled. Though you are locked in the coffin there might be a heavy breeze blowing, the way your trousers flap against your legs. The car has ground its way back; the shutters have closed; the crew it at attention. The place is as clean and neat and silent as at an inspection.

It is now up to the pointer. He grasps his unwieldy mechanism; he closes and wrestles with the vast and complicated steel. The ship moves on her stately and predetermined way, while the seconds fly, and every second counts against the prize-money this pointer may earn, against the trophy this ship may win. The barn-big bull's-eye dances, fantastic, across his magnified field of vision. He twists the wheel a hair and the muzzle of the gun responds by an inch; he reverses, and up, up she surges slowly, imperceptibly. The ship is waiting on the voice of his index finger, and he grows anxious; his whole being pours itself along the wheel to a resolution of that terrible problem. An hour, a minute, five seconds, a week—how much time he knows not—has passed, and still that flimsy canvas throws forth its sinister challenge to be hit. But the crossing black lines of his telescope must place bull's-eye before he presses the trigger. They must! THEY MUST!

He pulls—as easily as a child cracks a toy revolv—Look! the gun is discharged. Yes: it went off just now. I swear it did. Sure enough! The great breech sinks through the floor, the sleek, shiny haunch slips beneath your grasp, welches away there in the glazed light of the lethal chamber, drops till its crest is as low as its belly lay, then recovers, poised, slips to its first position, lies patiently, modestly, for the next charge, as graceful a spring as a tigress ever made on moonlit road, feline with stealthy swiftness, decisive as oiled piston strokes!

And your hand has been 12 inches from the launching of that thunderbolt! Oh, well, this is easy. Who need be afraid here? This is a place for a grand stand; here may gather all lovers of royal sport. Great sport indeed it is, for now we can watch the precision and swiftness of that silent crew working against time.

The plugman unlocks the breech and pulls it open. The loader leaps across the chasm, flips up the tiny guard that breaks the electric connection, and so extracts the used primer. Automatically the air-blast works, and you hear the swift escape, as of steam, as it cleans out the rifle, blowing away gas and stray powder grains. The egg smell of the nitro comes, and the sweetness of the ether.

Then the grind from the hoist, the shutter opens, and up springs again the car. Looking down, you see there the menace that lies in all our ships—the direct location of the gun-breech over the powder magazines. A burnt grain falling down there, with an inefficient shutter the only protection, is a constant danger. Over the building of the ammunition hoist directly above the magazines the navy has fought one of its sternest internal wars and the war is still far from finished; nor will it be over until a sealed tube has been substituted.

The umpire is only too well aware of this danger as he critically watches every move of the crew. The utter silence still prevails. The gun has been once fired and is being loaded for the second time; the first minute has not passed, and still not a word.

The second shot is fired. Again the easy, unbelievable recoil. Less than anywhere in the ship do you feel it here at the trunnion of the gun. 'Tis always so. In storm-centers is the calm; in the core of the acorn dwells the germ. As Disraeli said, the only joy in being prime minister lies in the certainty of your knowledge that nothing is happening on the inside. Here, in the lethal chamber, at the nerve center of destruction, prevail only silence and quiet.

A third and fourth time the smooth recoil. The crew works with the serene delight of a Geneva clock, vastly complicated, but of a single purpose and a single thought. You are locksd up with a single gun. Separated by a skin of steel is its mate. When that speaks the turret is jerked on the barbette and the unfired gun is pulled from its equilibrium. This is the backlash. After every shot the trainer, with a quick twist of his wheel, subtly absorbs the backlash.

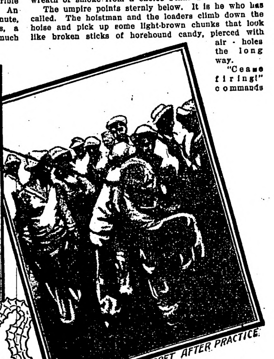
For the fifth time the shutter opens, the grind ascends, the tripper pauses to flip his lever, when—

Silence!" The tone is raised. It has anger, concealed but glowing, like the quick flush of a nervous woman's face. The snap of the "Silence!" cuts like a whip.

As though paralyzed, the action of the turret dies. The loader pauses in the act of inserting the brass connecting-tray, the hand of the tripper falls from its lever, the sight-setter slips from his head-dress, the hoistman crowds up in front of the umpire; the open breech of the gun exudes the thinnest cirrus froth, like the first wreath of smoke from a choice Pinar del Rio.

The umpire points sternly below. It is he who has called. The hoistman and the loaders climb down the hoise and pick up some light-brown chunks that look like broken sticks of horehound candy, pierced with air-holes the long way.

EFFECT OF A TWELVE-INCH SHELL UPON THE ARMOR-PLATE OF A RUSSIAN CRUISER



JUST OUT OF THE TURRET AFTER PRACTICE

"Cease firing!" commands the umpire. "You've broken a powder-bag."

Indignant, protesting, the three men quickly pick up the scattered grains, each as big as a man's middle finger. They look carefully all about, then rush back quickly to their stations, eager to continue. They look to the umpire with the expectancy of dogs asking for crumbs. Every second is eating into their record. This rotten powder-bag will cost them a penalty. They may not qualify; they may fall below the second rate. Horrors! The ship may even descend from trophy class.

The umpire is inexorable. "No!" says he. "That's all this run. Climb down there and go into the corners of that shutter; brush out every crack. I take no chance."

Grumbling, the men go about the prevention that the umpire thinks is worthy any ton of post-mortems and boards of inquiry. But the men, with the Anglo-Saxon light of contest in their eyes, remember only the ordnance officer's dictum—better 40 men killed than to lose the trophy.

"He wants to keep our score down," they mutter. "He's from the ——, and we're their only rivals." The gun captain goes out to protest to the turret officer. The well-trained crew resolves itself, with expert suddenness, into a mob of balked Americans clamoring for fair play. An umpire's job is no more popular on a battleship than it is on a baseball diamond.

At last they count the powder-grains—37. "That bag was half in," growls the loader. "I could have rammed 'er home an' no one'd ever known if that —— hadn't been here. Now we get 1.46 per minute, an' we might 'a' had 2.10. Rats!"

TAWNEY VS. DELEGATION

WINONA CONGRESSMAN'S FELLOW MEMBERS RESENT IMPLIED CHARGE

THAT THEY PROMISED TO AID BILL

No Double Dealing Was Practiced by Them on Tariff Bill, They Say—First District Member Will Combat Attempt to Discredit Him.

St. Paul.—Threatening a split in the Republican party, the trouble growing out of the proposed public endorsement of the Minnesota insurgent delegation, increased rather than lessened, following 24 hours spent by Congressman Tawney in St. Paul.

He gave it out flat that the proposed demonstration in favor of the insurgent congressmen, through its exclusion of himself, was a direct slap "for Tawney." By inference, he claimed it was an attack on the policy of the administration and Taft.

The Winona congressman refused to elaborate further on his telegram sent to President Warner, of the St. Paul Commercial club, in which Mr. Tawney indicated that some of the congressmen had pledged to vote for the tariff bill if their votes should be necessary.

"I can see in this proposed demonstration, through its exclusion of myself, nothing but a direct slap at me.

"Why should I be singled out? The demonstration is supposed to be to honor the men who fought for lower schedules. If it is for the purpose of honoring the men who assisted in securing tariff revision downward, then I should be invited to sit in.

"I have no quarrel with other members of the Minnesota degelation. They did what they thought was right, just as I did, but in view of the active part I took in securing lower schedules, I can see no fairness in excluding me.

"The bill is now Republican doctrine, and has been signed by a Republican president. It may not be the best bill but it is the best we could get at the time. The proposed action cannot be taken otherwise than a reflection on the Republican administration, and will have a tendency to disrupt the Republican party.

At the capitol, conferences have been held and notice is said to have been served on the "federal machine," that is will have to watch out. Lists of the federal office holders who took part in the committee meeting for the purpose of arranging the demonstration in honor of the insurgents, have been prepared and are being sent out.

Representative Davis, of the Third district came out with an enthusiastic shout of approval. Mr. Davis intimated that he and Congressman Lindbergh were the only original insurgents, and he felt confident that Mr. Tawney had no reference to him, in his Warner telegram.

"Lindbergh and myself voted against Cannon and the old rules and against the bill. The other members," continued Mr. Davis, with a gentle little fling at his brother congressmen, "voted with Cannon all the time and it was not until a few hours before the final vote that it was known how they would finally vote."

Congressman Volstead says he appreciates the object of the meeting, but is afraid it will stir up hard feelings. Congressman Steenerson of Crookston is also up in the air, and doesn't know just what to think about it.

Speaking for Senator Knute Nelson of Alexandria who refused to come to the telephone, Private Secretary Hicks ventured the remark that it would be like pulling stumps to get anything out of Senator Nelson. "The senator is seldom quoted," was the laconic finale.

Congressman Clarence B. Miller of Duluth talked. "Ridiculous," he said. "I can't speak for the rest, but as for myself—why it's ridiculous! I tell you. I never had any such understanding, in fact never talked with the president on the matter at all. I voted against the bill because I didn't think it was what the people wanted."

Congressman Hammond, the lone Democrat on the delegation, wires that he cannot be present.

"I must say that I am surprised that Mr. Tawney should make such an intimation," said Congressman Frank Nye regarding the telegram sent to Mr. Warner. "Personally, I had not seen the president for two months. I made no promises and never thought of making any. I voted against the bill upon its merits and not for the sake of politics. I did what I believed was right.

"If any of the members voted with any thought of changing their vote in case of its being necessary, I didn't know of it, and I don't believe there were any such members."

FINNISH MURDER AT FRAZEE.

Man Murdered Because He Wanted to Drive Home Instead of Stopping to Eat.

Frazee.—Jacob Jampsa stabbed John Jhelt at Runeberg, this county, shoulder, at Runeberg, this county, and the victim died in about half an hour after from loss of blood. Jampsa is a resident of the town of Wolf Lake and Jhelt lived at Menagha but formerly lived at Wolf Lake township. Jampsa and the murdered man are Finns.

Jampsa was on his way home from Menagha where he had been after a load of goods for Charley Isaacson, who runs a store in Wolf Lake, and was accompanied by Isaacson and Jehlt. They stopped at John Bassa's place and were invited to have something to eat.

Jampa was unwilling to do so, as he was anxious to get home and started up his team. Jhelt jumped into the wagon and taking the lines away from Jampsa, drove the team off the road into the brhush. This so enraged Jampsa that he is said to have drawn his knife and stabbed Jhelt in the shoulder.

Jhelt jumped from the wagon and ran to the house and falling in the dooryard said that Jampsa had killed him. No one saw the stabbing. The authorities at the county seat were notified by telephone and Deputy Sheriff Hurley and Coroner Frasier immediately started for the scene.

When they arrived they found Jampsa tied with ropes. He was released and taken to Frazee where he was arraigned before Justice C. A. Devine. He pleaded not guilty and was bound over to the district court which convenes in October.

IRON RANGE HAS TALE OF WOE.

Duluth Line Fails to Have Rates Lowered by Commission.

Duluth.—The State railroad and warehouse commission held three hearings here. The city of Duluth, against the Northern Pacific and other roads seeks to have the Sixth avenue viaduct repaired. The case was continued six weeks as the roads are willing to make the repairs.

The Duluth & Iron Range road seeks to have the rate on logs and pulpwood increased, declaring they are lower than on other Northwestern roads. The shippers point to the large earnings of the Iron Range and protest. This case is taken under advisement.

The Iron Range road seeks to have nine stations on its line declared nontariff stations. The commission found that the proposed operation would interfere with the 2-cent-a-mile law. The road now asks to have the stations abolished.

RIVER CREWS BUILDING DAMS.

Captain Thompson Reports Progress on Upper Mississippi Improvements.

Winona.—Captain W. A. Thompson, who is in charge of river improvements work in the district immediately below Winona, has a crew of men at work near Homer putting in their new dams additional to those constructed last year. Another crew is extending old dams and building new ones in the vicinity of La Moille.

Much work is being done at Fountain City bay. The dredge recently finished and sent down the river to Moline was constructed at a cost of $40,000. Twenty barges had been finished at Fountain City. About thirty-five will be constructed in all. The improvement crews are to be kept at work until the first of November.

BANDITS LOOT A BANK.

Safe at Karlstad, Minn., Blown and Robbed of $1,500 in Cash.

Hallock.—The First State Bank of Karlstad, a little town of that name in Kittson county, was broken into by bandits.

The safe was blown open and robbed of $1,500 in cash.

The noise of the explosion aroused the town and the officers at the county seat were notified of the raid. The cracksmen were by this time in full flight.

The sheriff has sent word to all the towns in the vicinity and the border will be watched closely in the expectation that the robbers will try to get out of the country.

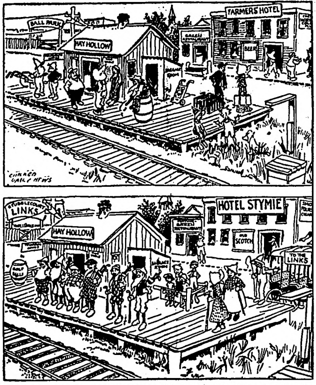
There were three or four men in the party.

BOILED WATER FOR WINONA.

Board of Health Says Supply Is Unfit to Drink.

Winona.—According to reports received from the state board of health, Winona's water supply is not such as to commend it for general public use, and in consequence the board of municipal works, which has charge of the water department, has issued a notice advising citizens not to make use of the water for drinking without boiling.

BEFORE AND AFTER TAKING.



WHAT THE COMING TRIP OF PRESIDENT TAFT MAY DO FOR THE GREAT WEST.

40 FLEA PEORIA BOAT FIRE

PASSENGERS AND CREW ESCAPE FROM BLAZING STEAMER.

Women and Children in Panic—Vessel Totally Destroyed—Two Are Injured.

Peoria, Ill.—Although not fully recovered from their fright all of the 25 passengers, who with the crew of 15, had a close call for their lives when the steamer Fred Swain burned to the water's edge Friday afternoon off Averyville, have left for their homes. Of the two persons injured only one was in a serious condition and it is regarded as marvelous that none met death.

The injured are: Joseph Casrider, Paducah, Ky., engineer, seriously burned about the face and body, and Charles Reicheberger, Peoria, right arm broken. The loss is estimated at $35,000, $30,000 of which is on the vessel. Several of the passengers lost all their personal belongings.

The escapes from the burning vessel were almost miraculous. The majority of the passengers were women and children and once the fire was discovered issuing from a stateroom on the second deck panic reigned. To add to the horror, the ropes supporting the immense gang plank which had been lowered to enable those aboard to board the score of row boats that had hurriedly been put out from shore, burned, letting about fifteen persons, including several women and children, into the water. Tom Powers, saloonkeeper of this city, and E. A. Caron of Worcester, Mass., both of whom were on the plank in an effort to quiet the panic-stricken people, each saved the lives of two children, half carrying and half swimming with the little tots on their back and shoulders to old tree stumps, to await the arrival of rescuers.

The fire was discovered by Mrs. Eugene Furbish, cabin girl, on opening the door of a stateroom. She at once spread the alarm but all efforts to subdue the flames proved fruitless, the fire spreading with alarming rapidity. Capt. Swain, on realizing that all hopes for the vessel were gone ordered Pilot Martin Huston to beach the boat and instructed his crew to deal out life preservers.

TWO KILLED IN AUTO RACE

Machine Dashes Through Fence as It Travels at High Speed in Indianapolis Contest.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Two lives were lost and two records broken during the inauguration of the Indianapolis Motor speedway. William A. Bourque of Springfield, Mass., driver of the Knox car in the 250-mile race, and Harry Holcomb of Grandville, Mass., his mechanician, were killed when their machine dashed through a fence.

Barney Oldfield, driving a high-powered Benz, covered a mile in 0:43 1-10, breaking De Palma's mark of 0:51, and Louis Chevrolet in a Buick negotiated ten miles in the marvellous time of 8:55 4-10, cutting Oldfield's time of 9:12—both of these are new American track marks.

Robert Burman won the 250-mile race, the contest that cost Bourque and Holcomb their lives.

LOEB TO SUE UNION HEAD

Editor of Publication in Which "Audit Story" Appeared, Will Explain Stillings Matter.

Washington.—William Loeb, Jr., collector of the port of New York and former secretary to the president of the United States, has threatened to sue Samuel De Nedrey, editor of a local trade's union paper. In a letter to De Nedrey Collector Loeb vigorously protests against an article recently published in the paper stating that Mr. Loeb contemplates appointing Charles A. Stillings, former public printer, to a position of trust in the New York customs service, and which concluded with the question: "Who was at the head of the audit system?"

It is understood Mr. Loeb took offense at what he believes to be a veiled insinuation that he was interested in the audit system which was inaugurated at the government printing office by Mr. Stillings, and which, ultimately, was responsible primarily for the resignation of Mr. Stillings as public printer.

Mr. De Nedrey says he was absent from the city when the article appeared in his paper, and does not know how it got into print. In the next issue of his paper he says there will be an explanation, which, in his opinion, will satisfy Mr. Loeb. "If it does not," he added, "I shall govern myself according to the circumstances."

At the time of Mr. Stillings' dismissal as public printer Mr. De Nedrey took an active part editorially in discussing conditions at the big printery. He knows of no basis, he says, for an allegation that Mr. Loeb was connected with the audit system, and sees no reason to criticise him for his attitude toward organized labor.

TO FREE RICH WOMAN THIEF

Deneen and Pardon Board Asked to Liberate Mrs. Romadka—Was a Millionaire's Wife.

Chicago.—After two years' imprisonment in the penitentairy at Joliet, Mrs. Evelyn C. Romadka, perpetrator of a string of daring burglaries and former wife of Charles L. Romadka, a multi-millionaire manufacturer of Milwaukee, probably will be released next month.

Another chapter was added to the story of the weird life of Mrs. Romadka, which is even more fantastic than that of Hornung's fiction character "Raffles," when it became known that friends of her girlhood days, of Fond du Lac and Oshkosh, Wis., had petitioned Gov. Deneen and the Illinois board of pardons asking for the liberation of the former school-teacher and millionaire's wife.

Undaunted by the wealthy Romadka family's refusal to assist in gaining the release of the woman, whose prison confinement has undermined her health, her aged father, P. J. Caine, who owns a large rubber plantation in Mexico, has declared he will spend his entire fortune in his daughter's behalf.

'SUTTON SLEW SELF'

"EITHER COMMITTED SUICIDE OR ACCIDENTALLY TOOK OWN LIFE" IS VERDICT.

HIS RIVALS ARE EXONERATED

Inquiry Court Decides That Lieutenant Was to Blame for Own Death—Mother Will Ask Congress to Start New Probe.

Washington.—That Lieut. James Sutton of the United States marine corps killed himself accidentally or with suicidal intent is the finding of the court of inquiry which has been approved by Acting Secretary Winthrop of the navy and so far as the department is concerned the case is closed.

Counsel for the Suttons intimated, however, after the court's decision had become definitely known, that they were far from satisfied with the verdict, and that they probably would take the issues involved to congress with a view of having a full hearing of the case by a committee of that body.

In part the court says:

"Lieut. Sutton is directly and solely responsible for his own death, which was self-inflicted, either intentionally or in an effort to shoot one of the persons restraining him, and his death was not caused by any other injury whatever."

The court also finds: That Lieut. Utley failed in his duty as senior officer present, under article 266, United States navy regulations, 1909, in permitting Lieut. Sutton to run away and arm himself instead of calling on those present for assistance and following Lieut. Sutton, preventing his arming himself, by force if necessary, and turning him over to the custody of the officer of the day.

That Lieut. Bevan, officer of the guard, failed in his duty as officer of the guard in not disarming Lieut. Sutton by force, while in front of his (Sutton's) tent.

That Lieut. Willing, the officer of the day, failed in his duty as officer of the day in not immediately assisting by force in helping to disarm Lieut. Sutton when he arrived on the scene before the fatal shot was fired.

That the charges of wilful murder and conspiracy to conceal it, made by the complainant, Mrs. Sutton, mother of Lieut. Sutton, are purely imaginary and unsupported by even a shadow of evidence, truth or reason.

The court recommends, however, that in view of the youth and decided inexperience of Lieuts. Utley, Willing and Bevan at the time, and of the altogether unusual conditions of excitement, threats and danger during the aforementioned fray, that no further proceedings be taken.

The report is signed by J. Hood, commander United States navy, president of the board, and Henry Leonard, major, United States marine corps,

BILLION FOR ROCKEFELLER

Amount Represents His Fortune at End of Ten Years—Powerless to Prevent It.

New York.—Think how you would feel if you knew you would be the world's first billionaire at the end of the next ten years; that you are powerless to prevent the growth of your own wealth even though you have given away $130,000,000. This is the fate that awaits John D. Rockefeller at the end of the next ten years.

Standard Oil stock sold at 712 Wednesday, the highest price it has reached since the panic of 1907. The stock has risen 322 points from the low ebb of 390, at which it sold on November 4, 1907. Like a snowball rolling down hill, Rockefeller's wealth is steadily growing and growing and he is as powerless to stop it even if he had the wishes as he would be to check the revolution of the planets.

The enormous, inconceivable accumulation of wealth of the mild-mannered, inscrutable sphinx of millions has gone steadily on despite the fact that a short time ago an estimate of his public charities placed them at the stupendous total of $130,000,000.

The latest approximately accurate estimates available place his fortune in 1905 at least $550,000,000. In 1900 it was $400,000,000. This is an increase for the five years of $150,000,000. At this ratio the Rockefeller fortune is to-day about $700,000,000. In 1914 still at the same ratio of increase, it will be about $850,000,000, and in 1919, when the oil king reaches his eightieth year, it will have reached the stupendous, brain-giddying total of $1,000,000,000—an inconceivable sum.

MILLION BOGUS MONEY SEIZED

BROTHERS HELD FOR A GIGANTIC COUNTERFEITING PLOT.

Mexican Pesos Are Reproduced—Kentucky Authorities and Secret Service Secure Confession.

Louisville, Ky. — Secret service men are investigating a report that two women aided John C. and Marion Roberts, brothers and sons of a former Louisville judge, who are held in jail as perpetrators of what is called the most daring counterfeiting plot ever attempted. Dreams of wealth centered in a brass-bound trunk containing $1,000,000 in counterfeit Mexican pesos were shattered for the brothers when Deputy United States Marshal William Blaydes arrested John Roberts in Shelby county with the money in his possession.

Since the hour of the first arrest there has been unraveled in the custom house of Louisville and in Central police station a remarkable tale of attempted financial buccaneerings that rivals some of the boldest exploits in the making of spurious currency.

John Roberts, sitting in the office of the secret service bureau, coolly said that he would plead guilty at the October term of the federal court and seemed resigned about spending a majority of his years in the prison at Atlanta, Ga. He had only wanted to get rich, he said.

It was through Marion Roberts that the counterfeiters were apprehended and their plan to defraud Mexicans of $1,000,000 exposed. Marion Roberts some days ago offered a Louisville broker high commission to dispose of some Mexican money for him. The broker notified Chief of Police J. H. Haager, who at once enlisted secret service men and the trap to catch Marion Roberts was successfully sprung. Since Marion Roberts' arrest the police learned from him the information which led to the descent upon his brother at Simpsonville.

When Blaydes confronted John Roberts in the hamlet of Shelby county the chief counterfeiter admitted that he was behind the plan to dispose of the imitation 100-pesos notes through the broker. He showed Blaydes the trunk, which with Roberts was brought to Louisville. Roberts said that had a perforating machine and a device to number the bills reached him when he had expected them he would have been in Mexico a week ago.

Will Koenig, a printer, has also been arrested in connection with the case. Roberts is in jail under a $15,000 federal bond.

GREEK FLAG IS SHOT DOWN

Marines from Russian, French and British Ships Remove Emblem Which Caused War Scare.

Canea, Island of Crete. — A well-directed shot fired by one of the parties of bluejackets landed from the international squadron anchored in Canea harbor brought down the flagstaff of the Canea fort and with it the Greek flag that has threatened to bring about war between Turkey and Greece.

A combined landing party composed of detachments from the ships of the four protecting powers was sent ashore before sunrise and the task of removing the Hellenic emblem was carried out in a few minutes without any attempt at interference on the part of the islanders. Most of the bluejackets then returned to their ships, but small detachments representing each of the four powers were left behind in occupation of the bastion of the fortress to prevent any attempt on the part of the Cretans to raise another flag.

Cretan gendarmes have been posted throughout Canea to maintain order.

It is estimated that the teriff session of congress cost the nation $4,000,000. It will also cost a lot of standpatters their jobs, if it don't put a democratic majority in the lower house of congress after the next election, as the people are beginning to get onto their job.

Congressmen Jim Tawney is haveing a hard time explaining his reasons for voteing against the other eight members of congress on the tarrif bill. He may as well own up that he was representing Rhode Island and trusting in Providence for his re election.

The Red Lake county commissioners have dropped down to a $15,500 court house, and if is likely they will be allowed to proceed and build without further opposition, as we must have a court house, and there is no prospect of any county seat removel in this generation. Should the county be divided the new county would get their share of cost of it and what was left or Red Lake county could keep the court house. Of course if the county should be divided it can be figured that the cost would be about $1,000 to the township, or about $7.00 per farmer, so let ere tip.

There is quite a strong sentiment in favor of putting the farmers steamboat into the grain hawling business. There is now plenty of water in the river to run the big boat and barge, and they are just what we need to get our big wheat crop to market. The prospects now are that the roads will be so bad that it will be imposssiable to draw any grain to market with teams, and the small boats that are now running could not take enough wheat down the river to amount to much and they want 12 cents a bushel for hawling, while the big boat could haul for 5 cents. There is no question but what the boat will make good money, if we all patronize it.

A Happy Compromise.

"What a beautiful little baby he is!" exclaimed the neighbor who had called. "He isn't six months old yet, either," said the proud young mother, "and he weighs over twenty pounds."

"What have you named him?"

"Well," hesitated the mother, "Henry and I differed a little about that. He wanted to give him one name, and I wanted to give him another, but we finally compromised and agreed to call him John Wesley."

"I see. You named him after the great founder of Meth"—

"No, indeed," quickly interrupted the mother. "That name, as I said, is a compromise."

"But how?"

"The 'John' is for John Calvin, and the 'Wesley' is for John Wesley."

MANY SPECIAL FLAGS.

Uncle Sam Has Some Which Are Very Seldom Seen.

COLORS OF THE PRESIDENT.

Not Until 1882 Did the Chief Executive of the Nation Have a Personal Banner, but Now He Has Three, the Naval, Army and Peace Flags.

As the United States grew and the government expanded many new departments were added, and with them many special flags have come into existence. Least often seen and yet most interesting of these twenty-five or thirty special flags is that of the president of the United States. He has a wealth of them—in fact, no less than three—but they are seldom seen in public. There are two each of these flags, one of bunting and one of silk. They are exactly alike, with this exception, but the one of silk is called the "president's colors."

The president of the United States had no personal flag until 1882. If he went aboard a ship his presence was denoted by the national flag hoisted at the main truck, and his presence in a garrison or post was denoted by the raising of the big garrison flag. These were not entirely distinctive as denoting the presence of the president, for these flags were hoisted on gala occasions when the president was not around. The lack of a distinguishing flag for him was felt by the navy also, and the secretary of the navy by general orders, Aug. 10, 1882, established a flag for the president of the United States. The general orders described the flag as of blue bunting with the coat of arms of the United States in the center. The flag was to be hoisted at the main of the vessel when the president was aboard and be carried at the bow of the launch on which he came aboard.

In the army there was no distinguishing flag for the president of the United States until just before the outbreak of the Spanish-American war. Colonel Theodore Bingham, who was then superintendent of public buildings and grounds, called the attention of President McKinley to this lack of a distinguishing flag for him and stated that he thought the commander in chief of the United States army and navy ought to have a distinguishing flag. President McKinley did not like the suggestion, but the secretary of war did, and a flag was made. It was designed by Frederick D. Owen and is a beautiful thing to look at. The official description of the flag is as follows:

"The president's flag is of scarlet bunting, thirteen feet fly and eight feet hoist. In each corner is a five pointed star of five inch radius to the tips. In the center of the scarlet field is a large fifth star, also of five points, two feet nine inches in radius to the tips. Inside of this star is a parallel star, separated from it by a band of white three inches wide. The inner star forms the blue field upon which is the coat of arms of the United States. On the scarlet field around the large star are forty-six small white stars, one for each state, equally scattered in the reentering angles and all included within the circumference of an imaginary circle three feet and a quarter in radius. In the upper point over the angle is a constellation of thirteen stars, representing the original thirteen states of the American confederation."

Mr. Owen explained that in the olive leaves, its berries and the arrows is symbolized the original thirteen. It is also not a little singular that the official seal should bear in its motto exactly thirteen letters and that the general order which created the flag was also numbered thirteen. The magnificent silken colors of the president's flag are of scarlet, and the design is embroidered upon this so exquisitely that it is impossible to tell right from wrong side when looking at the flag. The colors on the flag are what is called "proper"—that is, natural—the eagle being brown and the olive branches green, with red berries. This flag is to be displayed only in time of war.

Yet another flag has the president. In 1902 the "peace" flag was adopted. This third flag differs in a good many respects from the other two. In the first place, the great seal of the United States is correctly depicted. On the other flags the design of the seal is seven red stripes and six white ones, which is correct, as the flag design was adopted by the Third congress, but when the great seal was adopted the designer, not knowing much about the flag, as the forefathers intended, and six red stripes. And that is the seal today. There was a long discussion whether the seal should not be changed to agree with the stripes on the flag, as the forefathers intended; but it was decided that as it had been adopted it should remain. This "peace" flag thus has the seal correctly depicted. The eagle is snow white, its feathers being outlined in deep black. There is a different arrangement of the stars and of the sunburst also. The sunburst is exactly circular in form, with the rays radiating from the group of stars. The colors are of silk with exactly the same design.—Washington Star.

The Modern Way.

One friend who has spent a long and useful life and looks good for another half century expects his reward in heaven and meantime is a philosopher. He can talk on any subject under the sun, from "the flower of poesy" to "the precession of the equinoxes." He apparently knows the "Iliad" and "Odyssey" by heart, so I knew that when he handed me a bit of verse it must be good.

"Here is a hymn on the solar system or some other lofty theme," thought I, placing the sheet in my letter case. When I arrived home I read:

The lizard climbed a wall. He climbed it once,
He climbed it twice—then crawled away.

The bee sipped a flower. He sipped it once,
He sipped it twice—then flew away.

The man kissed a maid. He kissed her once,
He kissed her twice—then walked away.

The wall wasn't sunny; the flower had no honey;
The maid had no money. Funny!

The problem now is whether the contribution is a joke or a gem.—National Magazine.

Now that the threshers have met to decide how much they were going to charge for threshing; how would it do for the farmers to meet and decide how much they was going to pay?

"A flea has eyes but can notsee," says a California university professor. We will bet that Prof. that an eleven towns flea can see him quick enough to be somewhere else every time he tries to nail him.

If anyone has any doubt that this is a great vegetable producing country they should visit the garden of P.C. Wold in this township, who has one of finest gardens that could be grown in any country.

The Monday night and Wednesdays heavy rain storms put the fine finishing fouches on our long spell of bad weather, and there is no use dening the fact that a large amount of grain will go to waste as it is impossiable to get onto the land to harvest it.

The Brunkeberg store keepers have been shipping goods up the river by boat to Peter Wolds landing, then hawling them across the country toward Thiof River Falls to their store "Yea the roads been pretty bad up here but when you come near Tief River Falls them get more worse."

A large number of the tax payers of the county are becoming disgusted with the continuous fight between Red Lake Falls and Thief River Falls, in which enough of the taxpayers money has been spent to build a court house. It all begins to have the appearance of a put up deal between a few individuals in the two towns to bleed the taxpayer.

J. A. Duffy, of Red Lake Falls was looking after his realestate interests in this locality on Friday and Saturday last. He has more realestate loans in this end of the county than any other loan agent that has done business in this part of the county, and we are of the opinion that he has more realestate and chattel loans in the eleven townships than all the banks in Thief River Falls combined. He has been a steady advertiser in both papers published up here, thus going after the business and geting it. Mr. Duffy has a host of friends in this part of the county, that he has extended favors to in the past, and as one farmer tells the other of course he does a big baking and loan business in this part of the country.

An Obliging President.

During a short lived revolution, says Harper's Weekly, there came to be the head of the government in a little Central American republic a man who was above all things courteous and who was, moreover, very anxious to gain the good will of the foreign consuls. One of the latter, having heard that a certain countryman of his had died, addressed a note to the head of the new government, in which he stated that his own government would be grateful for a certificate of death of the individual in question. A few days later the consul received this communication:

Esteemed Senor—I blush to say that I cannot at present comply with your excellency's request for a death certificate of the man named. I sent my soldiers, but he got away, to my shame. I shall use every effort to catch him, however, and hope to send your excellency the desired certificate at an early date.

Needless to say, the consul lost no time in communicating to the obliging president the information that the certificate was undesired, in view of the fact that the individual was able to "get away."

A West Indian Wife Catcher.

As is customary with Indians the world over, the Caribs are expert basket weavers, and many strong and handsome baskets are to be bought in Roseau at reasonable prices if one finds the right shops, writes Harriet Quimby in Leslie's Weekly. A peculiar instrument, made of basket straw and woven closely together so as to form a hollow tube ending in a thong of twisted ends and commonly dubbed a wife catcher, is also made and sold by the Caribs. By slipping the hollow end over a man's finger above the joint and pulling on the twisted end the catcher will tighten around the finger and the captive will be unable to release his hand. It is claimed that the Indians formerly employed this device as a handcuff for prisoners, using several for each hand and leading the captives by the fingers. Few tourists are permitted to leave Roseau without a wife catcher, for which sixpence is willingly exchanged.

Babies' Bank Accounts.

In Schoenberg, a suburb of Berlin, every baby is born with a banking account. No Schoenberg baby can help this even if it wants to. The municipal regulations provide that whenever the birth of a child is recorded the officials of the municipal savings bank shall issue a bank book in the said baby's name. The city itself then deposits 1 mark (about 25 cents) and immediately allows interest. With this nest egg the authorities believe that the parents of the child will be encouraged in thrift and that the baby itself will have a fair start on the road to wealth. No withdrawals are allowed in less than two years, and the ordinance applies to all children, whether they are members of poor families or descended from millionaires.

Babies are popular in Schoenberg.

The Lost Donkey.

In Turkey they tell stories about Nasr-ed-Din and his donkey. Once upon a time when the donkey was lost Nasr-ed-Din went about seeking it, at the same time giving thanks as he went.

"Why do you give thanks?" asked his friend. "I see no cause for thankfulness."

"Cause enough!" was the prompt reply. "Why, man alive, if I had been along with that donkey I'd have been lost too!"—New York Tribune.

Use For the Anchor.

"Captain," remarked the nuisance on shipboard who always asks foolish questions, "what is the object in throwing the anchor overboard?"

"Young man," replied the old salt, "do you understand the theory of seismic disturbances? Well, we throw the anchor overboard to keep the ocean from slipping away in the fog."

Oh!

"How did you act when he proposed?"

"I sank gracefully on one knee."

"How ridiculous! What in the world did you sink on your knee for?"

"On his knee, not mine."—Houston Post.

Pilkerton Won the Race.

At one of the regattas of the National Association of American Oarsmen during the early nineties James Pilkerton, for many years the champion sculler of America, was matched to row double against another team. He and his mate were the champions, and the general belief was that they would win without effort. But the night before the regatta public opinion suddenly and mysteriously changed. Mr. Pilkerton knew that this was not caused by any new development of strength in his opponent or any loss of skill on his own part. After making some quiet inquiries he discovered that there was talk of his rowing mate having been bought up by the other side and of an arrangement to throw the race.

He didn't say anything about his suspicions, but when the two men were seated in the shell and were well out into the deep water he leaned over to his mate and said:

"Look here, you blooming cutthroat! You've got to swim, drown or win this race! You know me!" He won.

Would Bequeath Her Ears.

Harriet Martineau displayed originality in the provisions she made at one time, for the disposal of her remains. James Payn relates that, having consulted Toynbee, the distinguished aurist, with regard to her deafness, "she was so pleased with the interest he took in her case that she resolved to leave him by testamentary bequest her ears. She announced this intention in the presence of her medical man, Mr. Shepherd, who to my infinite amazement observed: 'But, my dear madam, you can't do that. It will make your other legacy worthless.' The fact was, in the interest of science, Miss Martineau had already left her head to the Phrenological society. I asked the doctor how he came to know that. 'Oh,' he said, 'she told me so herself. She has left £10 in her codicil to me for cutting it off.'" The doctor, however, died before his patient, and the Phrenological society never received the legacy of her head.—London Chronicle.

A Cheerful Letter.

The following was sent by a countryman to his son in college not many years ago:

My Dear Son—I write to send you two pair of old breeches, that you may have a new coat made of them; also some new socks, which your mother knit by cutting down some of mine. Your mother sends you $10 without my knowledge, and for fear you will not spend it wisely I have kept back half and only send five. Your mother and I are well, except your sister Annie has got the measles, which we think would spread among other girls if Tom had not had them before, and he is the only one left. I hope you are well and will do honor to my teachings. If you do not you are an ass, and your mother and myself are your affectionate parents.

WORTH MOUNTAINS OF GOLD

During Change of Life, says Mrs. Chas. Barclay

Graniteville, Vt. — "I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter." — MRS. CHAS. BARCLAY, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures of female ills as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than 30 years it has been curing female complaints such as inflammation, ulceration, local weaknesses, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life. It costs but little to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and, as Mrs. Barclay says, it is "worth mountains of gold" to suffering women.

A Contest of Wits.

An eminent lawyer was once cross-examining a very clever woman, mother of the plaintiff in a breach-of-promise action, and was completely worsted in the encounter of wits. At the close, however, he turned to the jury and exclaimed:

"You saw, gentlemen, that even I was but a child in her hands. What may my client have been?"

By this adroit stroke of advocacy he turned his failure into a success.

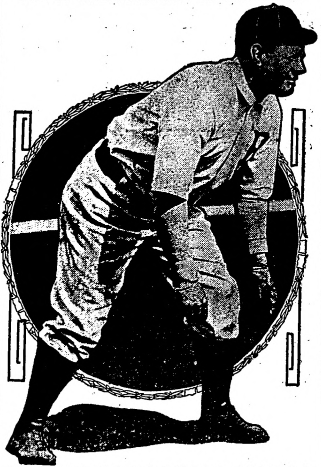
ONE OF THE VETERANS OF THE GAME



"Ginger" (Clarence H.) Beaumont, outfielder of the Boston National league team, has played the game for several years. In his prime Beaumont was considered one of the stars of the game; advancing age has slowed him up somewhat, but he is still able to hold his own with the younger players both in the field and at the bat.

SPIT BALL DIFFERS FROM ALL THE OTHER CURVES

Elusive Saliva Twirl Regarded as Difficult to Control, as It Makes Sudden Break.

The spit ball is absolutely different from any other form of curve ball ever thrown. It is the result of an entirely different principle.

All boys who have played ball know that the ordinary curve is thrown by grasping the ball tightly, and then spinning it off the end of the fingers—the same principle as putting "English" on a billiard ball. The ordinary curve ball, therefore, always gets the twist as it leaves the tips of the fingers, after having been released by the thumb.

The spit ball is just the reverse of this. A spot on the ball about the size of a silver dollar is moistened with saliva. This spot is made so lubricant that the fingers, when placed upon it, slip off without the least friction. The tips of the first two fingers are placed upon the moist spot, and the thumb on the opposite side of the ball, and beneath. The ball is thrown with all the strength the arm can give it. The fingers, instead of gripping, slip off, and the ball takes a peculiar wabbling movement from the thumb, which it leaves last.

The spit ball is naturally very hard to control, as it is difficult to regulate its direction with the point of the thumb. When the ball comes up to the plate it makes a sudden "break" and will drop either to one side or the other. The pitcher himself can not always tell which way it is going to "break."

For a while the pitchers had great difficulty in getting up speed on the spit ball, but now they can throw it almost as swiftly as the ordinary curve.

CATCHER FOR CINCINNATI.

Frank Roth, one of the catchers on the staff of Clark Griffith who has shown to good advantage in the games he has played in thus far this season.

"Peaches" Graham.

It's "Peaches" Graham. While with the Minneapolis team in the American association he played about every position in the in and outfield and was rated as a pretty good pitcher.

FEW BASEBALL PLAYERS QUIT GAME VOLUNTARILY

When They Do Sever Connection with Popular Sport in Their Prime There Is Always a Reason.

The lure of the diamond is so strong that few, very few, professional baseball players have retired from the game as Fielder Jones did, in the heyday of his career. Jones, who was the captain and manager of the Chicago Americans and onece led them to victory in a world's series after winning the pennant in his own league, made a complete renunciation of the game.

With Jones it was purely a matter of business. He had interests in Oregon which demanded his personal attention. Much as he loved the national game and strong as was the hold on him, he was firm in his intention to say good-by to the diamond.

John Ward was another of the few who gave up baseball when he was on the top wave. He was manager and captain of the New Yorks when they won the Temple cup in 1895 and could have served several years more of usefulness both as manager and a player. He was playing well at second base when he retired and was as skillful as ever with the bat, but he had made up his mind that it was time to get to his law practice, and nothing could induce him to stay in the game.

Big Bill Lange, who, when he was with the Chicago Nationals a few seasons ago, was a fine batter, a fine fielder and a fine base runner. Lange was head and shoulders above the general run of ball players. He was so good a player that it was a pity that professional baseball had to lose him. He married a California girl, went into business, and has not played ball since. He, too, was in his prime as a player when he stepped down and out.

Danny Richardson, the former Giant; Dave Fultz of the New York Americans; Billy Lauder, last with the New York Nationals, and Jimmy Callahan of the Chicago White Sox are four more players who gave up the game when they were at the top of their ability.

Mike Griffin was as good as ever when he terminated his connection with professional baseball. The Brooklyn sold him to the St. Louis club without his consent. He said he'd quit rather than go to St. Louis under the conditions, and he kept his word.

Work of Team Manager.

Very few fans realize the trouble and work to which managers are subjected, and in many instances these team leaders are blamed unjustly for the poor performances of their players. The successful managers of the present day, Chance, Clarke and Jennings, are backed up by such great players as Evers, Tinker, Sheckard, Brown, Reulbach, Wagner, Leach, Gibson, Camnitz, Miller, Cobb, Bush, Summers, Donovan, Mullin and others, but if deprived of some of these stars they would soon demonstrate the fact that a manager without high class talent cannot win a pennant.

Hines, Old Catcher, Insane.

Michael P. Hines, 20 years ago catcher on the Boston Nationals, was adjudged insane. Hines, four years ago, fell from a building, and the injuries he received then affected his mind. Hines, in 1882, on the Boston National team, was backstop for Whitney, at that time considered the speediest pitcher in the country. He was with the club until 1885.

No Fear of Any Further Trouble.

David Price, Corydon, Ia., says: "I was in the last stage of kidney trouble—lame, weak, run down to a mere skeleton. My back was so bad I could hardly walk and the kidney secretions much disordered. A week after I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I could walk without a cane, and as I continued my health gradually returned. I was so grateful I made a public statement of my case, and now seven years have passed, I am still perfectly well."

PAINT BEAUTY.

Assured of durability, the next thought in painting is beauty—the complete aim being durable beauty, or beautiful durability.

National Lead Company here again offer you the co-operation of their paint experts—this time in the line of color schemes, artistic, harmonious and appropriate. You have only to write National Lead Company, 1902 Trinity Building, New York City, for "Houseowners' Painting Outfit No. 49," and you will promptly receive what is really a complete guide to painting, including a book of color schemes for either exterior or interior painting (as you may request), a book of specifications, and also an instrument for detecting adulteration in paint materials. This outfit is sent free, and, to say the least, is well worth writing for.

A Classic in Kentucky.

They have been telling this story down in the Blue Grass so long that the Louisville Courier-Journal says it is regarded as a classic:

"Majah," announced the colonel, "I'll bet I've sweat no less than 17 gallons!"

"Begging your pardon, kunnel," returned the major, desisting from a long libation, "gentlemen don't sweat; they perspire. Horses sweat."

"Well, then," returned the now irritated colonel, glaring at the calm and contented critic of his diction, "by gad, suh, I'm a hoss!"

Porto Ricans Interested.

In Porto Rico the Spanish exhibition of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, the first of its kind, has met with decided success. Twenty-two cities, including about one-third of all the towns in the island, were visited and over 100,000 people viewed the exhibit. The poor transit facilities in the island made it necessary to haul the exhibit from place to place on ox carts, like a traveling country circus.

Hard to Manage.

THREE REASONS

Each with Two Legs and Ten Fingers.

A Boston woman who is a fond mother writes an amusing article about her experience feeding her boys.

Among other things she says: "Three chubby, rosy-cheeked boys, Rob, Jack and Dick, aged 6, 4 and 2 years respectively, are three of our reasons for using and recomending the food, Grape-Nuts, for these youngsters have been fed on Grape-Nuts since infancy, and often between meals when other children would have been given candy.

"I gave a package of Grape-Nuts to a neighbor whose 3 year old child was a weazened little thing, ill half the time. The little tot ate the Grape-Nuts and cream greedily and the mother continued the good work, and it was not long before a truly wonderful change manifested itself in the child's face and body. The results were remarkable, even for Grape-Nuts.

"Both husband and I use Grape-Nuts every day and keep strong and well and have three of the finest, healthiest boys you can find in a day's march."

Many mothers instead of destroying the children's stomachs with candy and cake give the youngsters a handful of Grape-Nuts when they are begging for something in the way of sweets. The result is soon shown in greatly increased health, strength and mental activity.

GOOD ROADS BONDS VALID

JUDGE DICKINSON HOLDS ENABLING ACT OF LAST LEGISLATURE CONSTITUTIONAL.

APPEAL TO BE TAKEN AT ONCE

Test Case Brought by Auto Club—$100,000 In Bonds Sold for Improvements at Lake Minnetonka.

Minneapolis.—Hennepin county's $1,000,000 goodroads bond issue has been declared valid by Judge Dickinson, of the district court. In his decision Judge Dickinson sustains the validity of the bonds and declares that the county commissioners may legally proceed in their campangn for the betterment of Hennepin county roads.

The bond issue was authorized at the last session of the legislature. The Minneapolis Automobile club was instrumental in securing the passage of the bill, and plans were at once made for the improvement of the roads of the county. The county commissioners autherized the issuance of $100,000 in bonds and adopted plans for the improvement of roads near Lake Minnetonka.

Law Is Tested.

The $100,000 issue had been sold, when a question arose as to the validity of the issue. It was asserted that the legislative bill is unconstitutional and that the bond issue is void.

Believing that the question should be settled at once, the Automobile club, through President Horace Lowry, brought suit to restrain County Auditor Hugh R. Scott from issuing the bonds. G. A. Will, attorney for the club, drew the papers and the county officials were called into court to prove the legality of the issue.

Sustains Demurrer.

In district court, Al J. Smith, county attorney, demurred to the complaint of Mr. Lowry, and the question of the validity of the bond issue was placed squarely before Judge Dickinson on the demurrer. In his decision sustaining the county attorney's demurrer, Judge Dickinson says the bond issue is legal, and disposes of the question.

The case will probably be appealed to the supreme court to obtain a final settlement, but attorneys believe Judge Dickinson will undoubtedly be sustained.

Objection Not Valid.

Judge Dickinson held in the decision that the fact that population was the basis for passing the bond issue was not a valid objection to its legality. "The question is to determine whether there is a rational relation between density of population and a need for more and better roads," says the opinion. "Laws which deal with conditions affecting a certain part of the population of a state have been held valid by the highest courts. A law to be constitutional does not have to apply to the entire population of the state, but to those affected by these certain conditions. The courts have no legislative powers and hence cannot undertake to classify certain counties or districts. That is in the province of the legislature. The law makes provision for all counties coming under the provisions of the statute, and many laws which come much nearer being special legislation have been held valid."

REDWOOD WILL SUE FOR FUND.

Improvement of the Minnesota Hinges Upon Test Case.

St. Peter.—Improvement of the Minnesota river, to which landowners along the valley look for relief from floods that have ruined their crops and damaged their property, hinges upon an action soon to be instituted by the county of Redwood. It will ask the state supreme court for an order compelling the state drainage commission to pay an appropriation on a drainage ditch, and the decision will determine the validity of other river and ditch appropriations.

Session laws of 1907 made special provision for the extension of state aid to assist counties in digging judicial ditches, and under the law Redwood county began the construction of a drainage ditch. The state drainage commission set aside $3,000 to meet the cost of construction, and half the amount was paid over to Redwood county. Before the ditch was completed, however, Attorney General Simpson ruled that ditch construction came under the head of internal improvements, and that it would be unlawful to pay the remainder of the money. The authorities of Redwood county will make a formal demand on the drainage commission for the $1,500, and when it is denied will bring a test case before the supreme court.

WATCHMEN LOOKED ON.

Office Safe at White Bear Pleasure Resort Blown and Robbed.

White Bear Lake.—Two watchmen, gaged and tightly tied to a fence, looked on while two men attempted to blow the safe in the office building at Wildwood, White Bear Lake. In his home, a block away, H. M. Barnett, lessee and manager of the resort, with a revolver in his hand and his wife by his side, waited in the darkness in the hope that the robbers would pass their house on the way to Stillwater. Had they done so, Mr. Barnett says he would have shot both of hem down.

A posse in a special trolley car succeeded in capturing two suspects three miles from Wildwood, but nothing of an inscriminating nature was found on them. Both are held by the Stillwater police.

John Kirschke, assistant watchman, was making his rounds at 3 a. m. He encountered a man on one of the walks. In reply to an inquiry the man knocked him down and with the assistance of another man, who appeared from the shrubbery, took him to a point near the office and tied him to the fence. Watchman Frank Runk soon went to look for Kirschke. He was confronted by both men. One of them fired a shot over his head and Runk was forced to surrender. He was gagged and tied beside Kirschke.

Then the robbers went to work on the safe. In its outer compartment the safe held nearly $500 in jewelry. In the money drawer, which was better defended against explosives, was several hundred dollars in cash.

The robbers succeeded in reaching the jewelry with nitroglycerine, but could not force the doors of the money compartment. In using the explosive they seemed to be utterly unmindful of the fact that fourteen park employees were asleep in a building a few hundred yards away, and that Mr. Barnett resided but a block distant.

CANNOT SWITCH FUNDS.

Injunction In Red Lake County Halts Movement For New Courthouse.

Thief River Falls.—Former Attorney General Young of St. Paul and City Attorney Halvorsen of this city intervened on behalf of the taxpayers of Red Lake county in a suit brought last week by citizens of Red Lake Falls.

This suit sought to confirm the county commissioners in their recent action whereby they transferred $35,000 from the ditch fund, which was established by the sale of county ditch bonds at a recent date, to the courthouse building fund.

An injunction was issued prohibiting the commissioners from making such use of the ditch funds.

As some of these funds have been used in the county, it is probable that further suits will be instituted to discover their whereabouts.

An election will be held to divide the county at the next general election and until that is settled it is probable the courts will prohibit any attempt to construct a new courthouse.

WARRANTS OUT FOR TWO.

One Charged With Shooting at Neighbor, and Another of Making Threats.

Little Falls.—Warrants have been issued for the arrest of L. J. Nordstrom, living southwest of the city, and for Martin Fleischhaker, a farmer living east of here.

Nordstrom, it is charged in the complaint, fired at his neighbor, H. Hanson, three different times with a small rifle. Not succeeding in hitting his mark, Nordstrom is said to have made the statement that he would sooner or later get his man. Some are of the opinion that Nordstrom was under the influence of liquor when he made the attempt.

Fleischhaker, according to the complaint made by his landlord, Joseph Hartman, threatened to kill him at any time the latter is seen trying to come upon the land which Hartman rents to Fleischhaker. Hartman made an attempt to look over the farm, but says he was driven from his own property.

WOMAN DIES OF BURNS.

Mrs. Oslund of St. Peter Showered With Burning Oil From Tank.

St. Peter.—After lingering nearly a week, and suffering intense pain from burns, Mrs. August Oslund died at her home in this city. She was terribly burned by the explosion of a gasoline stove, which had been leaking oil and which burst into flames when she lighted the burner.

As Mrs. Oslund was carrying the blazing stove from the house the tank exploded and showered her with burning oil, her clothes igniting in several places. Even then she returned to the kitchen to put out the fire in the house, and the delay cost her her life.

FARMAN IN RECORD FLIGHT

ENGLISH AVIATOR WINS BIG EVENT IN FRANCE.

Travels 111 Miles in a Little Over Three Hours, Breaking Time of Best Previous Performance.

Betheny Aviation Field, Rheims.—Henry Farman, the English aviator, a hitherto unknown quantity in the aviation contests, in a biplane of his own design, broke the world's records for duration of flight and distance in a heavier-than-air machine and won the Grand Prix de la Champagne—the endurance test—by a remarkable flight officially recorded as 111.78 miles in three hours, four minutes, 56 2-5 seconds.

He actually covered an extra ten kilometers and remained in the air ten minutes after 7:30 o'clock, the hour that the timekeepers, under the rules, ceased to keep a record of the flight.

The other contestants finished in the order named: Hubert Latham in monoplane No. 29, 154 kilometers, 50 meters, time 2 hours, 18 minutes, 9 3-5 seconds; Louis Paulhan, in a Voisin biplane, 131 kilometers; Count de Lambert, biplane, 116 kilometers; Hubert Latham in monoplane No. 13, 111 kilometers; M. Tissandier, biplane, 111 kilometers; Roger Sommer, biplane, 60 kilometers; M. Delagrange, monoplane, 50 kilometers; M. Bleriot, monoplane, 40 kilometers; Glenn H. Curtiss, biplane, 30 kilometers; M. Lefebvre, biplane, 21 kilometers.

Although Hubert Latham, with a different machine, took second and fifth positions, the aviation committee held that he was ineligible for two prizes and awarded the fifth to M. Tissandier and the sixth to M. Sommer.

Although Farman's brilliant record as an aeroplanist should have warned the sharps that he was a dangerous competitor his victory was a complete surprise. He had been preparing his machine secretly and had not appeared upon the field except for a few practice flights and had been almost forgotten.

CLASH OVER LAW BY MAIL

Whether It Can Be Taught by Correspondence Is Subject for Bar Convention Tilt.

Detroit, Mich.—Whether law can be successfully taught in correspondence schools and whether four years' preparation is necessary for admission to the bar, furnished a heated discussion Tuesday at a meeting of the section on legal education of the American Bar association, which is in convention here.

Dean Harry S. Richards of the University of Wisconsin college of law, and James Parker Hall of the University of Chicago law school, were strong in their denunciation of the correspondence school. Mr. Hall classed it with mining scheme advertising.

Judge Francis M. Danaher of Albany, N. Y., speaking from the standpoint of the experienced lawyer, replied with scathing criticism of modern law school methods and declared that the incompetence of many candidates for the bar after completing the course is appalling. If law correspondence schools are bad, he asked Dean Richards and Mr. Hall, why do Wisconsin and Chicago universities conduct them in other departments?

NOT A "DEATH FARM" VICTIM

Frank Riedinger, Thought to Have Been Killed by Mrs. Gunness, Is Heard From.

Waukesha, Wis.—One of the men believed to have been slain by Mrs. Belle Gunness and buried on her farm near Laporte, Ind., is alive. He is Frank X. Riedinger of Delafield, Wis., who was supposed to have been among the "death farm" victims.

He has turned up at Fairfield, Clay county, Neb., and has made a claim in county court here for money due him from the sale of the farm, which is in the hands of the clerk of courts. In his affidavit as to his identity, filed in county court, Reidinger names Judge Emil Wallber, Milwaukee, as his attorney and empowers him to collect the money for him.

In December, 1906, Riedinger bought an 80-acre farm in the town of Delafield from John Williams, Jr., for $5,500. To secure the unpaid balance he executed three mortgages, one to John Williams, Jr., for $900; one to Mrs. Williams, Sr., for $1,600, and one to Mary Jones of Wales for $1,500. On February 5, 1907, he disappeared.

His whereabouts were a mystery, but he had confided in neighbors that he intended going to some town in Indiana to marry a woman with whom he had become acquainted through a matrimonial advertisement.

A few days later a neighbor, Gabriel Heinzelman, who was caring for his live stock during his absence, received a letter postmarked Chicago, purporting to come from Riedinger, stating that he had changed his mind about getting married and had "gone west." The letter was unsigned and Heinzelman was of the opinion that Riedinger was not the author.

Before leaving, Riedinger borrowed $200 from a friend and collected several milk checks. Following his disappearance an investigation was made by the German consul at Chicago, but no trace of him could be found.

NEGRO WOUNDS 29 PERSONS

Monroe, La., Is the Scene of a Terrific Battle in Streets—Body Is Burned in Public.

Monroe, La.—Riddled with bullets, the body of William S. Wade, a negro, who shot 29 men with a double-barreled gun Tuesday afternoon when he sought revenge for the wounding of two of his friends by policemen, was burned in sight of a great crowd of persons including women and children.

The fire was returned and the negro finally fell dead with a bullet through his heart, but not before 29 men, three of them members of his own race, had been more or less seriously wounded.

The seriously wounded are Hugh Bigger, policeman; T. H. Grant, deputy sheriff; Simon Marks, merchant, Tuskogee, Ala., and George McCormack, West Monroe, arm shattered.

Wade's body was publicly burned after it had been cut down from a pole on which it had been hung for half an hour or more.

It was at first reported that Wade was half crazed at the time from the effects of cocaine and cheap whisky, but an investigation by the police showed that when he purchased the shotgun and box a few minutes before he opened fire on the first there was nothing unusual in his manner. He had not been drinking nor did he show any evidence of having taken cocaine.

RICH; WANTS A WIFE

INMATE OF POOR HOUSE WHO INHERITED $200,000 SEEKS A BRIDE.

CHORUS GIRLS ARE BARRED

Albert Newhouse Declares He Will Not Join the Ranks of High Flyers But Will Take to the Simple Life.

Bloomington, Ill.—Albert Newhouse, who, while an inmate of the county poor house fell heir to $200,000, wants a wife to help him enjoy his fortune.

Now that he is a rich man instead of a pauper, Newhouse is looking for the right kind of a wife to help him take care of the money and also a finely improved farm of 300 acres, located within five miles of Indianapolis, Ind., and which was recently left to him by Oliver Newhouse of that city.

The testator was an uncle of the legatee, although he leaves a brother and a number of other nephews, and also some nieces, he chose the poor farm inmate as the beneficiary of his entire fortune.

While crippled with rheumatism, friendless and penniless, apparently the football of an adverse fate, Albert Newhouse was startled this week to be apprised that he had become a rich man through the eccentric action of his uncle.

The nephew, after the first sensation of surprise wore off, decided that he would take possession of the property, marry the right woman and become a useful and progressive citizen. As if in anticipation of his marital aspirations, women from many sections of the country are writing to him suggesting a joint trip to the altar of love.

The story of Albert Newhouse is a remarkable one. Garbed in the attire of a day laborer, his limbs stiff from rheumatism, he sat on the steps of the poor farm Friday afternoon and calmly discussed his unexpected inheritance.

"I could take this money," he said, "and burn it in a few months via the automobile, chorus girl, and lobster supper route. I would be a good fellow for everybody while the money lasted, but after it was gone, I would be back to the same point I was when the news of my handsome remembrance reached me.

"No, I will take up the simple life on the farm, invest my money where it will bring me a fair income and try to operate the tract of land left me as profitably as I know how. I will not become a drone and idle member of society simply because I have been left a fortune. I hope to increase it, and who knows, I may be a millionaire before I die," concluded Newhouse, laughing in the satisfied manner that could be expected of a man transformed from poverty to affluence in the twinkling of an eye.

Newhouse was born on a farm of central Indiana, and his life could not have been more prosaic or uneventful. He grew up to hard work and cheerless existence and with limited education. He was employed for a time as farm hand by his uncle, who left him all of his money, and this employment may have been responsible for his fortune. The nephew was industrious, but if the uncle was pleased with his nephew, he gave no sign.

Newhouse expects trouble in keeping adventurers and troublesome women away. That the country is full of fortune huntters, is already indicated by the colossal mail he is receiving. Although his legacy was not made public, until the first of the week, he is receiving letters from women.

BANK PRESIDENT ARRESTED

Elbert W. Shirk of Tipton, Ind., Taken Into Custody—$25,000 Misappropriated Is Charge.

Chicago.—Elvert W. Shirk, president of the First National bank of Tipton, Ind., whose institution is said to be short $250,000, was arrested in the Calumet club Friday by federal officers.

The banker is charged with having misappropriated $25,000 of the bank's funds through drafts made payable to himself.

A warrant for Shirk's arrest was issued by United States Commissioner Foote on complaint of Wesley M. Bennett, special government bank examiner, who has been investigating the affairs of the institution since $60,000 of the bank's funds was missed simultaneously with the disappearance of Noah R. Marker, cashier.

Marker returned to his home city some time ago and said that he had had full authority in handling the bank's funds as he did and that he was in no way to blame for any shortage that might exist.

BED-BOUND FOR MONTHS.

Hope Abandoned After Physicians' Consultation.

Mrs. Enos Shearer, Yew and Washington Sts., Centralia, Wash., says: "For years I was weak and run down, could not sleep, my limbs swelled and the secretions were troublesome; pains were intense. I was fast in bed for four months. Three doctors said there was no cure for me, and I was given up to die. Being urged, I used Doan's Kidney Pills. Soon I was better and in a few weeks was about the house, well and strong again."

He was a balmy-headed Johnny, with little cash. She was both pretty and pert. He said: "Do you know, Dolly, I am something of a mimic? I can take almost anybody off"

She said: "Then take yourself off, old boy. I'm expecting some one to take me to supper."

HAD AWFUL WEEPING ECZEMA

Face and Neck Were Raw—Terrible Itching, Inflammation and Soreness—All Treatments Failed.

Cuticura Proved a Great Success.

"Eczema began over the top of my ear. It cracked and then began to spread. I had three different doctors and tried several things, but they did me no good. At last one side of my face and my neck were raw. The water ran out of it so that I had to wear medicated cotton, and it was so inflamed and sore that I had to put a piece of cloth over my pillow to keep the water from it, and it would stain the cloth a sort of yellow. The eczema itched so that it seemed as though I could tear my face all to pieces. Then I began to use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and it was not more than three months before it was all healed up. Miss Ann Pearsons, Northfield, Vt., Dec. 19, 1907."

A Noble Love.

"Is the contract of dower properly drawn up, signed and witnessed?" asked the count of Castle-on-the-Bum.

"Yes," sighed Gladys Golden.

"There are no loopholes through which your wise lawyers of Philadelphia might creep?"

"Not a loophole," said the fair Gladys.

"And your father's holdings in Amalgamated Whalebone, American Cheese and Macaroni and Tin Soup-Plate 6s have not been affected by the recent depression?"

"No, dearest," answered Miss Golden, firmly.

"Then I love you," said the noble count; and two fond hearts beat as one.—Puck.

Laundry work at home would be much more satisfactory if the right Starch were used. In order to get the desired stiffness, it is usually necessary to use so much starch that the beauty and fineness of the fabric is hidden behind a paste of varying thickness, which not only destroys the appearance, but also affects the wearing quality of the goods. This trouble can be entirely overcome by using Defiance Starch, as it can be applied much more thinly because of its greater strength than other makes.

Decidedly Rattled.

Of an Irishman, named Dogherty, a speaker of rare eloquence, the following amusing story is told: After one of his speeches he asked Canning what he thought of it. "The only fault I could find in it," Canning answered, "was that you called the speaker, 'Sir' too often." "My dear friend," said Dogherty, "if you knew the state I was in while speaking, you would not wonder if I had called him 'Ma'am!'"

Starch, like everything else, is being constantly improved, the patent Starches put on the market 25 years ago are very different and inferior to those of the present day. In the latest discovery—Defiance Starch—all injurious chemicals are omitted, while the addition of another ingredient, invented by us, gives to the Starch a strength and smoothness never approached by other brands.

HANDS OFF! LET THEM GO

It would be good party politics for the rest of our Minnesota republican congressmen to keep their hands off in the Tawney and Miller congressional matter, and let the 1st, and 6th, Districts deal with them, and there is no doubt but what they will get all that is comeing to them, as the only ones we have ever heard say that they would not be retired from congress is socialist speakers, who always use their names to illustrate the insincere promises of the republican party. These speakers will usaly devote about an hour to explaining what these two congressmen promised to do before election, and the record of what they did do after election; then they will stand up on their tip toes and yell at the top of their voice: "And the republican party will re elect them, you see if they don't." (Tremendous applause from the socialist side of the house).

It is better to let men of their stamp drop out of sight as quietly as possiable, as any attempt to uphold them will only put the republican party in this state on a campaign of defense. If a man deliberately throws himself into the whirlpool of Niagara it is not the duty of another man to loose his life trying to save him

Old Cures.

The antiquary took down a little gray book. "Here is a 'family doctor,'" he said, "that was published as far back as 1561. Talk about your quaint prescriptions!" The first prescription, a truly quaint one, ran: "If a man be greved wyth the fallinge sicknessce, let him take a he-wolves harte and make it to powder and use it; but if it be a woman, let her take a she-wolves harte." A 1561 jaundice cure was: "Take earthwormes and cut them small, and braye them wyth a little wyne so that ye may swallow it; drincke the same fasting." For toothache: "Seeth as many little frogges sitting upon trees as thou canst get, in water; take the fat flowynge from them, and when nede is, anoynt the teth therwyth."

Buying the First Bond.

In the lives of most people there are a few moments that are not only big with importance, but remain long in the memory. One of these moments may be the first sight of the ocean; another, when great, snow clad mountains first come into view. Still another, though perhaps not quite so romantic, is that time when the average man or woman draws his or her savings out of a bank and buys the first bond.—Moody's Magazine.

Sensitive Salmon.

"Splendid color, isn't it?" asked a fishmonger as he cut a pound or two of salmon for a customer.

RUNNING THE GANTLET.

An Indian Incident In Indiana's Pioneer Days.

David Johnson, one of the early settlers of Indiana, was a noted hunter and at one time was with a hunting party of which John Severns was a member. On that occasion the early settlement of the state was discussed. Mr. Severns, having been there so many years before any other white man, was accepted as authority on all such subjects. In the "Pioneer History of Indiana" Colonel W. M. Cockrum gives one of Mr. Severns' stories as repeated by Mr. Johnson.

Mr. Severns said that in the fall of 1793 he was with half a dozen of his Indian neighbors, hunting, and that he stayed all night at an Indian village. During the night two white prisoners were brought in, and preparations were made for their trial and death.

First two lines were formed facing each other, and the two men were compelled to run the gantlet between the lines. A point some hundred yards beyond the lines of the gantlet was designated as the place that was to be reached to save their lives.

One of the men was of middle age, but frail; the other was a strong, athletic young fellow. The lines were made up of more than 100 Indians, mostly squaws and boys, with enough active men to keep the prisoners from getting away. The young man was the first to make the race. He got through the lane and to the life station without being much hurt.

The older man before he started held up his hands and offered a prayer to God for aid, then commenced the race, which was not more than half completed before he was knocked down by a heavy club in the hands of a squaw and was set upon by the horde of squaws and boys and beaten to death.

As soon as he was knocked down the young man, who was several hundred feet away, ran like a deer and jumped into the throng of Indians and tried to save his friend's life, but was soon overpowered and dragged away.

For this brave act the chief of the village adopted the young man to take the place of a son whom he had lost.

Mr. Severns, on being asked why he did not intercede for the prisoners, said that if he had attempted to interfere it would have cost him his life.

THE JOY OF EATING.

It Is Courted to the Fullest Extent In Berlin.

The Germans in a good many ways get more happiness out of life as they go along than we do. Eating is an innocent pleasure, and they eat oftener and more. No one is required to get up to breakfast. There is never any formal family breakfast. Coffee and rolls are sent to your room, or you can go into the dining room and get them when you choose. Not having had breakfast enough, a German spends all the rest of the day in making up for it. At 10:30 or 11 everybody takes lunch. The laborers along the streets all stop to eat. And in general it may be said that in all places and at all hours it is good form and a matter of course to draw out a substantial sandwich of rye bread and raw ham and go to munching. Women do it at the opera. Students do it at the university between classes. Dinner comes at 2 o'clock. About 5 the maid brings to your room coffee and rolls and perhaps cake. At 8 p. m. is supper. Those who are going out to any entertainment may have supper at 6 or 7. But there is always a long enough intermission at the opera or theater for those who are disposed to take lunch, and most persons are disposed.

There are innumerable restaurants all about the city, and tens of thousands of people eat there, sitting at little tables in the open air right by the sidewalk. After the day with all its cares and meals is over it is a favorite custom to go to a restaurant and sit there for half the night eating and drinking and listening to music. No city in the world hears so much good music so cheaply as Berlin. And everybody who is anybody knows enough about music to talk with some intelligence.—Berlin Letter to Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

A Greater Loss.

Here is a laughable experience of Lord Sheffield. He was once walking down Piccadilly with a friend, to whom he explained that it would be impossible for any one to pick his pocket without his knowledge. Lord Sheffield's pocket handkerchief was hanging out, and his friend, having diverted his attention, quietly abstracted it. Instantly Lord Sheffield collared a seedy looking man who was passing and charged him with the theft, but, the friend producing the handkerchief and explaining the joke, the unfortunate individual whom his lordship had so unceremoniously seized was released with many apologies. The man beat a hasty retreat, and shortly afterward Lord Sheffield discovered that he had lost his pocketbook.—London Express.

Again or Yet?

Dining Room of a Circus.

The discipline of an army reigns supreme in circus life, and it is always interesting to watch how the thousand or more people of such an organization are fed three meals a day without a hitch and as silently as in a big hotel. The grass serves as a carpet, and the forty or more waiters move quickly in and out. The kitchen tent is completely equipped with pastry ovens, warming tables, steam vats for stewing, steam urns for coffee and tea, boiling ovens and numberless other cooking utensils. The force of cooks numbers sixteen, including the three which tend the campfires at which nothing but soup is prepared. The ranges fold up and are carried in wagons, and the tents are lighted with electricity at night. It is not unusual to serve as many as 5,000 pancakes for breakfast, and 600 loaves of bread are used each day, in addition to crackers and biscuit. The meat consumed each day is somewhere near 1,000 pounds. Such provisions as celery, young onions, strawberries, radishes, melons, etc., are bought in each town, often cleaning out the entire market. An advance agent of the commissary department keeps well in advance of the show, contracting for its supplies for man and beast.—Popular Mechanics.

A Craving For Sweets.

Advocating the use of sweet fruits, preserves, sugar and good candy by children, Dr. Woods Hutchinson in Success says that a craving for sweets is nature's call for the substance which is "a full blown member of the great trinity of nutrient materials, sugar (carbohydrate), meat (protein) and fat. Sugar is wood, coal, gasoline for the muscle engine. Every time the tiny engine gives one of its rhythmical explosions—that is to say, when a muscle contracts—a certain amount of sugar is burned up. It is fortunate for people whom a mistaken conscience deprives of sweets that the human body can manufacture sugar out of many foods, out of meat, milk, vegetables and grains; otherwise the body would go into the desperate business of manufacturing sugar out of its own tissues, which is precisely what diabetics did in the days when this disease was supposed to be due to too much sugar in the food and physicians tried to cure it by cutting sweets and sweetmakers out of the patient's diet.

An Ancient Sky Pilot.

From Garnett's "Anthology," volume 7, page 48, I copy the following, taken from the "Writings of Lucian," a Greek born about 100 A. D.:

"We were suddenly caught by a whirlwind, which turned our vessel several times around in a circle with tremendous velocity and lifted it above 3,000 stadia in the air, not setting it down again on the sea, but kept it suspended above the water at that height and carried us on, with swelled sails, above the clouds."

In these days of air conquest this quotation might be of utmost interest to aeronauts and also literary men. This ancient Gulliver long preceded Swift, and as for outdistancing Jules Verne another quotation is added:

"Having thus continued our course through the sky for a space of seven days and as many nights, on the eighth day we described a sort of earth in the air," etc. (which proved to be the moon).

The thoroughly familiar vernacular expression "going some" applies with original vigor to this early and perhaps first sky pilot.—New York Times.

Fourteenth Century Doctors.

Synge's "Social Life in England" quotes a number of fourteenth century hints to success for physicians:

Suppose you know nothing, say there is an obstruction of the liver. Perhaps the patient will say, "Nay, master, it is my head or legs that trouble me." Repeat that it comes from the liver, and especially use the word "obstruction," for patients do not understand it, which is important.

Never dine with a patient who has not paid you. It will be cheaper to get your dinner at an inn, for such feasts are usually deducted from the surgeon's fee.

When you are treating a wound or accident, the friends of the patient should be excluded, for they may faint and cause a disturbance, but sometimes a higher fee may be got from persons present fainting and breaking their heads against wood and the like than from the principal patient.

The Mind's Power.

"Zola," said a psychologist, "once wrote in a lady's album that his favorite amusement was writing and his favorite wish a sudden death. Zola died suddenly.

"And it is a strange thing," said the psychologist, "that those who prefer a sudden death usually have their preference gratified. It is one of those things which go to show the mind's mysterious power. Who knows but it is this very desire for death, quick, painless, undreaded, which actually causes that happy kind of death? The mind, you know, has a power that we have only just begun to understand."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Planning Ahead.

"Theater parties," said the prospective bride, "will cost about $200 annually, flowers as much more and bonbons, say, $100. Certainly we can marry on $600 a year."

"And have a snug surplus," suggested her dad, "for such incidentals as grub and clothes and house rent."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

LOVE'S DOUBTING.

A Phase of Life Through Which Many Married Women Pass.

The only incidents that marred our happiness were sudden and inexplicable "flare ups." Occasionally, to our amazement, a trifle would make us glare at each other like animals and speak bitterly. Five minutes later we would express our regret and shame. Soon I perceived that these quarrels were due to nerves and to the trials of adjustment. One evening we had an argument that was particularly violent and distressing. It ended by Frank's going to bed. I remained in the seat where I had been reading, and for a long time I pretended to myself that I was going on reading. Presently tears fell on my book. Then I said: "How silly all this is! I am making myself suffer, and I am making Frank suffer too. I will go and tell him that I am sorry." So I stole into the bedroom. He was sleeping peacefully.

That little experience, not without humor as I look back on it, made me first realize how differently Frank and I could be affected by the same cause. It marked the beginning of my uneasiness. Soon I stopped reading aloud to Frank; why, I can't remember. Little things disturbed me. At first the thought of them used to be swept away by my delight on seeing Frank in the evening. Then, too, there would come the feeling that those things were accidents and would not occur again. In the second year of our marriage, just after dinner, Frank would read the newspaper till he began to doze. Then he would rouse himself and try to be agreeable. The effort troubled me. There was also the quiet and efficient deciding of little details without reference to my wishes. And here I felt there was danger. Once I said to myself, "Suppose I should tire him," and I grew cold. Then I thought of the moment when I should discover that I was tiring him. Here my sense of humor came to my rescue, and I felt better. I imagine that many women pass through this phase.—American Magazine.

THE BEST REMEDY

For Women—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Noah, Ky.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from headaches, nervous prostration, and hemorrhages.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me well and strong, so that I can do all my housework, and attend to the store and post-office, and I feel much younger than I really am.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the most successful remedy for all kinds of female troubles, and I feel that I can never praise it enough."—MRS. LIZZIE HOLLAND, Noah, Ky.

The Change of Life is the most critical period of a woman's existence, and neglect of health at this time invites disease and pain.

Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs.

For 30 years it has been curing women from the worst forms of female ills—inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, and nervous prostration.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

Paxtine
TOILET ANTISEPTIC
—NOTHING LIKE IT FOR—

THE TEETH Paxtine excels any dentifrice in cleansing, whitening and removing tartar from the teeth, besides destroying all germs of decay and disease which ordinary tooth preparations cannot do.

THE MOUTH Paxtine used as a mouthwash disinfects the mouth and throat, purifies the breath, and kills the germs which collect in the mouth, causing sore throat, bad teeth, bad breath, grippe, and much sickness.

THE EYES when inflamed, tired, ache and burn, may be instantly relieved and strengthened by Paxtine.

CATARRH Paxtine will destroy the germs that cause catarrh, heal the inflammation and stop the discharge. It is a sure remedy for uterine catarrh.

Paxtine is a harmless yet powerful germicide, disinfectant and deodorizer. Used in bathing it destroys odors and leaves the body antiseptically clean.

ORIGIN OF 'WEE-AH' FULL OF MEANING

JENNINGS' WAR CRY EXPLAINED —DETROIT MANAGER GETS UNIQUE RESULTS.

STARTED IT AT MACON, GA

Abbreviated Soul-Stirring Shout of Tiger Chieftain Has Almost Become Household Word in Baseball Circles in Every Part of Country—Most Repeated Words of National Pastime.

"Wee-ah" is not a mere catchword in the baseball vocabulary of Manager Hugh Jennings. "Wee-ah" is pregnant with meaning. Popular usage has made it much of a joke, and yet it is used by Jennings in a spirit far from that of levity.

When Jennings first used the now famous battlecry it was in the little, white-washed inclosure used for a ball park away down in Macon, Ga. Jennings had just joined the team. The Tigers were fighting and quarreling. People said Jennings' task was hopeless. But before leaving the training camp in August he had welded them together into a scoring machine that has since won two pennants. And he did it by the force of his own personality. They were drawn to him, looked up to him, and forgot their petty disputes.

When they did a good piece of work he was always ready with a slap on the back and a cheery, favorablt comment. It was always:

"That's the way—ah!"

By the time the team reached Macon Jennings had pounded this expression down to the one stirring shriek—"Wee-ah!"

"That's the way," was not explosive enough to suit his fighting nature. He wanted action, and action quickly. Any three-syllable yell was too tame for him. And the players understood the yell just as though he had spoken English.

"Wee-ah" it stands to-day, and will stand. It is the keynote of the success of a man great in his chosen profession. There are great authors, great statesmen, great inventors, great soldiers. Jennings' glory rests in baseball. But it is simply because, as a boy, lifting his thoughts from the slate pile where he worked in the Pennsylvania coal mines, he turned his energy into one certain channel. His methods are worth studying.

If the business man, the worker, who for a few hours of recreation goes to the ball park, would forget the game awhile, forget the batting averages of Ty Cobb and Hans Wagner and all other vain pursuits and make a personal study of Jennings and his work, he would go away benefited, refreshed, to tackle the worries and problems of another day.

When a run is needed in the ninth inning, watch "Hughie." "Matty's" on third leading off. Cobb is at bat. The pitcher winds up. Cobb lurching forwards, chops at the ball—and misses. There comes the cheering welcome cry of "Wee-ah!" given as only Jennings can give it.

One strike on Cobb, but it was not his fault. He swung as he should swing. He did his best. And the cry goes up that sends the blood coursing through his veins and drives from his mind worry because of his failure.

With one strike against him the pitcher winds up. Cobb lurches forward again, then draws back. It was a ball and he would take no chances. Again he hears that cry before he hears the yell of the umpire's voice. It has a ring of confidence and "get-there" spirit to it, and he knows without thinking that he has done the right thing. He goes back to the plate cooler and more determined than ever.

"You can do it, Ty—get that run in!"

There is a cry. The stands rock with the roaring, dancing, momentarily mad spectators. The ball has torn short, low and true over second. Matty is home and the game is won.

PAINT DURABILITY.

The first thought in painting should, of course, be durability—and durability means simply pure paint properly applied. Pure paint is pure white lead and linseed oil (with or without tinting material).

Some years ago the paint-buyer was likely to get adulterated or counterfeit white lead if he was not familiar with brands. To-day he may buy with perfect safety if he only makes sure that the Dutch Boy Painter trademark is on the packages of white lead that he buys. This trademark was adopted by National Lead Company to distinguish the pure white lead made by them from the worthless adulterated and fake goods. It is a guarantee as valuable to the house-owner as the education of a paint expert could be.

All in Fight Against Tuberculosis.

Prevention of tuberculosis versus dividends is the proposition which some of our largest insurance companies are now trying to establish. The Metropolitan Life recently applied for permission to erect a sanatorium for its policy holders and employes afflicted with tuberculosis, but the application was refused on grounds of illegality by New York State Superintendent of Insurance Hotchkiss. The company is, however, conducting an active educational campaign by distributing 3,500,000 pamphlets among its policy holders. The Provident Savings Life Assurance society has also established a health bureau, where its policy holders may receive free medical advice. Several fraternal orders, notably the Modern Woodmen, Knights of Pythias, Royal League, Royal Arcanum and Workmen's Circle, have already established or are contemplating the erection of sanatoria for their tuberculous members.

Marriage and Meanness.

Some years ago there lived in Atchison a young woman noted for her good works and gentleness. She was always helping the poor and was patient and kind and universally admired. She married a fairly good man and abused him within three months. She had been good and patient for years, but a husband was too much for her; she had never been cross to any one until she was cross to her husband. There is something about marriage that stirs up hidden depths of meanness on both sides.—Atchison (Kan.) Globe.

Early to Bed.

The man who makes it the habit of his life to go to bed at nine o'clock usually gets rich and is always reliable. Of course going to bed does not make him rich—I merely mean that such a man will in all probability be up early in the morning and do a big day's work, so his weary bones put him to bed early. Rogues do their work at night. Honest men work by day. It's all a matter of habit and good habits in America make any man rich. Wealth is a result of habit.—John Jacob Astor.

IT WORKS
The Laborer Eats Food That Would Wreck an Office Man.

Men who are actively engaged at hard work can sometimes eat food that would wreck a man who is more closely confined.

This is illustrated in the following story:

"I was for 12 years clerk in a store working actively and drank coffee all the time without much trouble until after I entered the telegraph service.

"There I got very little exercise and drinking strong coffee, my nerves were unsteady and my stomach got weak and I was soon a very sick man. I quit meat and tobacco and in fact I stopped eating everything which I thought might affect me except coffee, but still my condition grew worse, and I was all but a wreck.

"I finally quit coffee and commenced to use Postum a few years ago, and I am speaking the truth when I say, my condition commenced to improve immediately and today I am well and can eat anything I want without any bad effects, all due to shifting from coffee to Postum.

"I told my wife today I believed I could digest a brick if I had a cup of postum to go with it.

"We make it according to directions boiling it full 20 minutes and use good rich cream and it is certainly delicious."

Sit Up.

Much rot has recently been writ, and wags have rent their brains asunder, in trying to make food for wit this dreadnaught lid the girls hide under. What need have men to knock it so? They do not have to sweat beneath it. Is it because the fellows know the landscape has been robbed to wreathe it? We are no judge of ladies' lids, and care not what your choice or vote is; it's not what's on but in girls' heads that makes us sit up and take notice.—Bard of Benzie.

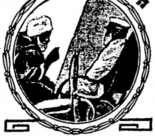
SPAIN and MOROCCO

HURRYING FROM THE DANGER-ZONE



GENERAL MARINA INTERVIEWING FRIENDLY MOOR

If the troubles that beset Spain on the Mediterranean coast of Morocco were not of her own making, there would be a feeling of considerable sympathy with a country almost the last of whose foreign possessions is so seriously threatened. Unfortunately, Spain has brought the trouble upon her own head, or, to be more accurate, the Ultramontane cabinet that misgoverns the country has inflicted them upon her. Most people outside the Spanish cabinet do not require to be told that the Riffians who inhabit the Moroccan highlands overlooking the Mediterranean are a fierce, intractable, unconquered people. Even Muza's Arabs could not reduce them to submission, and the troops of Cardinal Cisneros were equally unsuccessful. It may be said that the writ of the sultan himself does not run far into the Riff country, where the people follow the life that was theirs before civilization visited western Europe, having their own code of honor, their blood-feuds and their internecine strife. Great pirates in times past, they have long given up piracy as a profession, and practice is now merely as a pastime. But they have never ceased to exercise themselves in the profession of arms, and for many years the little wealth they have acquired by their labors on the land and in the field, and by the sale of the herds and flocks they rear, has been devoted to the purchase of guns.

Guns and guns, and still more guns, some coming from England, France, or Germany, many coming from Belgium, large quantities from Spain, and not a few from the sultan's own troops; for it is no secret that when a Moor is tired of serving in the army in return for pay that is always in arrears, he deserts, carrying his beloved gun with him, and sells it to the nearest tribe that does not acknowledge the sultan's authority. Even on the coast beyond Tangier and round Ceuta, Tetuan and Melilla, gun-running has been carried on openly, more than once within view of the writer. The guards on the beach have been squared or tricked, and convoys have been waiting within a mile of the landing-place to carry the precious weapons into the mountains. So it happens that the Riffians are well armed, and they are fighting because their territory has been violated. Indeed, if they had white skins and a code of western morality, they would be in serious danger of being called patriots instead of rebels.

The position in which Spain finds herself is one of extreme difficulty. Senor Maura, the premier, is an obstinate reactionary. The country is incensed against the war party. Spanish finances are in their chronic state of weakness. The cost of subduing the Riffs in money alone, to say nothing of blood, will be enormous. If the government does not fall, if eastern Spain can be pacified, if 50,000 troops can be sent to Melilla and the other presidios of Spain in Morocco, if the Riffs can be driven off and their mountain strongholds can be destroyed, it is hard too see what Spain can hope to gain beyond a measure of glory and a bill, that bear the same relation to one another as the bread to the sack in Falstaff's famous tavern account. There is not enough money in all the country of the Riffs to pay the bill that Spain has incurred already, and though some attempt may be made to saddle the sultan with responsibility, it is well known that Mulai el Hafid is no better able than Gen. Marina to control the tribesmen. Nor is the country of the Riffs calculated to tempt sane men to conquer it. It is wild, rugged, inhospitable, and can scarcely yield a living even to those who have been brought up in it. It could only be kept at the point of the bayonet, for even if Spain had a surplus population, there would be no temptation for emigrants to settle in such a wild and unproductive land. Spain has no colonists, she needs more population, and consequently there is absolutely no room for an imperial policy in Africa.

If Senor Maura were less obstinate and the rulers of Spain less proud, one and all would see the advisability of retiring at once from an untenable position before the wounds inflicted upon the nation by the Cuban troubles and the American war broke out afresh. Nobody doubts the bravery of the Spanish troops; they have, and deserve a splendid reputation. But mere bravery will do very little in a campaign carried on under conditions with which the Spaniards are wholly unfamiliar. The veterans of the Cuban campaign, who have been sent to Melilla because the government is desirous of keeping its most effective forces at home to deal with popular discontent, have not fought against mountain tribes. The season, too, is against them; the Riff country is passing through the hottest time of the year, and though the Spaniard is well inured to heat, he can hardly be expected to carry on an active campaign under the intolerable glare of the African sun in August. To make matters worse there are rumors that the equipment of the soldiers is not as good as it should be, and that the preparations for a foreign campaign are inadequate. The suspension of constitutional guarantees throughout the country and the suppression of news from the seat of war are clear signs of Senor Maura's intention to rely upon bayonets at home and abroad. It is in vain that those who wish him well remind him publicly and privately that he is "jugando con el fuego" (playing with fire). He is playing a gambler's game. If the Spanish forces succeed in Morocco he will be able to crush the republican and labor parties in such a fashion that they will not be able to lift their heads while he remains in office. He knows now, if he did not know before, who and where are the most determined enemies of his absolutism. If, on the other hand, the Spanish arms meet with further severe reverses and there is an insurrection in Spain, he will have lost nothing by holding out to the last. The whole tragedy of the business lies in the fact that the Riffians did not wish to fight and the Spaniards did not want to fight; but the central government in Madrid has ignored the wishes of everybody, and has plunged the country into the adventure that may result in a disaster of the first magnitude.

A Real Chuckle Head.

"The late Congressman Cushman," said a Tacoman, "was justly called the 'Wit of the House.' He never lacked an anecdote wherewith to point and season his remarks.

"Once, in a Tacoma speech, he told us not to be chuckle-headed, shallow people, doing the wrong thing, deceiving none but ourselves.

"'Don't,' he cried, 'be like the beefy English officer!'

"Then he explained that this officer, being seated next to an elderly stranger at a dinner, leaned over and said:

"'Who's that fat old hippopotamus of a woman opposite?'

"'That's my wife,' was the reply.

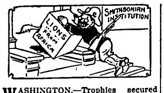
"'Thanks,' said the officer hastily. 'Thanks. That's all I wanted to know.'

"And he turned to his neighbor on the other side and whispered with a chuckle:

"'Got devilish well out of that, I think, eh?'"

DOINGS AT THE CAPITAL

Fine Structure for Roosevelt Trophies



WASHINGTON.—Trophies secured by the African hunting expedition headed by ex-President Roosevelt are to be preserved to posterity in the grandest and most ornate exposition building the world has known, which will surpass any of the wonderful museums erected and maintained by the wealthy monarchs of antiquity.

The building will be completed just in time to receive the valuable hides of the rhinoceros, the elephant, the hippopotamus and the other huge mammals which fell before the unerring aim of the Roosevelt party. As the most of these animals are rapidly nearing extinction it is expected that the trophies will form the nucleus of a collection that will become the most complete and the most important in the world.

There are many duplicates in the collection of 82 pelts sent home by Col. Roosevelt, and this fact will enable the authorities of the Smithsonian institution, for whom the building has been erected in this city by congress, to secure many valuable species which were not found by the Roosevelt party. The law permits the Smithsonian institution to make exchanges for species it may not possess and there is little doubt that all the great museums of the world will be anxious to secure at least one of the Roosevelt trophies.

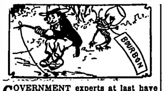
The new museum building is constructed entirely of granite, with floor space approximately nine and one-half acres. Its cost was slightly more than $3,500,000, and it is being put in order for the reception of the various objects tht have been collected, chief among which are those sent by the ex-president.

So far the arrangement of the various specimens has not been determined upon by the curator of the museum. It is likely, however, that the entire first floor will be the future home of the pelts sent to America by the Roosevelt party.

It has been deemed best to tan the skins sent from Africa as the most perfect way of preserving them for all time. As soon as they have been taken from the casks and cleaned of the brine this task will be undertaken by some one who has not yet been chosen.

The work may be done under the immediate supervision of the Smithsonian officials in the museum here.

Learn Cause of Laziness in the South



GOVERNMENT experts at last have discovered why there are so many lazy people in the southern states. The widely recognized predilection of the average southerner for fishing and other pleasurable pastimes is not the result of fondness for those things into which an element of real work does not enter. They are simply compelled to do it, and a little parasite known to government medical science as the "hook worm" is the motive power.

Dr. Charles Werdell Stiles, chief of the government hygienic laboratory, is the discoverer of the "hook worm." He has several specimens of him safely preserved in alcohol, and it may be stated here that the parasite has no particular objections to being put in alcohol. He likes it.

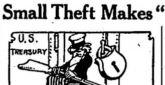
In his investigations of the habits of the parasite, covering a period of seven years, Dr. Stiles has found that it thrives on liquor—that is to say, that it cannot exist in the stomach of anyone who is a total abstainer. Thus the difficulty in the way of its total extermination from the southland has become painfully manifest.

To get rid of the parasite the patient must needs deprive himself of any and all substances containing even the slightest percentage of alcohol. This, of course, includes the "red liquor" so dear to the palate of the victim.

In summing up his investigations Dr. Stiles holds out one hope. He intimates that "real good red liquor" is not as sustaining to the parasite as is the cheaper grade, for he says that it thrives most among the poorer classes who drink the latter kind, which probably is imported from the north.

Dr. Stiles' report on his investigation has been printed in the bulletin of the United States bureau of zoology.

Small Theft Makes "Uncle Sam" Careful



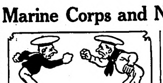
A FEW years ago, when Grover Cleveland was president, the United States treasury at Washington was robbed of two silver dollars. This loss, although of no material importance, was decidedly significant and measures were taken to prevent a recurrence.

At this season of the year Washington is crowded with visitors and tourists to whom the government extends a welcome. Guides are at hand to show the visitors through the government public buildings, the working of each department and subdivision is carefully described and sight-seeing citizens are made to feel perfectly at home in the business houses of the government.

Formerly it was the custom to take visitors through the vaults in the treasury building, where millions of dollars are stored. On one occasion a small boy, tempted by the immense amount of glittering gold and silver, cut one of the bags with his pocketknife and made away with the two "cartwheels," as the heavy one-dollar silver pieces are referred to.

Since that time the vaults have been closed to visitors, except to those who get permission from the secretary of the treasury. In the large vault, which is 89 feet long and 51 feet wide, is stored $165,000,000 in coin for the redemption of gold and silver certificates.

Marine Corps and Navy Again at Odds



THE long standing row between the navy and the marine corps has broken out again as a result of the findings of the court of inquiry in the Sutton case, and a congressional investigation of the marine corps is not improbable.

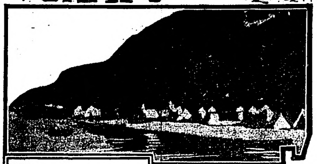
The trouble arose over the minority findings of Commander John Hood, U. S. N., the president of the court, who, on his own responsibility and without the support of his associates, Maj. Neville and Lieut. Jenson, took occasion to say that the discipline at the marine barracks of Annapolis at the time of the Sutton trouble was not of the proper sort.

"The testimony," according to Commander Hood's minority report, "concerning the whole deplorable affair indicates a state of discipline then existing in the Marine School of Application discreditable to the service and argues strongly against the practice of commissioning and putting into positions of responsibility young men without previous training."

"It is the old fight between the two branches of the service," said a marine officer. "The matter will be put up to Secretary Meyer when he returns to Washington, and it is by no means unlikely that he will revoke Assistant Secretary Winthrop's approval of that part of the court's findings. But we will not stop there. We will see that it is brought up in congress next winter."

The young marine officers who were defendants in the Sutton inquiry have given up all thoughts of filing suits for damages against Mrs. Sutton. After reading the findings of the court they communicated with one another and agreed that their complete exoneration by the court was sufficient and decided to let the matter rest there.

HUDSON RIVER CAMPS



THE TENT VILLAGE

A CANOE CAMP

New York has but recently discovered a new summer resort right within the metropolitan district, and it is only just beginning to utilize it. This is the Palisades park, which belongs jointly to the states of New York and New Jersey and stretches for miles along the western bank of the Hudson. The ground from the top of the cliffs to low water mark and several places at the top of the cliffs were acquired five years ago in order partly to stop the destruction of the Palisades by stone quarriers and partly to prevent this, the choicest spot around New York, from getting into the hands of real estate dealers, and so being cut up into building lots and thus taken away from the general public.

A commission, consisting of 10 New York and New Jersey business men, was appointed to look after it and one or more of these visit the park every day.

New Yorkers have just discovered what an ideal spot this is for camping. All along the shore are tents, in which boys and men and often women, too, are living close to nature. The debris washed down from the Palisades by the waters of the ages has formed a beach, sandy and smooth in some places, rocky and overgrown with trees in others. Upon this beach any one may pitch a tent, except in a few choice spots, where a small fee is required, but it is necessary for all to obtain a permit from the commission and also to obey the rules that are laid down by it.

The beach is reached by boat easily, but one can walk along the shore from the Fort Lee ferry, or, better still, take a trolley car to the turn at Main street, Fort Lee, and then walk about a mile along the road in a northwesterly direction and down a flight of primitive stone steps. There are also other points further north at which one can descend the cliffs. Along this stretch of beach the campers may be found. Their tents and fires are visible from the far upper west side of Manhattan, say from about One Hundred and Seventy-second street up to Spuyten Duyvil. In some tents are whole families, the father going to and coming from business in a motor boat and rowing across to and from Manhattan or walking to and from Fort Lee or Coytesville, N. J. In others are parties of young men. In one group is a band of volunteer life savers, who keep a beacon burning at night and encourage the boys of the other camps to learn to swim and dive. There are boats that may be hired by the day, week or month. There is excellent fishing for eels and crabs; the water, while not quite as salty as the sea, is more than brackish and the river in many places is so shallow that at low tide one may walk half way across to New York.

Franklin Hopkins, the broker, of No. 25 Broad street, is one of the most active men on the commission that has charge of this strip of park and has really made it his hobby. A few days ago he took the writer in a motor boat for a tour of the camps.

"Two years ago these hills were in a very, very bad condition," he said, as he pointed out their beauty. "Campers used to come over in whole families, set up great tents and take in boarders. The sanitary conditions were appalling and the conditions of morality were little better. There was really a canvas tenement district here in the woods and a vandalism that showed only too plainly that there would be few natural beauties along the shore left if these people were permitted to go their own way. To stop this it was made a law that a camping permit must be obtained and that no tent could remain up for more than four weeks out of any year. If certain rules and laws were violated the campers must go, permit or no permit.

"We have picked six men who have lived under the Palisades nearly all their lives to do the patroling and the work here."

At sight of a thin spiral of smoke rising from amid the trees the captain rowed ashore.

"That," said Mr. Hopkins, "is not permitted; fires may be built on the shore, but not on the hills or under trees. You see, we have learned that eternal vigilance is the price of parks. Often in the summer and always in the fall it is difficult to keep fire out of the hills."

The captain returned and reported two fires extinguished in the woods. They had been made by canoeists whom we presently saw coming down the rocky sides of the hill and preparing to make their fire on the beach. Mr. Hopkins, taking up the megaphone, called a pleasant "thank you" over the water and was answered by a wave of the hand and a cordial nod of the head.

"That's the thing we try to encourage," he said, pointing to a picnic party on the rocks; "those young people come over in the morning and have a bully time all day, healthy and good, and return to town with a picture other than of brick streets in their mind's eye. Suppose we run in and see them."

Going ashore, it was discovered that the men of the party were the big fellows of the traffic squad, happy, healthy, having a royal good time.

"Have you found the water, boys?" asked Mr. Hopkins.

"No, and we've needed it, too," said one of the men.

"Well, right up there about a block you will find a cold spring. And right up there," pointing to the woods, "a path that is mighty pleasant to take an after luncheon walk on, not too strenuous a path, either."

The water pipes of the Palisades are especially good; there are nine springs and wells that have been supplied with piped barrels. These are cleaned out twice each week and kept in absolutely sanitary condition. On a beautifully clean beach, set aside for canoeists, Dr. and Mrs. William McAndrews, of the Washington Irving high school, were found at their afternoon meal, happy and having a perfect rest.

In a sail of several miles up the Hudson many instructions to the boating parties were called through the megaphone. Fires were moved, tents were changed from a forbidden ground to suitable spots and water was located for the campers.

Secretary Adee's Smart Dog.

A. A. Adee, assistant secretary of state, is the proud possessor of an intelligent collie dog, reckoned the smartest canine in Washington. During the Boxer outbreak in China, while Mr. Adee was acting secretary of state, telegrams on the situation in China received at the state department at night were hurried to the Adee home.

About one o'clock one morning such a dispatch, of the utmost importance, arrived. A messenger took it post haste to Mr. Adee's residence, but after repeatedly ringing the door bell failed to obtain any response. Upstairs in bed Adee was snoring away, deep in sleep. He couldn't have heard a dynamite explosion.

But the collie heard the jangling of the bell. He waited in patience for a time, and then, as his master did not go to the door, he marched into the secretary's room, pulled the bed clothes off the sleeping official, greatly astonishing that person, and then, having aroused him, dragged him to the door. It happened to be a dispatch requiring an immediate reply, and Secretary Adee was more than ever impressed with the intelligence of his favorite dog.

AMERICAN THE FIRST TO FIND NORTH POLE

Dr. Frederick A. Cook of Brooklyn Discovers Spot, to Reach Which Many Men Have Lost Their Lives.

COOK'S MESSAGE TO WIFE.

Successful, well. Address Copenhagen.

BRUSSELS BELIEVES REPORT.

Brussels, Sept. 2.—The observatory here received the following telegram dated Lerwick, Shetland Islands:

Reached north pole April 21, 1908. Discovered land far north. Return to Copenhagen by steamer Hans Egede.

FREDERICK COOK.

The American officials at the observatory state the dispatch is surely authentic and that the north pole has been reached for the first time and by an American.

Paris.—The Paris edition of the New York Herald this morning publishes a signed statement from Dr. Frederick A. Cook, which is dated "Hans Egede, Lerwick, Wednesday," on his discovery of the north pole and his experiences in the Arctic regions.

"After a prolonged fight with famine and frost," says Dr. Cook, "we have at last succeeded in reaching the north pole. A new highway, with an interesting strip of animated nature has been explored and big game haunts located, which will delight sportsmen and extend the Esquimaux horizon.

"Land has been discovered on which rest the earth's northernmost rocks. A triangle of 30,000 square miles has been cut out of the terrestial unknown. The expedition was the outcome of a summer cruise in the Arctic seas on the schooner Bradley, which arrived at the limits of navigation in Smith Sound late in August, 1907."

Forced to Eat Dogs.

"We were now about two hundred miles from the pole and sledge loads were reduced. One dog after another went into the stomachs of the hungry survivors until the teams were considerably diminished in number, but there seemed to remain a sufficient balance for man and brute to push along into the heart of the mystery to which we had set ourselves.

"In spite of what seemed long marches, we advanced but little over a hundred miles. Much of our work was lost in circuitous twists, around troublesome pressure lines and high irregular fields. An old ice drift, too, was driving eastward with sufficient force to give some anxiety.

"Although still equal to about fifty miles daily, the extended marches and the long hours for traveling with which fortune favored us earlier were no longer possible.

Sunburns Bad as Frost.

"The night of April 7 was made notable by the swinging of the sun at midnight over the northern ice. Sunburns and frost bites now were recorded on the same day, but the double day's glitter infused an incentive into one's life of shivers.

"Our observation on April 6 placed the camp in latitude 86.36, longitude 94.2.

Cold and Wind Torture.

"The low temperature was persistent and the winds made life a torture. But cooped up in our snow houses, eating dried beef tallow and drinking hot tea, there were some animal comforts occasionally to be gained.

"There was urgent need of rapid advance. Our main mission did not permit a detour for the purpose of exploring the coast. Here were seen the last signs of solid earth; beyond, there was nothing stable to be seen.

Describes Arrival at Pole.

After telling of the experiences of himself and Esquimaux guides, Dr. Cook says:

"On April 21 we had reached 89 degrees 59 minutes 46 seconds. The pole was in sight. We covered the remaining 14 seconds and made a few final observations. I told Etukishook and Ahwelsh (the accompanying Esquimaux) that we had reached the 'great nail.' Everywhere we turned was south. With a single step we could pass from one side of the earth to the other; from midday to midnight. At last the flag floated to the breezes at the pole. It was April 21, 1908. The temperature was minus 38 centigrade, barometer 29.83, latitude 90; as for the longitude it was nothing, as it was but a word.

Crazed by Joy, But Weary.

"Although crazy with joy our spirits began to undergo a feeling of weariness. Next day, after taking all our observations, a sentiment of intense solitude penetrated us while we looked at the horizon. Was it possible that this desolate region, without a patch of earth, had aroused the ambition of so many men for so many centuries. There was no ground, only an immensity of dazzling white snow, no living being, no point to break the frightful monotony.

"On April 23 we started on our return."

Copenhagen.—That Dr. Frederick A. Cook, the American explorer, reached the north pole in his expedition which has just ended was given full credence here Wednesday, although details are lacking of his intrepid dash across the ice.

A message was received at the colonial office via Lerwick, Shetland Islands, announcing that Dr. Cook had reached the pole April 21, 1908.

Dispatch from Ship Officer.

This dispatch was sent by a Greenland official on board the Danish government steamer Hans Egede, which passed Lerwick at noon en route for Denmark, and read as follows:

"We have on board the American traveler, Dr. Cook, who reached the north pole April 21, 1908. Dr. Cook arrived in Upernavik in May of 1909 from Cape York. The Esquimaux of Cape York confirmed Dr. Cook's story of his journey."

It is understood that the Danish consul at Lerwick, where the Hans Egede remained for two hours, was officially notified of Dr. Cook's success in his attempt to reach the pole, but that he was bound to secrecy concerning the extent and nature of the explorer's discoveries.

Full Report on Saturday.

Director Ryberg, head of the Greenland administration bureau, said he did not expect to receive any further details of Dr. Cook's achievement before the arrival of the Hans Egede at this port, which probably would be Saturday afternoon. The vessel will make no stops on the voyage from Lerwick to Copenhagen.

Director Ryberg proceeded to the American legation and informed the minister, Dr. Maurice F. Egan, that Dr. Cook had reached the north pole. The announcement caused the greatest enthusiasm throughout the city and many Americans called at the legation to congratulate the minister. Among there was Alexander Kouta of New York, a warm personal friend of Dr. Cook, who said that he had believed the explorer had perished long ago. The legation was overcrowded with visitors.

The noted explorer, Commander Hovgaard, leader of various north pole expeditions, was convinced that the message that Dr. Cook had reached the pole was true, but remarked that it was strange that no mention was made in the cable as to whether there is land at the pole. It is the intention of the people of Copenhagen on Dr. Cook's arrival here, to give him a most enthusiastic reception.

Sends Message to Wife.

New York.—"Successful, well. Address Copenhagen. Fred."

Full of meaning if "successful" were interpreted to indicate that he had reached the north pole, the foregoing cable message, exasperating in its briefness, was received in New York Wednesday from Dr. Frederick A. Cook, the American explorer, whom the latest cable advices credit with having accomplished what no man ever did.

The message was sent not to any scientific society nor to any of his associates interested in his expedition from a scientific viewpoint, but to his wife, who has been counting the days and hours and praying for his safety since his departure from this city on July 4, 1907.

Wife Not at Home.

But by chance Mrs. Cook was not at her Brooklyn home, but spending the summer at Harpswell, Me., so the dispatch was received by Dr. R. T. Davidson, a personal friend of the explorer, who made its contents known, then flashed the good news on to Mrs. Cook. Brief as it was, it was the first news that she had had from her intrepid husband since March 17, 1908, when he wrote from Cape Hubbard on the edge of the polar ice sea on the northwest side of Ellesmere Land. At that time he advised his companion, Rudolph Franke, then stationed at Etah, Greenland, with supplies, to wait there until June for his return, but in the event of Dr. Cook's failure to appear to proceed to America. Franke waited as instructed, but as Dr. Cook failed to come back he caught the Peary auxiliary ship and reached New York last fall.

Cook's Whereabouts Mystery.

Since that time Dr. Cook's whereabouts has been a mystery, although members of the Arctic club in this city, viewing the situation optimistically, were inclined to think that he had reached the pole, despite his long silence. There was, of course, the ever-present probability that he had perished and the schooner Jeanie, a relief ship, is now en route to Etah, where she is due the middle of this month. The Jeanie left St. Johns N. F., about two weeks ago with the double purpose of searching for Dr. Cook and taking supplies to Commander Peary. The expedition was financed by a special committee headed by Dr. Roswell O. Stebbins of this city and composed of friends of Dr. Cook and men of science who were most keenly interested in his venture.

Sketch of the Discoverer.

Dr. Cook was born at Callcoon Depot, Sullivan county, New York, in 1865. He was married in Brooklyn in 1902 to Miss Mary Hunt. He went with the Peary expedition in 1891-92, and in 1894 organized the Miranda expedition. He was surgeon of the Belgian antarctic expedition in 1897. Next, in 1901, he went as surgeon with the Peary "Erik" auxiliary expedition. His ascent of Mount McKinley in Alaska, October 3, 1906, is the first on record.

Took New Route to Pole.

In the present expedition Dr. Cook sought to reach the pole through a new route known as Nansen strait. Dr. Cook, accompanied by John R. Bradley and several Esquimaux, left North Sydney, N. S., early in July, 1907, on the American auxiliary schooner yacht John R. Bradley, which landed the party at Smith's sound.

The party took up winter quarters about thirty miles farther north than Peary did two years previous.

In July, 1908, it was reported that the Cook party had been lost, but the rumor proved groundless when a letter was received that had been written at Comanni, Wosenthom sound, in which Cook said:

"I have this opportunity to send a letter to Upernavik by Rasmussen during this moon and I must hasten to report our progress to the present. I have a hundred dogs and as many more as I desire, with 15 of the best of the tribe assembled here for the attack over the new route across Ellesmere Land, out by way of Nansen sound and back by Kennedy channel, then using to good advantage the drift and musk oxen so abundant in Ellesmere Land. All of my equipment is ready and we hope to start for the goal late in January. With men and dogs well fed and under normal conditions, like my predecessors, I feel confident, as our equipment means perfection. When we return we will push southward at once to Cape York."

Congress Hears Gompers.

Paris.—Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, addressed the International Trades Unions congress again. He denounced international strike-breaking and declared the systematic immigration of workmen in times of depression and strikes in other countries to be one of the greatest menaces of organized labor. The conference passed a resolution against workmen offering their services at times when dock men and stevedores go out on strike.

Moody Has Rheumatism.

Haverhill, Mass.—That rheumatism and nothing else is the malady from which Associate William M. Moody of the United States supreme court is suffering was the statement made by his secretary.

Swift Plant on Fire.

Toledo, O.—The branch of the Swift Packing Company located in the midst of several packing house establishments and wholesale houses was damaged by fire.

River Rises Suddenly.

Columbus, Ga.—River men here are mystified at the sudden rise of the Chattahoochee river. Although this immediate section is undergoing a drought the river has risen 12 feet here in the last 24 hours. No heavy rains are reported.

Coin 18,279,000 Lincoln Cents.

Washington.—Only $294,790 was coined in August. Of this amount $112,000 was in silver half dollars and $182,790 in Lincoln pennies.

TO GREET DR. COOK

N. Y. ARCTIC CLUB HEADS MOVEMENT TO GIVE DISCOVERER OVATION.

WHEN HE RETURNS TO NEW YORK

Noted Explorers of World and Possibly Taft Will Be Present—Scientists Generally Credit American's Discovery of Pole.

POLE BELONGS TO U. S.

St. Louis, Missouri.—All new territory discovered by Dr. Frederick A. Cook when he reached the north pole will belong to the United States by right of discovery, according to Rev. C. M. Charropin, S. J., professor on astronomy at St. Louis university. Father Charropin said Dr. Cook's statements will be accepted by scientists, who will attempt to confirm them. According to Professor Charropin, the north pole is now the property of Uncle Sam.

New York.—Preparations already are afoot here to make the homecoming of Dr. Frederick A. Cook an event of national, and possibly international importance. If the plans outlined by members of the Arctic club are carried out the welcome home which Dr. Cook will receive in New York will be as ovation in which city, state and nation will take part, while prominent explorers—Cook's former rivals—from all parts of the globe, will gather to pay their personal tribute to his achievements.

Among the most notable of those who in all probability, will be here to greet Dr. Cook on his return will be Lieut. Shackelton, the intrepid Englishman, whose recent exploration in the Antarctic during which he succeeded in pushing nearer to the South Pole than had any previous explorer, made him a figure of world-wide prominence.

Members of the Arctic club hope that President Taft may himself be present as the nation's representative to welcome Dr. Cook.

No definite date has yet been set for Dr. Cook's arrival here. Captain Bradley S. Osbon, secretary of the Arctic club, said that the explorer is not expected for several weeks.

"He is due in Copenhagen in three days," said Captain Osbon, "and if he came straight home, would arrive in New York about the middle of September, but his friends believe that he may make several stops on the way home. For one thing, the geographers and scientists of Copenhagen will tender him a welcome. He may go to Christiana to meet Captain Amundson, the discoverer of the Northwest Passage. It is likely that he will visit Belgium, where he has been decorated for his services to science and it is scarcely conceivable that the British geographical society would allow him to pass them by on his way home without an invitation to London."

HAYNER KILLS HIMSELF.

Somerville's Assailant Saves County Expense of Trial.

New Ulm, Minnesota.—John S. Hayner, assailant of former State Senator Somerville of Sleepy Eye, cheated the ends of justice.

Making a rope from the blanket and other bedclothing in his cell at the county jail, he placed the end around his neck and attached the other to the iron fixtures of his cell door. When Deputy Sheriff Charles Brust went to the cell to bring his breakfast, Hayner's body was found hanging. It was cold and the man must have been dead several hours.

No Night Guard Kept.

The sheriff and other officers kept the company of the prisoner until midnight, and the sheriff inclined to the opinion that a guard ought to be maintained through the entire night. The county attorney did not coincide with him in this belief, with the result that Hayner was left unattended.

PATIENT SUFFERING.

Many Women Think They Are Doomed to Backache.

It is not right for women to be always ailing with backache, urinary ills, headache and other symptoms of kidney disease. There is a way to end these troubles quickly. Mrs. John H. Wright, 606 East First St., Mitchell, S. D., says: "I suffered ten years with kidney complaint and a doctor told me I would never get more than temporary relief. A dragging pain and lameness in my back almost disabled me. Dizzy spells come and went and the kidney secretions were irregular. Doan's Kidney Pills rid me of these troubles and I feel better than for years past."

Consumptives Need Not Leave Home.

Consumption can be cured, or arrested, in any section of the United States, and the percentage of cures in the east and the west is nearly the same. Any physician, therefore, who sends a person to the southwest without sufficient funds, or in an advanced or dying stage of the disease, is guilty of cruelty to his patient. Renewed efforts are being made to stop this practice, and to encourage the building of small local hospitals in every city and town in the country. Attempts are also being made in Southern California and in Texas to exclude indigent consumptives or to send them back to the east.

Pests Worried by Pests.

Since the Dutch philosopher Leeuwenhoek discovered that the pupa of the flea was sometimes preyed on by the larvae of a mite, it has been well known that various small insects have their external parasites. And a recent communication to the Comptes Rendus of the Biological society of Paris by M. Bruyant, shows that many mosquitoes carry about mites in the larval stage. Those described belong to four different genera. They probably feed on the integumentary structures of the mosquitoes.

It Was His Way.

A Kansas farmer was telling recently about the eavesdropping that goes on along the farmers' telephone line he is on. He said that whenever he talked he could hear the "click, click" of different receivers coming down.

"And you can bet," he amended, "that they never hear my receiver coming down. No, sir; I always hold on to the thing and let it down so easy that it doesn't click!"—Kansas City Journal.

Adjustable.

Aunt Anne, an old family darky, was sitting with knees crossed in the kitchen, when the young daughter of the house entered and, impressed with the hugeness of the old woman's feet, asked what size shoe she wore.

"Well, honey," replied Aunt Anne, "I kin wear eights; I ginerally wear nines; but dese yer I'se got on am twelves, an' de good Lawd knows dey hu'ts me!"—Everybody's Magazine.

SENSE ABOUT FOOD

Facts About Food Worth Knowing.

It is a serious question sometimes to know just what to eat when a person's stomach is out of order and most foods cause trouble.

Grape-Nuts food can be taken at any time with the certainty that it will digest. Actual experience of people is valuable to anyone interested in foods.

A Terre Haute woman writes: "I had suffered with indigestion for about four years, ever since an attack of typhoid fever, and at times could eat nothing but the very lightest food, and then suffer such agony with my stomach I would wish I never had to eat anything.

"I was urged to try Grape-Nuts and since using it I do not have to starve myself any more, but I can eat it at any time and feel nourished and satisfied, dyspepsia is a thing of the past, and I am now strong and well.

"My husband also had an experience with Grape-Nuts. He was very weak and sickly in the spring. Could not attend to his work. He was under the doctor's care but medicine did not seem to do him any good until he began to leave off ordinary food and use Grape-Nuts. It was positively surprising to see the change in him. He grew better right off, and naturally he had none but words of praise for Grape-Nuts.

"Our boy thinks he cannot eat a meal without Grape-Nuts, and he learns so fast at school that his teacher and other scholars comment on it. I am satisfied that it is because of the great nourishing elements in Grape-Nuts."

"There's a Reason."

It contains the phosphate of potash from wheat and barley which combine with albumen to make the gray matter to daily refill the brain and nerve centers.

It is a pity that people do not know what to feed their children. There are many mothers who give their youngsters almost any kind of food and when they become sick begin to pour the medicine down them. The real way is to stick to proper food and be healthy and get along without medicine and expense.

Plans have been prepared for the elimination of grade crossings in Minneapolis at a cost of between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000. This is a large sum of money; but the cost of safety in cities is always high, and the returns on investments of this kind warrant the outlay.

Castro is said to be losing his money, invested in Venezuelan securities. A navigation company in which he had investments steered his holdings away from him, and a cigarette company smoked him out. The dictator business yields a big profit, but has the invariable accompaniment to that advantage of big risks.

In former times debtors were put in prison. That sentiment on the subject has gone from one extreme to another is illustrated by the case of a man in Pittsburg sent to jail for dunning another for a debt. It was the man who borrowed money who used to be punished. Now it is the man who lends it, and maybe it serves the latter right.

An advanced woman theorist wants women on police forces on the ground that the criminal needs mothering. It is the opinion of practical theorists, disgusted with the sentimentality of the age, that what the criminal needs is more lathering.

Germany's wonderful progress in aerial navigation is not to be lost sight of. It is not that that country has a monopoly of brains and science, but simply that its inventors receive more substantial encouragement than other countries care to give.

AMERICAN THE FIRST TO FIND NORTH POLE

Dr. Frederick A. Cook of Brooklyn Discovers Spot, to Reach Which Many Men Have Lost Their Lives.

COOK'S MESSAGE TO WIFE.

Successful, well. Address Copenhagen.

BRUSSELS BELIEVES REPORT.

Brussels, Sept. 2.—The observatory here received the following telegram dated Lerwick, Shetland islands:

Reached north pole April 21, 1908. Discovered land far north. Return to Copenhagen by steamer Hans Egede.

FREDERICK COOK.

The American officials at the observatory state the dispatch is surely authentic and that the north pole has been reached for the first time and by an American.

HISTORY OF SEARCH FOR POLE.

Recent Notable Expeditions.

August 15, 1909—Walter Wellman, American, left island of Spitzbergen in airship, disabled after 30 miles' travel. Returns.

July 7, 1907—Commander Robert E. Peary, U. S. N., left Sydney, N S. Now in polar regions Made previous record of 203 miles from pole

September 3, 1905—Capt. Ronald Amundsen. Norwegian, makes first voyage through Northwest Passage. Reached Herschel island.

1904—Baron Toll, Russian, leads expedition through Siberia. All members perish.

1903—Erickson, Dane, reaches Saunders island. Rescued in destitute condition.

1903—Anthony Fiala, American, beats Abruzzi record. Rescued after hardships.

1900—Duke of Abruzzi compelled to turn back after beating Nansen record.

Paris.—The Paris edition of the New York Herald this morning publishes a signed statement from Dr. Frederick A. Cook, which is dated "Hans Egede, Lerwick, Wednesday," on his discovery of the north pole and his experiences in the Arctic regions.

"After a prolonged fight with famine and frost," says Dr. Cook, "we have at last succeeded in reaching the north pole. A new highway, with an interesting strip of animated nature has been explored and big game haunts located, which will delight sportsmen and extend the Esquimaux horizon.

"Land has been discovered on which rest the earth's northernmost rocks. A triangle of 30,000 square miles has been cut out of the terrestial unknown. The expedition was the outcome of a summer cruise in the Arctic seas on the schooner Bradley, which arrived at the limits of navigation in Smith Sound late in August, 1907."

Forced to Eat Dogs.

"We were now about two hundred miles from the pole and sledge loads were reduced. One dog after another went into the stomachs of the hungry survivors until the teams were considerably diminished in number, but there seemed to remain a sufficient balance for man and brute to push along into the heart of the mystery to which we had set ourselves.

"In spite of what seemed long marches, we advanced but little over a hundred miles. Much of our work was lost in circuitous twists, around troublesome pressure lines and high irregular fields. An old ice drift, too, was driving eastward with sufficient force to give some anxiety.

"Although still equal to about fifty miles daily, the extended marches and the long hours for traveling with which fortune favored us earlier were no longer possible.

Sunburns Bad as Frost.

"The night of April 7 was made notable by the swinging of the sun at midnight over the northern ice. Sunburns and frost bites now were recorded on the same day, but the double day's glitter infused an incentive into one's life of shivers.

"Our observation on April 6 placed the camp in latitude 86.36, longitude 94.3.

Cold and Wind Torture.

"The low temperature was persistent and the winds made life a torture. But cooped up in our snow houses, eating dried beef tallow and drinking hot tea, there were some animal comforts occasionally to be gained.

"There was urgent need of rapid advance. Our main mission did not permit a detour for the purpose of exploring the coast. Here were seen the last signs of solid earth; beyond, there was nothing stable to be seen.

Describes Arrival at Pole.

After telling of the experiences of himself and Esquimaux guides, Dr. Cook says:

"On April 21 we had reached 89 degrees 59 minutes 46 seconds. The pole was in sight. We covered the remaining 14 seconds and made a few final observations. I told Etukishook and Ahwelsh (the accompanying Esquimaux) that we had reached the 'great nail.' Everywhere we turned was south. With a single step we could pass from one side of the earth to the other; from midday to midnight. At last the flag floated to the breezes at the pole. It was April 21, 1908. The temperature was minus 38 centigrade, barometer 29.83, latitude 90; as for the longitude it was nothing, as it was but a word.

Crazed by Joy, But Weary.

"Although crazy with joy our spirits began to undergo a feeling of weariness. Next day, after taking all our observations, a sentiment of intense solitude penetrated us while we looked at the horizon. Was it possible that this desolate region, without a patch of earth, had aroused the ambition of so many men for so many centuries. There was no ground, only an immensity of dazzling white snow, no living being, no point to break the frightful monotony.

"On April 23 we started on our return."

Copenhagen.—That Dr. Frederick A. Cook, the American explorer, reached the north pole in his expedition which has just ended was given full credence here Wednesday, although details are lacking of his intrepid dash across the ice.

A message was received at the colonial office via Lerwick, Shetland Islands, announcing that Dr. Cook had reached the pole April 21, 1908.

Dispatch from Ship Officer.

This dispatch was sent by a Greenland official on board the Danish government steamer Hans Egede, which passed Lerwick at noon en route for Denmark, and read as follows:

"We have on board the American traveler, Dr. Cook, who reached the north pole April 21, 1908. Dr. Cook arrived in Upernavik in May of 1909 from Cape York. The Esquimaux of Cape York confirmed Dr. Cook's story of his journey."

It is understood that the Danish consul at Lerwick, where the Hans Egede remained for two hours, was officially notified of Dr. Cook's success in his attempt to reach the pole, but that he was bound to secrecy concerning the extent and nature of the explorer's discoveries.

Full Report on Saturday.

Director Ryberg, head of the Greenland administration bureau, said he did not expect to receive any further details of Dr. Cook's achievement before the arrival of the Hans Egede at this port, which probably would be Saturday afternoon. The vessel will make no stops on the voyage from Lerwick to Copenhagen.

Director Ryberg proceeded to the American legation and informed the minister, Dr. Maurice F. Egan, that Dr. Cook had reached the north pole. The announcement caused the greatest enthusiasm throughout the city and many Americans called at the legation to congratulate the minister. Among there was Alexander Kouta of New York, a warm personal friend of Dr. Cook, who said that he had believed the explorer had perished long ago. The legation was overcrowded with visitors.

The noted explorer, Commander Hovgaard, leader of various north pole expeditions, was convinced that the message that Dr. Cook had reached the pole was true, but remarked that it was strange that no mention was made in the cable as to whether there is land at the pole. It is the intention of the people of Copenhagen on Dr. Cook's arrival here, to give him a most enthusiastic reception.

Sends Message to Wife.

New York.—"Successful, well. Address Copenhagen. Fred."

Full of meaning if "successful" were interpreted to indicate that he had reached the north pole, the foregoing cable message, exasperating in its briefness, was received in New York Wednesday from Dr. Frederick A. Cook, the American explorer, whom the latest cable advices credit with having accomplished what no man ever did.

The message was sent not to any scientific society nor to any of his associates interested in his expedition from a scientific viewpoint, but to his wife, who has been counting the days and hours and praying for his safety since his departure from this city on July 4, 1907.

Wife Not at Home.

But by chance Mrs. Cook was not at her Brooklyn home, but spending the summer at Harpswell, Me., so the dispatch was received by Dr. R. T. Davidson, a personal friend of the explorer, who made its contents known, then flashed the good news on to Mrs. Cook. Brief as it was, it was the first news that she had had from her intrepid husband since March 17, 1908, when he wrote from Cape Hubbard on the edge of the polar ice sea on the northwest side of Ellesmere Land. At that time he advised his companion, Rudolph Franke, then stationed at Etah, Greenland, with supplies, to wait there until June for his return, but in the event of Dr. Cook's failure to appear to proceed to America. Franke waited as instructed, but as Dr. Cook failed to come back he caught the Peary auxiliary ship and reached New York last fall.

Cook's Whereabouts Mystery.

Since that time Dr. Cook's whereabouts has been a mystery, although members of the Arctic club in this city, viewing the situation optimistically, were inclined to think that he had reached the pole, despite his long silence. There was, of course, the ever-present probability that he had perished and the schooner Jeanie, a relief ship, is now en route to Etah, where she is due the middle of this month. The Jeanie left St. Johns N. F., about two weeks ago with the double purpose of searching for Dr. Cook and taking supplies to Commander Peary. The expedition was financed by a special committee headed by Dr. Roswell O. Stebbins of this city and composed of friends of Dr. Cook and men of science who were most keenly interested in his venture.

Sketch of the Discoverer.

Dr. Cook was born at Callcoon Depot, Sullivan county, New York, in 1865. He was married in Brooklyn in 1902 to Miss Mary Hunt. He went with the Peary expedition in 1891-92, and in 1894 organized the Miranda expedition. He was surgeon of the Belgian antarctic expedition in 1897. Next, in 1901, he went as surgeon with the Peary "Erik" auxiliary expedition. His ascent of Mount McKinley in Alaska, October 3, 1906, is the first on record.

Took New Route to Pole.

In the present expedition Dr. Cook sought to reach the pole through a new route known as Nansen strait. Dr. Cook, accompanied by John R. Bradley and several Esquimaux, left North Sydney, N. S., early in July, 1907, on the American auxiliary schooner yacht John R. Bradley, which landed the party at Smith's sound.

The party took up winter quarters about thirty miles farther north than Peary did two years previous.

In July, 1908, it was reported that the Cook party had been lost, but the rumor proved groundless when a letter was received that had been written at Comanni, Wosenthom sound, in which Cook said:

"I have this opportunity to send a letter to Upernavik by Rasmussen during this moon and I must hasten to report our progress to the present. I have a hundred dogs and as many more as I desire, with 15 of the best of the tribe assembled here for the attack over the new route across Ellesmere Land, out by way of Nansen sound and back by Kennedy channel, then using to good advantage the drift and musk oxen so abundant in Ellesmere Land. All of my equipment is ready and we hope to start for the goal late in January. With men and dogs well fed and under normal conditions, like my predecessors, I feel confident, as our equipment means perfection. When we return we will push southward at once to Cape York."

Congress Hears Gompers.

Paris.—Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, addressed the International Trades Unions congress again. He denounced international strike-breaking and declared the systematic immigration of workmen in times of depression and strikes in other countries to be one of the greatest menaces of organized labor. The conference passed a resolution against workmen offering their services at times when dock men and stevedores go out on strike.

Moody Has Rheumatism.

Haverhill, Mass.—That rheumatism and nothing else is the malady from which Associate William M. Moody of the United States supreme court is suffering was the statement made by his secretary.

Swift Plant on Fire.

Toledo, O.—The branch of the Swift Packing Company located in the midst of several packing house establishments and wholesale houses was damaged by fire.

River Rises Suddenly.

Columbus, Ga.—River men here are mystified at the sudden rise of the Chattahoochee river. Although this immediate section is undergoing a drought the river has risen 12 feet here in the last 24 hours. No heavy rains are reported.

Coin 18,279,000 Lincoln Cents.

Washington.—Only $294,790 was coined in August. Of this amount $112,000 was in silver half dollars and $182,790 in Lincoln pennies.

TO GREET DR. COOK

N. Y. ARCTIC CLUB HEADS MOVEMENT TO GIVE DISCOVERER OVATION.

WHEN HE RETURNS TO NEW YORK

Noted Explorers of World and Possibly Taft Will Be Present—Scientists Generally Credit American's Discovery of Pole.

POLE BELONGS TO U. S.

St. Louis, Missouri.—All new territory discovered by Dr. Frederick A. Cook when he reached the north pole will belong to the United States by right of discovery, according to Rev. C. M. Charropin, S. J., professor on astronomy at St. Louis university. Father Charropin said Dr. Cook's statements will be accepted by scientists, who will attempt to confirm them. According to Professor Charropin, the north pole is now the property of Uncle Sam.

New York.—Preparations already are afoot here to make the homesoming of Dr. Frederick A. Cook an event of national, and possibly international importance. If the plans outlined by members of the Arctic club are carried out the welcome home which Dr. Cook will receive in New York will be as ovation in which city, state and nation will take part, while prominent explorers—Cook's former rivals—from all parts of the globe, will gather to pay their personal tribute to his achievements.

Among the most notable of those who in all probability, will be here to greet Dr. Cook on his return will be Lieut. Shackelton, the intrepid Englishman, whose recent exploration in the Antarctic during which he succeeded in pushing nearer to the South Pole than had any previous explorer, made him a figure of world-wide prominence.

Members of the Arctic club hope that President Taft may himself be present as the nation's representative to welcome Dr. Cook.

No definite date has yet been set for Dr. Cook's arrival here. Captain Bradley S. Osbon, secretary of the Arctic club, said that the explorer is not expected for several weeks.

"He is due in Copenhagen in three days," said Captain Osbon, "and if he came straight home, would arrive in New York about the middle of September, but his friends believe that he may make several stops on the way home. For one thing, the geographers and scientists of Copenhagen will tender him a welcome. He may go to Christiana to meet Captain Amundson, the discoverer of the Northwest Passage. It is likely that he will visit Belgium, where he has been decorated for his services to science and it is scarcely conceivable that the British geographical society would allow him to pass them by on his way home without an invitation to London."

HAYNER KILLS HIMSELF.

Somerville's Assailant Saves County Expense of Trial.

New Ulm, Minnesota.—John S. Hayner, assailant of former State Senator Somerville of Sleepy Eye, cheated the ends of justice.

Making a rope from the blanket and other bedclothing in his cell at the county jail, he placed the end around his neck and attached the other to the iron fixtures of his cell door. When Deputy Sheriff Charles Brust went to the cell to bring his breakfast, Hayner's body was found hanging. It was cold and the man must have been dead several hours.

No Night Guard Kept.

The sheriff and other officers kept the company of the prisoner until midnight, and the sheriff inclined to the opinion that a guard ought to be maintained through the entire night. The county attorney did not coincide with him in this belief, with the result that Hayner was left unattended.

PATIENT SUFFERING.

Many Women Think They Are Doomed to Backache.

It is not right for women to be always ailing with backache, urinary ills, headache and other symptoms of kidney disease. There is a way to end these troubles quickly. Mrs. John H. Wright, 606 East First St., Mitchell, S. D., says: "I suffered ten years with kidney complaint and a doctor told me I would never get more than temporary relief. A dragging pain and lameness in my back almost disabled me. Dizzy spells come and went and the kidney secretions were irregular. Doan's Kidney Pills rid me of these troubles and I feel better than for years past."

Consumptives Need Not Leave Home.

Consumption can be cured, or arrested, in any section of the United States, and the percentage of cures in the east and the west is nearly the same. Any physician, therefore, who sends a person to the southwest without sufficient funds, or in an advanced or dying stage of the disease, is guilty of cruelty to his patient. Renewed efforts are being made to stop this practice, and to encourage the building of small local hospitals in every city and town in the country. Attempts are also being made in Southern California and in Texas to exclude indigent consumptives or to send them back to the east.

Pests Worried by Pests.

Since the Dutch philosopher Leeuwenhoek discovered that the pupa of the flea was sometimes preyed on by the larvae of a mite, it has been well known that various small insects have their external parasites. And a recent communication to the Comptes Rendus of the Biological society of Paris by M. Bruyant, shows that many mosquitoes carry about mites in the larval stage. Those described belong to four different genera. They probably feed on the integumentary structures of the mosquitoes.

It Was His Way.

A Kansas farmer was telling recently about the eavesdropping that goes on along the farmers' telephone line he is on. He said that whenever he talked he could hear the "click, click" of different receivers coming down.

"And you can bet," he amended, "that they never hear my receiver coming down. No, sir; I always hold on to the thing and let it down so easy that it doesn't click!"—Kansas City Journal.

Adjustable.

Aunt Anne, an old family darky, was sitting with knees crossed in the kitchen, when the young daughter of the house entered and, impressed with the hugeness of the old woman's feet, asked what size shoe she wore.

"Well, honey," replied Aunt Anne, "I kin wear eights; I ginerally wear nines; but dese yer I'se got on am twelves, an' de good Lawd knows dey hu'ts me!"—Everybody's Magazine.

Wasn't Settled.

Caller—Why is your servant going about the house with her hat on?

Mistress—She only came this morning and hasn't yet made up her mind whether she will stay or not.—Harper's Weekly.

SENSE ABOUT FOOD

Facts About Food Worth Knowing.

It is a serious question sometimes to know just what to eat when a person's stomach is out of order and most foods cause trouble.

Grape-Nuts food can be taken at any time with the certainty that it will digest. Actual experience of people is valuable to anyone interested in foods.

A Terre Haute woman writes: "I had suffered with indigestion for about four years, ever since an attack of typhoid fever, and at times could eat nothing but the very lightest food, and then suffer such agony with my stomach I would wish I never had to eat anything.

"I was urged to try Grape-Nuts and since using it I do not have to starve myself any more, but I can eat it at any time and feel nourished and satisfied, dyspepsia is a thing of the past, and I am now strong and well.

"My husband also had an experience with Grape-Nuts. He was very weak and sickly in the spring. Could not attend to his work. He was under the doctor's care but medicine did not seem to do him any good until he began to leave off ordinary food and use Grape-Nuts. It was positively surprising to see the change in him. He grew better right off, and naturally he had none but words of praise for Grape-Nuts.

"Our boy thinks he cannot eat a meal without Grape-Nuts, and he learns so fast at school that his teacher and other scholars comment on it. I am satisfied that it is because of the great nourishing elements in Grape-Nuts."

"There's a Reason."

It contains the phosphate of potash from wheat and barley which combine with albumen to make the gray matter to daily refill the brain and nerve centers.

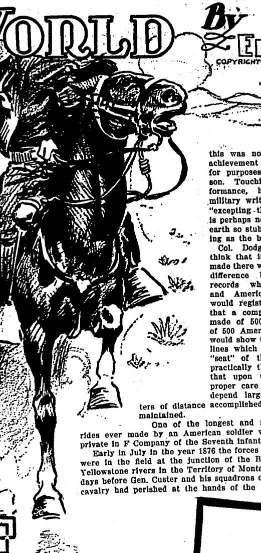
It is a pity that people do not know what to feed their children. There are many mothers who give their youngsters almost any kind of food and when they become sick begin to pour the medicine down them. The real way is to stick to proper food and be healthy and get along without medicine and expense.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

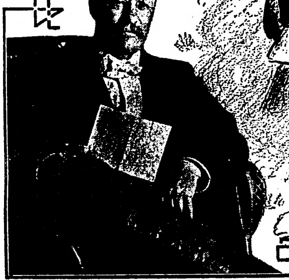
OUR CAVALRYMEN LEAD THE WORLD

By EDWARD B. CLARK

COPYRIGHT 1909. BY W.A.PATTERSON



WASHINGTON—The riding test for army officers which was ordered by Theodore Roosevelt has not been discontinued under the Taft administration. From some of the comments that have been made on these "long, hard rides," it would appear that the public believes that the army officers never were given an opportunity prior to the Roosevelt administration to show what they could do in the way of covering long distances in quick time. No army in the world, perhaps, has had the same opportunities to test the endurance of cavalry horses as has the small regular force of the United States.



EX-PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT

The long, level stretches of the plains and the activity of the marauding Indian mounted on his tireless broncho have been the conditions which gave to Uncle Sam's cavalrymen his matchless chances for long forced mounted marches. Col. Theodore Ayrault Dodge, U. S. A., collected the official records of long distance cavalry rides, and has made them public in a book so that they may be compared with the performances of the soldier horsemen of other nations. Col. Dodge declares specifically that he has rejected all "hearsay rides, of which there is no end," and has accepted only those proved by official reports. Col. Dodge says that Capt. S. F. Fountain, United States cavalry, in the year 1891, with a detachment of his troop, rode 84 miles in eight hours. This record is vouched for, and it is better than that once made by the Natal Mounted Rifles by about four hours, the distance being within one mile of that made in South Africa. For actual speed this forced march stands perhaps at the head of the American army record, though other rides have been more remarkable.

THE PYRAMID DRILL AT FORT MYER

In the year 1879, when the Utes succeeded in getting some United States troops into what was afterward known as Thornburg's "rat hole," several mounted couriers succeeded in slipping through the circling line of savages. All of them reached Merritt's column, 170 miles distant, in less than 24 hours. The exact time was not taken, for, as Col. Dodge puts it, "rescue was of more importance than records."

It must be understood, of course, that all these American rides were made without changing horses. The steed at the start was the steed at the finish. The best rider, according to cavalry experts, is not the man who takes a five-barred gate or who can ride standing, but the man who by instinct feels the condition of his horse, and, though getting the most out of the animal, knows best how to conserve his strength.

Gen. Lawton in the year 1876, rode from Red Cloud agency, Nebraska, to Sidney in the same state, a distance of 125 miles, in 26 hours. He was carrying important dispatches for Gen. Crook, and though the road was bad his mount was in good condition when Lawton, looking five years older than he did the day before, handed over his bundle of papers to the black-bearded general.

Gen. Merritt has a forced march record that has no American parallel when the conditions of his journey are considered. He was ordered in the fall of 1879 to the relief of Payne's command, which was surrounded by hostile Indians. Merritt's command consisted of four troops of cavalry, but at the last moment he was ordered to add to his force a battalion of infantry. The "dough boys" were loaded into army wagons drawn by mules, and with the cavalry at the flanks the relief column started. The distance to be traversed was 170 miles, and it was made, notwithstanding the handicap of the wagons and trails that were muddy and sandy by turns, in just 66 hours. At the end of the march the troopers went into the fight, and in the entire command not one horse showed a lame leg or a saddle sore.

Four troopers of the Fourth cavalry who had volunteered for the particular service, were sent in the summer of 1870 from Fort Harney to Fort Warner with dispatches, and were told to make the best time possible without killing their horses. The men were on their mettle. They made the distance, 140 miles 20 miles of the way being through loose sand, in 22 hours, the actual marching time being 18 hours and 30 minutes. At Fort Warner they rested one day, and returned to Harney on the same horses at the uniform rate of 60 miles a day. Capt. Edward G. Fechet started at midnight for the relief of the Indian scouts who had been sent out to arrest Sitting Bull, and, who, after killing that chief, were beleaguered in a small hut by his followers. Fechet took an ambulance wagon and a Hotchkiss gun with him. The gun carriage broke down and he was compelled to fasten the trail of the piece to the tailboard of the ambulance and thus drag it along. Notwithstanding this handicap he made the first 45 miles in less than seven hours. He fought and drove off the young Sioux bucks, then scouted the country for ten miles, gave his troopers some breakfast and returned to the fort. Fourteen hours were consumed in covering 90 miles of ground.

The cavalry horses of the American army have undergone these endurance and speed tests carrying weights of more than 200 pounds and without any training other than that received in the ordinary course of frontier scouting and daily drill evolutions. The greatest military ride record, as it appears on paper, is that of the Austrian Count Stahrenberg, who rode one horse 350 miles in 71 hours. The animal, however, carried only the count's weight, 128 pounds; it had been specially trained for months to undergo the endurance test, and during the whole time of the ride it was kept up on stimulants. The horse died within 24 hours after the completion of its task. Col. Dodge, in his summary of remarkable rides, tells of a professional express rider, whom he personally knew, who for many months carried mail from El Paso to Chihuahau through a hostile Apache country. This man on one horse, a broncho, regularly made 300 miles in 60 hours, and then resting his mount for four days, made the return trip. As this was not a cavalry achievement it is not used for purposes of comparison. Touching the performance, however, the military writer says, that "excepting the ass, there is perhaps no creature on earth so stubbornly enduring as the broncho."

Col. Dodge does not think that if tests were made there would be much difference between the records which English and American soldiers would register. He says that a composite picture made of 500 British and of 500 American troopers would show that the three lines which establish the "seat" of the rider are practically the same, and that upon this and the proper care of the horse depend largely the matters of distance accomplished and speed maintained.

One of the longest and most perilous rides ever made by an American soldier was that of a private in F Company of the Seventh infantry.

Early in July in the year 1876 the forces of Gen. Terry were in the field at the junction of the Big Horn and Yellowstone rivers in the Territory of Montana. Only ten days before Gen. Custer and his squadrons of the Seventh cavalry had perished at the hands of the Sioux under Sitting Bull. A detachment of troops pushing forward in search of the "yellow-haired white chief" had found the mutilated bodies of the slain, with the little heaps of empty cartridges at their sides, telling mutely the story of a desperately heroic defense. The detachment had joined Terry and the story of the Custer massacre was told.

TRAINING CAVALRY HORSES TO LIE DOWN AT COMMAND

The whole country to the northeast and the south was swarming with the Sioux not yet sated with slaughter. To the southeast 200 miles away, near the headquarters of the Powder river, in the Territory of Wyoming, lay the command of Gen. Crook. It was imperatively necessary that the situation of affairs just south of the Yellowstone should be made known to the general commanding the southeastern forces.

Between Terry and Crook was an unbroken wilderness inhabited only by wild animals and wilder men. With Terry's column were six tried scouts and plainsmen. They knew every inch of the country, every trail, every hiding place in the mountain spurs and every patch of timber on the plains. To these men were intrusted the dispatches of the commanding officer, with instructions to carry them southeastward to the camp of Crook. The scouts started on their journey. Inside of eight hours all of them were back and the report to Terry was that no man could attempt the journey to Powder river and live.

In F Company of the Seventh infantry was a private named James Bell. He had acquired a knowledge of the country in the campaigns in which he had served against the Sioux. His knowledge, however, was but a tithe of that held by the plainsmen, and his acquaintance with the ways of the Indians was as nothing to theirs, yet Private James Bell went to Gen. Terry's headquarters and volunteered to carry the dispatches through the heart of the hostile country and to deliver them to Gen. Crook, or else, if it must be, to forfeit his life.

Terry asked the man if he knew fully the danger of the undertaking. Bell's answer was: "The scouts came back." In the four words he expressed the whole thing, for the scouts never before had turned in their tracks.

Private Bell took his rations, a full supply of ammunition, his rifle and his revolver, and mounting a horse he started southeast to the wilderness to look death in the face.

His course took him close to the scene of the Custer massacre, where less than two weeks before 5,000 Sioux had gathered for the killing. He traveled only at night, and all day long he lay hidden in the timber or in the gulches of the foothills.

Two hours after sunset on the second night he left his day's hiding place and set his course southward along a range of low hills. He turned aside to skirt a bit of timber, and as he came to the edge of the trees his mount showed symptoms of uneasiness.

Bell dropped from his horse and stole forward. He saw not more than 100 yards ahead of him a war party of fully 50 Indians making preparations to camp for the night. They had come apparently from a direction opposite to that taken by the courier, for he had not crossed their trail. He stole back, remounted and made a detour, passing the Indian encampment on the right and without awakening their suspicions.

Notwithstanding the rough nature of the country through which he was passing and the necessity of sparing his horse, Bell made 40 miles in that second night's ride. When it was within two hours of sunrise he struck a small creek with a bottom of sand and pebbles. He knew that if the war party which he had passed the night before should find his trail that it would be followed, and that the reds would not spare their ponies in the attempt to overtake the wilderness messenger.

For two miles Bell led his horse down the bed of the creek, thus completely obliterating his trail, but he knew that the hoof marks showing where he had taken to the water were telltale witnesses of his subterfuge.

He reached a part of the creek where the banks were heavily overgrown with bushes. He pushed the green growth aside from right to left and sent his horse through. Then he covered the marks of the passage as well as he could, and finally crawled up on the bank himself, covering his own trail.

He found a hiding place for the day in a ravine about 300 yards from the bank of the creek, and after feeding his horse, and eating his own breakfast he put all thought of sleep aside, and climbing to a hilltop he watched the vicinity of the creek.

Bell believed that the reds could not have found his trail, if they had found it at all, until near sunrise and he knew that if they followed him it would take them the better part of the day to reach his hiding place and that by that time his horse would be fresh and their horses jaded.

At three o'clock in the afternoon he saw something that set his heart beating, brave man though he was. The war party was breaking through the underbrush on the bank of the creek and Bell knew that his trail had been followed and that he had but a moment's time to save his life and his message.

He ran down the slope, vaulted on to his horse and shot out into the open around the base of the hill.

The reds chased the courier for five miles, firing now and again, but he distanced them and after two more nights of peril he gave Terry's message into the hands of Crook.

James Bell was given a medal of honor, and for five years he was a messenger in the headquarters of the department of the lakes in Chicago. Few people realized that the quiet unassuming "errand man" in the Pullman building was the courier who had taken on himself a mission that tried plainsmen had not dared to attempt to fulfill.

The Home.

Home and home life must never become commonplace. The little surprises, the remembrances of the birthday, the unexpected treat, the pleasure earned for one by the sacrifice of another—all these belong under our head of spiritual exercises. Nor is there any scene of our life which so demands such exercise as this familiar scene of home, which has to be reset every day.—Edward Everett Hale.

LOW COLONIST FARES TO THE WEST AND NORTHWEST.

Union Pacific Passenger Department announces that Colonist Fares will be in effect from Sept. 15 to Oct. 15, 1909, to all points in the West and Northwest.

This year the West looks more promising than ever. Now is the time to secure land at low prices, and, at the same time, to visit the many interesting points in the West and Northwest, at which liberal stopover arrangements may be made.

A better estimate of raw lands can be made now than formerly, because these lands are in proximity to new farms that are producing wonderful crops.

Care in Preparing Food.

In recent years scientists have proved that the value of food is measured largely by its purity; the result is the most stringent pure food laws that have ever been known.

One food that has stood out prominently as a perfectly clean and pure food and which was as pure before the enactment of these laws as it could possibly be is Quaker Oats; conceded by the experts to be the ideal food for making strength of muscle and brain. The best and cheapest of all foods. The Quaker Oats Company is the only manufacturer of oatmeal that has satisfactorily solved the problem of removing the husks and black specks which are so annoying when other brands are eaten. If you are convenient to the store buy the regular size packages; if not near the store, buy the large size family packages.

AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her.

Willimantic, Conn.—"For five years I suffered untold agony from female troubles, causing backache, irregularities, dizziness and nervous prostration. It was impossible for me to walk upstairs without stopping on the way. I tried three different doctors and each told me something different. I received no benefit from any of them, but seemed to suffer more. The last doctor said nothing would restore my health. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to see what it would do, and I am restored to my natural health."—Mrs. ETTA DONOVAN, Box 299, Willimantic, Conn.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills, and suffering women owe it to themselves to at least give this medicine a trial. Proof is abundant that it has cured thousands of others, and why should it not cure you?

That great Minnesota state fair is one of the greates advertisements that this state ever had.

Owing to the editor being down to the state fair part of this week our editorials are noted for their absence in this issue.

Polk county had one of the finest exhibits at the state fair this week of any county in the state. The exhibit was in charge of Toomy Johnson, of Crookston and will be heard from when the plums are distributed.

The grand stand at the Minnesota state fair was entirely to small to accomidate the attendance last Monday, and right there is where we noted a mistake in the management People that go to the fair are entitled to courtesy, but instead of that the farmers of this state were met at that grand stand by a gang of "fresh" city kids, clothed with authority to tell the old "mossbacks," where they got off at. Such kind of treatement is likely to hurt the attendance in future years, and should be given prompt attention, and a course of fire treatement by the board of management.

How Attraction Acts.

Attraction acts very curiously. Thus if there were a man in the moon and if he were like the men on the earth he would be able to leap over a three storied house with as much ease as an ordinary jumper springs over a three foot fence in consequence of the forces of attraction being much less at the moon's surface than at the earth's. An elephant there would be as light footed as the deer here. A boy throwing stones might easily land them in an adjoining county. On the other hand, the reverse of all this would happen in Jupiter or Saturn. They being so much greater than the earth, their attraction would so impede locomotion that a man would scarcely be able to crawl, and large animals would be crushed by their own weight.

In the Land of Windmills.

The Dutch when they invite you, and they are not a guest seeking race, are extremely hospitable and make you at once welcome. Sometimes, however, when it comes to dinner, their active hospitality demands an energetic recognition. The table is laid with piles of plates before each chair. On your first visit the spoons and forks are heavy silver, the knives of the finest steel and ivory. You never, however, eat with them again. When you have been shown that a family possesses them that ends it. You eat thereafter from everyday ware.

"What would the silver be like for our descendants if we used it often?" an old lady asked me. "What would we have if our ancestors had been careless?"—Eva Madden in Harper's Bazar.

A Curiosity In Boundaries.

About 600 yards from the station at Herseaux, at the crossroads from Oudenarde to Roubaix, on the way from Tournai to Mouseron, there is a directing post which from a topographical point of view is a curiosity. This post marks the separation between the two countries, France and Belgium; three provinces or departments, Le Nord, western Flanders and Hainault; three bishoprics, Cambrai, Burges and Tournai. Three races dwell around it, speaking three languages, French, Flemish and Wallon. It is also in three communes, Wattrelos, Herseaux and Estaimpius.—London Globe.

WATERLESS BATHING.

A Good Rub and an Air Bath a Substitute For the Tub.

The conditions and conventions of our civilization demand frequent bathing. It is popularly supposed that this frequent bathing is essential to health.

"This is quite untrue," says the Medical Journal. "We have seen fine and vigorous men among the habitants of Canada who had never taken a full bath in their lives. Were the truth known, many thousands of our fellow citizens probably know nothing of the alleged benefits of the tub, though maintaining excellent average health.

"Such people do not present the fresh and pleasing appearance of the frequent bather, however long lives they may be. Is not, however, much of the benefit attributed to the water in reality due to the complete exposure of the skin to the air?

"The respiratory function of the skin is of high importance, and, although water may be dispensed with, closing the pores to air would result in speedy asphyxiation. The historic instance of the boy who impersonated John the Baptist in a mediaeval procession and whose body was covered with gold leaf with rapidly fatal results is proof.

"The ice cold bath is a superstition; it is a pastime for the abnormally vigorous, not desirable for the average civilized man. A bath not too cold is really an agreeable stimulant as well as being a luxury. The feeling of well being after a bath can hardly be obtained in any other way, and the rapid multiplication of tubs in hotels and private residences, soon to approach one to the individual, shows how they are appreciated.

"Unhappy persons, however, whose travels in the provinces or into the desert may temporarily deprive them of sufficient water for bathing may find a substitute that will at least afford a part of their accustomed enjoyment. The body may be energetically rubbed with a brush or coarse Turkish towel and afterward exposed to the air for fifteen minutes or so. The accustomed feeling of vigor will follow and the process will be found by the uninitiated to be astonishingly cleansing."

A STRANGE TRIBE.

The Touaregs, to Whom Timbuktu Owes Its Origin.

A recent explorer, journeying from Tripoli across the great desert of Sahara, gives account of much opposition to his progress offered by the various wandering tribes. Much of the most serious trouble was caused by the Touaregs, a strange band of people, supposed by some to have descended from the crusaders. These dwellers of the desert are distinguished by the wearing of veils, a custom which has caused much discussion. Says Felix Dubois in "Timbuktu the Mysterious:"

As you travel an atmosphere of secrecy hovers over the country, and you remember that these mysterious Touaregs are still momentarily its oppressors and masters.

These people keep their eyes from the excessive glow of the desert by two veils, one rolled round the temples and falling down in front, the other reaching from the nostrils to the edge of the clothing, covering the lower part of the face. Savants seek all manner of farfetched origins to explain this custom. Hygiene is obviously the only motive. This is proved by their own statements and by the sobriquet, "mouths for flies," which they give to all who do not wear the veils.

These veils are never removed, even at mealtimes. They are so much a part of their wearers that any one deprived of such covering is unrecognized by his friends and relatives. If a number of the tribe should be killed in battle, no one could identify them if they had not on their veils.

Theft is the Touareg's natural form of industry. "This word," says a native proverb, "is like water fallen upon sand, never to be found again." The Sudanese term them as "thieves, hyenas and abandoned of God." Yet to this strange tribe Timbuktu owes its origin.

The Force of Habit.

One of the campers had done something peculiarly idiotic, and the dean said, "Dick reminds me of Thomas' colt."

"What about Thomas' colt?" asked Dick cheerfully.

"Why," the dean responded readily, "where I lived in Maine when I was a boy an old man named Thomas raised horses. He once put out to pasture a colt which had been fed from its birth in a box stall and watered at the trough in the yard.

"The pasture lay across a small river, and in the middle of the day the colt swam the stream to go up to the barnyard for a drink of water."

English as Spoken In London.

I must confess in passing that after a lifetime spent upon English I had nearly as much difficulty with that language "as she is spoke" upon the streets of London by the common people as I had with French and German in Paris and Berlin. The most popular sensational journal of London is the Daily Mail. They call it the Dily Mile. Many other words are equally unrecognizable.—London Letter to Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

A Never Failing Supply.

The fond husband was seeing his wife off with the children for their vacation in the country. As she got into the train he said, "But, my dear, won't you take some fiction to read?"

"Oh, no!" she responded sweetly. "I shall depend upon your letters from home."—London Tatler.

TIME TO LAUGH.

Some Vaudeville Jokelets Which Age Cannot Wither.

Vaudeville is known as the "laugh trust," but not for the reason one might think. It gets the phrase because there are a certain definite number of devices in its category of acts that control the laughs of its audiences. The same old things are always good for a laugh in vaudeville. According to the Bohemian Magazine, a new device, a new bit of "business," a new joke, are all regarded as dangerous by the performers. The following table details some of the times at which a vaudeville audience regularly laughs:

When a comedian walks with a mincing step and speaks in a falsetto voice.

When a German comedian opens his coat and discloses a green waistcoat.

When a comedy acrobat falls down repeatedly.

When a performer asks the orchestra leader if he is a married man.

When a black face comedian says something about chicken.

When a performer starts to rise from a chair and the drummer pulls a resined piece of cord so that the performer thinks his clothes have ripped.

When the drummer suddenly beats the drum during a comedian's song and the latter stops and looks in his direction.

When a tramp comedian turns around and discloses a purple patch or several pearl buttons or a target sewed on the seat of his trousers.

When the funny member of the troupe of instrumentalists interrupts the progress of a melody by sounding a discordant note on his trombone.

When a clown of a team of acrobats poises himself to do a presumably difficult feat and suddenly changes his mind and walks away without doing it.—New York Sun.

The Foiler Foiled.

Recently one young man bet another that he could not break an egg placed on the floor of their room by hitting it with a barrel. The second young man promptly took the bet.

Thereupon the first young man carefully placed an egg in a corner of the room, just where the walls made a right angle, so that it was impossible for the other to hit the egg with an ordinary barrel.

Then the first young man proceeded to gloat.

But the other suddenly produced a revolver and broke the egg by tapping it smartly with the barrel of the weapon. Then he demanded the money.

There was quite a dispute naturally. Finally the two agreed to submit the question to the editor of a sporting paper. In due time the answer came. The sporting authority decided that the second young man was the winner of the bet, since the other had not specified in any way what kind of barrel should be used for the destruction of the egg.—New York Times.

Origin of the Term "Gringo."

To the average Mexican all Americans are "gringos." They are too polite to call you a gringo to your face, but among themselves it is the term generally used in referring to Americans. It is a term of disrespect, just as "greaser" when applied to a Mexican is an opprobrious term. "Gringo" had its origin during our war with Mexico in 1847. Bobby Burns' song, with the chorus,

Green grow the rashes, O!
Green grow the rashes, O!
The sweetest hours that e'er I spend
Are spent among the lasses, O!

was very popular then, and our soldiers in Mexico sang it on the march and on nearly every occasion. "Green grow" sounded like "gringo" to the Mexicans unacquainted with English, and they quickly learned to speak of the American soldiers as "gringos," and thenceforth this appellation has been attached to all Americans.—Outing Magazine.

Three Kinds of Cigars.

What is a Havana cigar? George Augustus Sala, who had studied Cuban cigarmaking on the spot, once set forth that three kinds of cigars come from Havana itself—first, genuine Havanas, made of tobacco grown, cured and rolled in the island of Cuba; second, cigars composed inside of United States or European tobacco imported into Cuba, with an outside wrapper of Havana leaf; third, cigars brought ready made from Europe, mostly from Bremen and Switzerland, and re-exported from Havana to Europe, where they pay duty and are sold to the unwary as "Havanas."

A SOUTH SEA ROMANCE.

The Mutiny Long Ago on the Bounty, a British Man-of-war.

Who has not heard of the mutiny of the Bounty? The romance of it still lingers from one end of the Pacific to the other. The descendants of the mutineers of the British man-of-war and their dusky wives are living and bear English names made famous, or infamous, more than a century ago.

The British man-of-war had gone to Tahiti. The commander, Blythe, was harsh and cruel to his men. The women of Tahiti loved the fair skinned sailors and sought to hide them from Blythe, their oppressor, but they were captured, and the ship sailed away, but only to return. When it returned, in command was Fletcher Christian, midshipman, and a score of mutineers. The brute Blythe and his loyal companions had been set adrift in an open boat. Marvelous to relate, after traversing thousands of miles of open ocean they reached the Australian coast. Here they found a haven of refuge at a British outpost. For twenty years all trace of Fletcher Christian and his companions was lost, although searching expedition after expedition was sent to Tahiti by the British government.

Each of the mutineers save the remorseful Fletcher Christian, took unto himself a wife. As it meant death to their husbands to live in Tahiti, they helped the men they loved to man the boat that bore them away to seek some desert island. After sailing for many days in the extreme southern tropical sea the rock of Pitcairn arose before them.

Twenty years later a British merchantman sighted by chance the lone rock in the southern Pacific and sent a boat ashore. To the astonishment of the crew, dusky men and women ran down to the beach to welcome them in their own tongue and claimed to be "English." Only one old man among them, Adams, of pure British blood still survived. He was found, Bible in hand, teaching in the little Sunday school which he had built and where he had educated the children of the colony and taught them the tenets of the Christian faith.

When the news reached England a British man-of-war was sent for the last of the mutineers of the Bounty. Aboard was a king's pardon for Adams, so that, after all, he died a British subject, surrounded by his dusky children and grandchildren. The colony was then removed from the faraway southern isle to Tahiti, but homesickness overcame its members, and they returned to the verdant rock.—New Idea Magazine.

DO YOU OWN A HORSE?

Electric Light Plants Are Like Horses In Some Respects.

The subject of depreciation is well worthy of the careful consideration of those who are prone to ignore that item in estimating the cost of lights supplied by municipal plants. But as more people own horses than lighting plants it may be helpful to consider depreciation as applied to horses.

You pay $250 for a five-year-old horse. That's original cost. If you borrow the money you must pay interest on it. If you don't borrow it you lose the interest you would get if you didn't buy the horse. Either way it's interest. You feed the horse, and perhaps hire a man to take care of him. That's operating expenses. You get him shod occasionally and call in the veterinarian when he is sick. That's renewals and repairs. After a few years, in spite of the best of care, the horse is no longer capable of doing the required work and is sold for $50, a loss of $200 as compared with the original cost. That's depreciation. If you haven't laid that by year by year out of the horse's earnings, you've got to borrow it to buy a new horse, and you may not find it easy to do so if you haven't repaid the original loan. That's what happens to municipal plants that don't provide an adequate depreciation fund
